And all the girls and boys looked at Johnny

P.I.L./ Flesh for Lulu
Fine Arts Center
Saturday, Oct.14

Public Image Ltd., one of the most innovative/ridiculous bands of the eighties, came to UMass Saturday night to make some money, incite a little audience frenzy, and be entertained.

The evening was started up by Flesh For Lulu, a band that just about held their own as an opening act. They played loud and hard and were good at what they did, but only a few rows made the move from ass to feet in appreciation. An okay, generic leather and loud love song band who sound suspiciously better (much better) on tape than they do live. The lead singer had cute blue D.M.'s and the guitars were beautiful, their handling able. But we were there for Johnny , for some strange reason, and it showed.

A low hiss of sound seeped out, the Flesh for Lulu banner lifted, and some Day-Glo obnoxiousness that screamed PIL and those universal slogans was revealed . A platform seperated the drums and keyboards from the guitarist and bassist. Deja-vu visions of Stop Making Sense whirled through the air.

And then the man came out. The audience, a hodge podge of boys and girls born ten years too late, 2,000 miles too far (to grossly generalise) was in a frenzy, stomping on seats, clapping and screaming for something to jerk their bodies to 'in spasmodic delight. Or maybe something to excuse it.

Make no mistake, PIL is a dance band, one that almost demands that you move. They are also a mundane band. That isn't to say that the show sucked outright, it just didn't change much from minute to minute, hour to hour. The show was comprised mostly of newer material, such as Happy and Dissapointed, causing much wailing from the older PILophiles. This is Not a Love Song reduced some of the whining and the forever brilliant Rise from the band's often amazing Album album satiated many appetites, but the focus seemed to be on cramming as much of the new album down our throats as possible. Shame.

Slurping down mineral water and parading around in some baggy green and yellow attire John Lydon was the consummate sour puss life of any party. Ten years after the fact, he's become more a product of his own wishes than another Maclaren puppet. His band was solid and professional, like any near star's back up band should be, and Lydon's singing was a sort of screeching wail, almost mocking singing itself.

"Get off yer fat arses and dance you lazy bastards," he yelled, wiggling his own massive posterior in a bad David Byrne imitation that continued throughout the night. At another point, singing We Want Your Body we were treated to a glimpse of the only surviving Pistol's (as far as music's concerned) baby fat torso causing many squeals. Lights screamed at the audience at various moments and that was about it really.

"I'm making fun of dance music and getting paid for it," was something Johnny didn't say. If you don't get the joke then...well maybe it's not so funny. The sweaty smiling oohs and wows at the end would say that's irrelevent. And they'd be as right as anyone.

Inspiration brought from Free St. Theater

Students who head to the Fine Arts Center tonight or tomorrow night to see the musical Project! should be prepared for the unusual. Far from being a national musical, the production contains a mixture of rap, rock, television monitors and social commentary.

Brought to UMass by Chicago's Free Street Theater, Project! attempts to reach beyond the negative headlines about Chicago's Cabrini-Green public housing complex, and show the spirit and determination that sustain the 13,500 residents who call it home.

The Project! cast includes many actual residents, aged nine to 39, of Cabrini-Green. In addition, 22 other residents appear in the production via videotape, a bold new development in the world of theater.

The musical's song titles suggest the issues that concern one of this country's poorest communities.

Project! is only one of over 40 original musicals produced by Free Street Theater. Founded 20 years ago by Patrick Henry, Free Street was formed to inspire a community arts program and council under local leadership, and to bring the theater to new audiences. Since its conception, Free Street has performed in 36 states, six countries, and two continents.

Project! is being presented in cooperation with the University's New World Theater. Tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center box office for $18, $16 and $14 for the general public. Tickets are half price for all Five College students.

Son Seals lights up and blows ten below

Smoke filled the room as the Son Seals Blues Band began to play Thursday night at Pearl Street's Ten Below club. Feet started tapping, as the four band members started playing their electric blues.

Rhythm guitar and saxophone solos dominated the first two songs. Then, a black man of about 50, with a pot belly and beard, casually strolled onto the stage. He was wearing brown polyester bell-bottoms and a big silver belt buckle, a brown leather vest, and a large gold ring on each hand. He picked up an electric guitar, and began tuning it up with his back to the audience. The drummer leaned over to his microphone and began to speak. "Ladies and gentlemen, may I present to you the man from the windy city, Mr. Son Seals."

The crowd erupted into applause as Son Seals turned to the audience and started to play. For three hours, he kicked out some rocking Chicago blues, stopping occasionally to wipe the sweat from his brow. With his rough, raw voice, he belted out such classics as "Everyday I Get the Blues," and "I'll Play the Blues for You." He electrified the audience with sweet, wailing guitar solos, while the band blasted away behind him.

The atmosphere was mellow, and the crowd danced and socialized. The show ended with an unforgettable encore, and one of the most unforgettable guitar solos I've ever heard. The legendary Son Seals put on one hell of a show for the wildly appreciative audience at Ten Below. Long live the blues.

Spunk twists with a world beat giving the blues a little heat

Playing, as lead vocalist Derek Jordan said,"a world beat type of music — a little of this and a little of that", Spunk put on a good show at Twister's on Saturday night.

REVIEW

The four-piece band made-up mostly of Vermonters with the exception of the drummer, Doug Renriat of Northampton, played all original music composed by Jordan, who also plays keyboards. "Our music is pretty hard to classify. I like to call it world beat," he said before the show. "I draw a lot from African and Carribean culture, as well as American music."

Spunk opened the night with "Power of Change," an upbeat song with a contemporary 80's refrain, "This country has one religion. . .and that is capitalism."

While Jordan's voice and lyrics were strong, Bruce Stockwell, on guitar, was jamming great, especially in "Let Dreams Come True," an almost Billy Joel-like song. The band really hit its stride with this song and poured it on strong. Bass guitarist (and occasional vocalist) Barry Stockwell backed up Jordan well as did Renriat on drums with a driving, almost overpowering beat.

But after some less than exciting pieces the addition of fellow songwriter Brian Erving on sax added much and the band really came together and sparked the crowd with "Hook,Line and Sinker," a bluesy, rocking song and their best piece of the night. But Bruce Stockwell and brother Barry stole the show in this piece from an electrifying and soulful Erving.

That's Giovi, not Jovi

By DANIELLE DOWLING
Collegian Staff

Bon Jovi was at Katina's Friday October 13, but not the Bon Jovi you may have in mind. It was Jodi Bongiovi, Jon's first cousin. I was skeptical at first. This genre of music is definitely not my forte. I like Metallica. I like Queensryche. I hate Bon Jovi and most commercial metal bands, but that was my first mistake. Jodi Bongiovi is not Jon Bon Jovi, nor does she wish to be.

I have to say that Friday night's performance was a pleasant suprise. While none of their originals were terribly original, the back-up band was tight and professional. Bongiovi's vocals were unique. And although at times Bongiovi seemed a little too histrionic in her delivery, the group put on a good show considering the fact that there were about 15 people in the audience and most of them seemed to be on Valium. But the group had a sense of humor about the whole mess which I admired. "Thank you for coming," Bongiovi said, " all ten of you."

When asked if this happened often, Bongiovi replied, "No, this is a total fluke. The promotion for this show was terrible." The last nine months the group has spent promoting themselves and now promoting their LP, Jodi Bongiovi, which was released a week ago, has been a roller coaster ride. According to Bongiovi, the group has played before 10 to 15,000 people one night and the next night played before 10 to 20 people. "My shows have been met with a lot of skepticism," she explained,"People think, 'Well she's probably talentless,' or 'She's riding on Jon's coat tails to further her own career.' "

However, the people who view Jodi Bongiovi with a skeptical eye are not totally at fault. When advertising for her shows, promoters will use Jon's spelling of the name rather than Jodi's, which is the correct spelling of the family name. Often included with these advertisements is the line, "Jon's favorite cousin ". The promoters may be under the impression that this will attract potential audience members but it's more likely that this would repel. "I hate what these promoters do," Bongiovi claimed in reference to this issue,"because I've put so much work into this."

So why not change the name? "I'm very proud of my name, so why should I change it?"Bongiovi stated. "At first I figured I use it as an edge but it has turned out to be a curse. It's good in a way because it makes me work harder." It also sets the group up for awkward situations as Bongiovi recalled,"One night this guy jumped onto the stage during the set and asked us to play a cover of 'Dead or Alive'. I told him no, but he wouldn't get off the stage until security came."

Hopefully things will get better for Jodi Bongiovi and when she plays the Channel in Boston Sunday October 22 the turn out will be a bit better than it was at Katina's.

Bradfield novel comes of age

By CHRIS McNEICE
Collegian Correspondent

The History of Luminous Motion
Scott Bradfield
Knopf

Ever since the popularity of J.D. Salinger's Catcher In the Rye, there have been a slew of novels recounting the rebelliously critical notions that arise from the confusing search for one's own meaning within the context of society that are inherent in the journey toward adulthood. The problem is most of the coming-of-age stories fail to relate to the reader. Scott Bradfield's first novel, The History of Luminous Motion, is one of the fine exceptions.

The book is a wonderful narration from the point of view of eight-year-old Philip, unbelievably endowed with the intelligence of Einstein. The deeply psychological analysis of his situation provides the light and the shadow of the story, and Bradfield is consistent in his use of Philip's perceptions as expressions of the boy's state of mind. The product is a brilliant portrayal of an emotionally developing child who perceives himself as the center of the universe. The conflict arises from Philip's failure to accept the reality of other people who have wills and interests separate from his own, and who can also affect him.

Although he merely provides us with a character study of Philip, in which the movement of the story is the movement of thought in Philip's mind, Bradfield constructs a substantial universe using extremely detailed imagery interwoven with the complex patterns of Philip's thought. The other characters are developed quite well as intellectual positions that strive for dominence over Philip's consciousness and dreams. Bradfield also succeeds in showing how the other subjects in a child's realm reflect how that child perceives him or herself.

Philip's mother is the light that fills Philip's vision at the beginning of the novel. She is the fluid motion of the days, the cities and the men that she picks up and discards like the credit cards she steals from them, that flow by his vision in a blur as the two travel through southern California's small towns. Philip loves his mother only as she is that part of him that exists in, and later longs for, the constant unfettered duration of childhood.

When his mother decides to stop moving and recoils from life into a bottle, the novel takes a humorous turn into a modern-day, intellectual Tom Sawyer. Philip even finds a new friend in Rodney, the novel's parallel to Huck Finn. Powerfully concise and contemptuous in word and manner, Philip says that Rodney, "introduced me to a world far more disorderly, I imagined, than my own."

Philip also befriends Beatrice, a precocious Marxian feminist social critic with a gift for verbose diatribes. She explains to Philip when they first meet, "I think men want a woman they're attracted to...There's a natural woman men are looking for underneath all the Clairol and Maybelline."

Together, the three rob houses, experiment with drugs, sex, love and witchcraft, and verbally rage the structures of the culture and economy that are a basic part of every normal middle class American life. In this way, Philip begins to inspect the dynamics of the real world that lay beyond his microcosm, and to suspect the virtues of fate.

Philip does not have long to wait for the unknown future to arrive with his long lost father, formerly "a strange, weighted tendency rather than a man." The presence of the mythical figure that had filled Philip's dreams now becomes mass and form, a part of reality.

His father is society, culture and economics. He is the world of human schedules and objects that break up the seamless flow of time and light. This new meaning is like a new planet entering a solar system; its electromagnetic and gravitational forces bend and distort the continuum of Philip's time, space and reality.

The novel culminates in a destructive ballet of words colliding like atoms within the universe of Philip's mind. The tension hurdles the reader along toward the imminent deadline, absurdly evoking interest in the unsettling effects of Bradfield's scrutiny of the torturous aspects of the conflict between the individuals self and the ever more powerful other of society.

Although there are segments of densely compounded imagery, the smooth intensity with which Bradfield creates a world so intellectually complex, perceptually rich and commonly believable requires that the opportunity to enter this world should not be passed up.

■ football loses to Connecticut in overtime

Wilkos (19 of 29, 244 yards and three touchdowns), who had keyed several big plays in the game, got to work for one final push.

The Minutemen drove to the Connecticut 46 before temporarily stalling. On fourth-and-10, a do-or-die situation, Wilkos struck gold again.

While Connecticut looked to protect the short first down pass, split end Chip Mitchell flew downfield in single coverage. Wilkos found him at the 10 and he slipped the defender and danced into the end zone.

"It was just a little corner route," Wilkos said.

Next came the agonizing decision that may keep Reid awake for weeks. To kick or not to kick, that was the question. Gabrielli had already missed two PATs, possibly because holder Ron Blauvelt was out with an ankle injury and backup quarterback Tom Fasano was taking his place. Reid called time out to mull it over.

"I was going to go for the two, and I don't know what changed my mind," Reid said. "Everyone was fired up for the overtime, but I've been through them before [52-51 four-OT loss at Richmond in 1987]. Those are ugly messes."

"I had confidence in our offense and defense to kick the extra point and then battle it out. But then I was pumped up for the two-point," Wilkos said. "I think when momentum is going your way and you've got a chance, go for it."

In the end, it was Gabrielli who came out and banged it through to tie the game and force the extra session. But UConn tainted that decision by winning it in OT.

"I'm angry with myself. The way they were kicking us, we should have gone for the win when we had the opportunity," Reid said.

Nonetheless, overtime was about the only fitting way to end a contest that bounced back and forth all game, taking more weird hops than a SuperBall on a pile of boulders.

For the fifth time in six games, a UMass opponent scored first. UConn, behind Wesley and highly-heralded quarterback Matt DeGennaro, drove straight downfield after the opening kick, and Wesley foreshadowed things to come by blowing through a huge hole for a 14-yard winner just 4:24 into the game.

UMass came right back behind Wilkos, who hit Mike Tobin at the 8-yard line and then a play later took it in from 6 to tie it.

Then, after the Huskies were forced to punt, Reid went into the trickbook for the go-ahead score.

On second down from the 48, Wilkos pitched to tailback Jerome Bledsoe on the right side. Bledsoe rolled out as if it was a normal run, and then suddenly pulled up and tossed one to Tobin, who was about three miles ahead of the pack downfield. Tobin camped under the pass, ate his lunch and grew a beard and still scored about 20 yards ahead of the closest UConn defender.

Down 13-7, the Huskies got the next two scores, both set up by Wilkos turnovers, on a 3-yard run by Victor Taylor and a 5-yard toss from DeGennaro to split end Mike Nolan. And with UConn holding a 20-13 lead, and UMass punting with under two minutes left in the half, the Parents' Day crowd was pretty confident of holding a seven-point edge at the half.

Then again, Dukakis was confident he was going to be president.

Fielding Gabrielli's punt at the 34, Nolan crossed the field and tried to reverse it to Rusty Neal. But the cornerback/punt returner wasn't haven't a good day, having already been toasted by Tobin's touchdown. He fumbled the handoff and kicked it around, and UM's Lance Neveling fell on it at the Connecticut 27.

Three plays later, Wilkos dropped back and found split end Lamar Newsome cutting back against zone coverage, Newsome slipped inside three receivers at the goal line and caught the low throw for a 29-yard scoring strike.

UConn tried in earnest to retake the lead before the half, but DeGennaro threw one of his three interceptions, this one to linebacker Mario Perry (he had two). With UMass on its own 36 and just 21 ticks remaining in the half, it seems pretty obvious UMass would kill the clock.

You'd have thought people would have learned the first time.

Wilkos nailed Chip Mitchell between three defenders for 46 yards, and then, with just six seconds left, threw a perfect thread-the-needle job to Tobin in the right corner, a 16-yarder that put the Minutemen up 26-20 and left the folks stunned.

"I was less than enamored with the way we let them back in," said UConn coach Tom Jackson. "We certainly had our biggest challenge to date at the half. I was less than kind to the players and they responded."

Nolan, who got the message in the locker room, this time kept the punt himself and took it alone, 80 yards down the right sideline for the score. Later in the quarter, Wesley slipped through a few more tackles, and then pirouetted around the last defender for a 21-yard score and a 33-26 UConn lead.

UMass didn't show the spark in its offense in the second half, mainly because the Huskies keyed on the option game and held Wilkos and Bledsoe in check on the ground.

"We needed a big one from Jerome, and we didn't get it," Reid said.

"The defense did key on Jerome. They flocked to him a lot," Wilkos said.

But with the emphasis shifted to the running game, that allowed Wilkos to have a strong day passing.

"They [UConn] weren't respecting the middle of the field," he said.

It wasn't the offense that told the story, though. UConn just had too many tools for the Minutemen to stop.

"We got beat by a better football team. I thought Gary Wilkos had a strong game," Reid said. "We just got schmucked on defense."

the performances of freshman Becky Johnson and sophomore Precious Hill, who grabbed fourth and fifth overall.

Johnson had been hampered by a lingering sprained ankle, but showed her recovery in this meet.

"This was by far Beck's best race; she ran both strong and relaxed," LaFreniere said. "She and Precious ran right where they belonged — I just can't say enough about them."

The reliable tandem of junior Laura LaVallee and freshman Maureen Meldrim came in seventh and eighth, respectively. "Maureen and Laura ran very well and consistently," LaFreniere said.

Rounding out UMass' top seven were sophomore Michelle St. Laurent (15th, 19:32) and junior Kathy Holt (18th, 19:56).

The meet never materialized into the expected showdown between the Minutewomen and Vermont, one of the more solid teams in New England in the past several years. UVM was missing two of its top runners in Brenda White (sprained ankle) and Joyce Anderson (family obligations). Highly-touted sophomore Natalie Cartwright was Vermont's top runner, finishing in a disappointing 13th.

Incredibly, URI posed the greatest challenge to UMass despite an incomplete team. "URI had just five runners, and their fifth person came in 11th," LaFreniere said. "They really put forth their best effort and challenged us."

With the Atlantic 10 championships next weekend, followed by the New England championships on Oct. 28, the Minutewomen are in peak form. They finished their dual-meet season with a 6-2-1 record, losing only to national-caliber Yale and Providence College.

LaFreniere's reaction tells it all. "It was sure exciting to see a solid patch of UMass red coming in at the end of the race," she sais. "There was so much beaming after the race, we hardly needed to turn on the headlights on the ride home."

Minutewomen peppered her with nine shots, most of which were from close range.

On the other side of the coin, Iowa was only able to get one shot off, but guess where it went? The Hawkeyes drew what was only one of two penalty corners they had in the half and Aileen Trendler hit Cherie Freddie with a pass who set the ball up for Gleason who hit a soft shot that was headed into the right corner. UMass freshman goalie Phillipa Scott fully extended her leg but could not reach the ball, and Iowa went into halftime with a 1-0 lead after having been badly outplayed.

In the second half, the Minutewomen were not quite as dominant but still outshot the Hawkeyes, 9-7. And again, nothing to show for it.

"The first half belonged to us but in the second half I think we got tired," Hixon said.

But better to have the game that UMass wanted on Friday then Saturday after having already played a game. The Minutewomen came into the weekend as the No. 8 team in the nation. UNH was No. 9.

UMass won Friday's game with goals by Kathy DeAngelis (her 10th of the year) who deflected a shot on a penalty corner and Beth Thornton who drilled a free hit from about 25 yards past UNH goaltender Stacey Gaudette.

After the Iowa game, UMass' record now stands at 9-4-1, 3-1 in the Atlantic 10.

tribute, according to Ford. "We're playing much better," Ford said.

The best news of all for the Minutewomen is that they have a strech of home games coming up. UMass has played 12 of its first 15 games on the road and is well deserving of some time out of the vans that take them to their games. Their first game is against Central Connecticut this Wednesday. The game starts at 7 p.m. over at Totman Gym.

XonTech is a highly respected, progressive R & D firm specializing in the empirical analysis of complex physical phenomena, and development of advanced concepts and technologies in support of numerous defense programs.
Our research encompasses the following:
- Analysis and evaluation of flight test data (aircraft ballistic missile, satellite), including:
  - Trajectory reconstruction
  - Re-entry aerodynamics
  - Navigation analysis
  - Orbital mechanics
- Research, development, and evaluation of advanced radar and weapons systems including:
  - Signature analysis
  - System design
  - Signal processing
  - Performance analysis
  - System simulation
Our work is technically challenging, and offers exceptional visibility and direct client contact, with opportunities for technical and managerial advancement.
Positions are available at the Ph.D., Master's, and Bachelor's levels. Degrees must be in Physics, Mathematics, or Computer Science. Electrical Engineering with signal processing emphasis is also acceptable.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): With hard work, that special dream can be realized now. Before proceeding, double-check your plans to make certain they are practical and that your high hopes are based on accurate information.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): You reach an important decision concerning the future. Gentle persuasion convinces others you are right. Do not take on more than you can handle. Send a friend a carefully chosen gift.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Working conditions and a health problem should improve over the next few weeks. Give up a romantic relationship while you are still friends. Guard you reputation on the party circuit.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A change of personnel at work could lead to a new position and higher wages for you. A broken promise levaes you in a real pickle. Allow the person you disappointed time to forgive.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): The spotlight is on learning and satisfying your curiosity. Someone who has ignored you in the past now responds. Missing papers surface in a mysterious place. A youngster confides in you.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): By being more patient and lowering your expectations, you will help a young person work through a problem. Changing your attitude will also help you patch things up with a mate or partner.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Several personal matters need prompt attention. Although you may not feel like it, you must deal with them now. Your sense of timing works wonders for you at both the office and home.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Since you enjoy helping others, today would be good for volunteering your time and talents to a service organization. A more realistic budget will help you deal with worrisome bills.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Get routine work out of the way early in the day. Then spend time pursuing creative projects. Welcome ideas from co-workers. They may know how to make a project a commercial success.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Do not let minor distractions ruin your day. Powerful emotions could tempt you to be extravagant. Do not feel guilty about splurging – you deserve it! Catch up on correspondence.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look to the future, not the past. Partner's support enables you to recycle a project. Financial success follows. You learn from observing someone else's methods. Mate plans a surprise tonight.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Keep a close eye on someone who is costing you a lot of money. Some mistakes are not as accidental as they appear. Postpone buying expensive items until they go on sale.

"Midnight Madness" hits the Cage Saturday

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Point guard Anton Brown dishing the ball to forward Jim McCoy for two was a familiar site at the Curry Hicks Cage last winter. And barring any major disasters, it will be again this year for the University of Massachusetts men's basketball team.

But UMass coach John Calipari is looking for an assist from some other players in the Cage, preferably from 4,024 other players (the seating capacity of the Cage) — the fans.

Saturday night's "Midnight Madness" festivities at the Cage were an attempt to bring the students back to the Cage.

"It was part of our way of giving back to the students, getting them involved, getting them excited and telling them that we need them," Calipari said.

UMass gave the students center court for most of the night. A three-on-three tournament was held, won by the Philly Home Boys on the men's side and the A's on the women's side.

"We need them (the students) in this building, we need them going crazy, we need them having fun and I think that they saw tonight that we're going to have an exciting team."

There were also free raffles held for round trip air tickets to Florida, gift certificates to local restaurants, and a free throw shooting contest. The most popular event of the night was a contest in which students could win money for a hitting a shot, $100 dollars from halfcourt, $50 from 30 feet, and $10 from the foul line.

"We just wanted them (the students) to know that we have a first-class team and the kids work hard," Calipari said.

The second-year coach knows how much of a factor that a screaming, bleacher-kicking crowd can be. "Ten, fifteen points," he said.

Playing in an empty gym would take away the home court advantage. The Atlantic 10 freshman of the year in 1989 knows what an impact the fans can have on the game.

"They're a big factor," McCoy said. "We didn't lose too many games here last year. We lost a lot of games on the road and two in Springfield. The fans are probably 80 percent. I'll give the team credit for 20 percent."

The Minutemen were 8-3 in the Cage last year, and 0-2 in their home away from home, the Springfield Civic Center, where they lost to Temple and West Virginia. This year, UMass will not play a game in Springfield. Sixteen games, including games with Temple and WV as well as exhibitions with Sodertajle of Sweden and Marathon Oil, are scheduled for the Cage. The Minutemen were 2-13 on the road last season.

Oct. 15 was the official date that basketball teams in Division I can start practice. So, at midnight on Sunday, the Minutemen were introduced to the crowd of about 2500 who braved the thunderstorms and skipped the late innings of the first World Series game.

And what better way to get the crowd enthused about the season then with a slam dunk contest, judged by the fans' applause. High flying sophomore William Herndon and freshman forward Tony Barbee advanced into the finals, Herndon with a double-pump dunk and Barbee with a jam off his own alley-oop. But in the finals, Barbee clanged his attempt off the rim leaving Herndon with the shot at the win. Herndon flew in from the right side and took off just outside the side of the key for the dunk to win the contest.

The Minutemen finished the night with a scrimmage that lasted 20 minutes and ended up turning into another dunkfest for Herndon. "In a game like this, you just want to go out there and have some fun," Herndon said.

Herndon will have to wait a little while before he has any more fun in the Cage though. He transferred from the University of Richmond to UMass last fall and under NCAA regulations is not eligible to play for UMass until classes end this semester.

UMass coach John Calipari and the rest of the basketball team ushered in the new season Saturday night with a midnight practice.

Even minus Herndon though, this team may be the best UMass has had in years with big men Barbee and Harper Williams leading a big freshman class.

"I've been waiting for two years for us to have a good program and this looks like this will be the year so I'm ready to win," junior guard Rafer Giles said.

This was the first ever midnight practice for UMass and will probably not be the last.

"I thought it was a pretty good turnout," assistant coach John Robic said. "I guarantee you next year, you won't be able to walk in here."

The players have been working out with weights and playing pickup games up until Saturday night but now official practices can get under way and the season can begin.

"Tonight (Saturday) we were ready to go and the people seemed like they were ready so I guess we'll kick the season off right," Giles said.

So, let the season begin.

Falcons celebrate wins

Kicker fails as Pats lose, 16-15

ATLANTA (AP) — Paul McFadden of the Atlanta Falcons says place kicking is like "a roller-coaster ride."

McFadden went from goat to hero with the game-winner that came with a little more than three minutes after his 40-yard attempt to erase a 15-13 deficit was wide right.

McFadden turned an up-and-down day on the roller-coaster into a joy ride yesterday when he kicked a 22-yard field goal with six seconds to play, giving the Falcons a 16-15 victory over the New England Patriots.

"It was a second chance, a golden opportunity to put the other one behind me," McFadden said.

"I never should have missed the first one," he said. "What a way to rebound."

McFadden's third field goal of the game put the negative spotlight on New England's Greg Davis, who also kicked three field goals but missed an extra point that could have forced overtime.

"I have to take a lot of blame for our loss today," said Davis, who kicked for the Falcons last year. "Missing an extra point will always come back to get you, I don't care who you are."

Fitchburg St. ends loss skein

FITCHBURG (AP) — After Fitchburg State snapped its 36-game losing streak with a 33-7 victory over Southeastern Massachusetts University Saturday, students celebrated — some might say a little too much.

Five people, including three juveniles, were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct following the game, police Sgt. Ronald Hamel said.

At least one car was overturned and about 250 students careened through residential neighborhoods near the college Saturday night, Hamel said.

But despite the big win by Fitchburg, Hamel said, "We've had weekends like this before. It wasn't just because of the game."

Stephen Quinn, 18, of Mansfield and a Fitchburg State College student, and Ross Landers, 18, of Mansfield who attends Southeastern Massachusetts, were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct, Hamel said.

The Falcons had won just one game since beginning varsity play in 1984 and their losing streak of 36 straight games was the worst mark in the nation.

It's Division III football — with no scholarships, part-time coaches, bouncing bus rides over the New England hills and sometimes few rewards, except a chance to play the game.

The last and only time the Falcons won was on Sept. 21, 1985, when they managed to down New York Maritime, 28-23. Although it has since resumed play, New York Maritime did not field a team the following season.

"They are young men of uncommon courage," said College President Vincent Mara a few weeks ago, when the team was still losing.

"The kids are just determined to hang tough and grit it out," Mara said. "And if they are willing to make that kind of effort, we're not going to do anything to stop them."

Women's tennis team tops URI, falls to Tufts

By C.J. ABATI
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team split a pair of matches this weekend, while a third was rained out.

The Minutewomen took to the road Thursday afternoon to take on Tufts, but came home with a dismal 7-2 loss. Friday afternoon, at Rhode Island, they posted an impressive 7-2 victory over the Rams. Saturday's match with Vermont was cancelled.

The Tufts match wasn't very competitive, as UMass would lose all but two matches. It was not a good outing for the Minutewomen. Gail Girasella, playing in the second singles spot, won her match in three sets. She dropped the first set 4-6, but rallied back to take the second set and the tie break, 6-4,6-4.

Girasella was also involved in the other UMass victory. She paired up with teammate Kere Eddy to win at first doubles.

"They beat us pretty badly in the lower levels," said UMass coach Edwin Gentzler. "They whipped us at the four, five and six spots. We were not very competitive."

The Minutewomen turned things around on Friday by defeating Rhode Island.

Everything came together for UMass as Gerisella, Eddy, Shizuko Yamasaki, and Amy Ryan all won by huge margins. It was as if they were a completely different team. Allison Agnew filled in at sixth singles and also helped the cause by adding another win.

"Everybody played well out there," Gentzler said. "We were very strong out there. I was very pleased with their performance."

The level of play was very high, as UMass gave up very few points. In fact, with the exception of the two sets Rhode Island did manage to take, the Rams didn't win too many games. Both Girasella and Yamasaki dropped one game each as they cruised to easy two-set victories.

The match with Vermont has been rescheduled for this Friday. The site has also been changed, as the match will now be held in Burlington, Vt.

of Hechemy and Stone was also victorious. Because of rain, the first doubles team of Johnson and Teitelbaum did not get a chance to show its stuff. The score went down as a cancellation.

The team is awaiting word on whether or not it will be able to make up its match against Providence this week. The original match was postponed because of rain.

"We're fired up to play Providence. We didn't beat them at all last year, so we really want to play," Johnson said.

The Minutemen wrap up their season and will be going indoors to practice, where they played last year at the courts at Hampshire College. They will be hard at work building new techniques and keeping up with the old ones as they get ready for two big tournaments next spring, the Atlantic 10s and the New Englands.

UConn runs over UMass

Huskies win in OT, 39-33; tailback Wesley has career day

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

STORRS, Conn. — Something strange happens when no-name running backs take the field against the University of Massachusetts.

It's as if these guys hop into the proverbial phone booth when the Minutemen come to town. Saturday at Memorial Stadium, it was Connecticut's Kevin Wesley who came away wearing the big red 'S' on his shirt.

Jerome Bledsoe and the Minutemen were stopped by UConn, 39-33 Saturday.

The sophomore, listed third on the depth chart at the tailback position, merely ran up 54 times as many yards as he had in the last three games combined. Included in that was an 11-yard unhindered touchdown jaunt in overtime which led the host Huskies to a 39-33 win over UMass in a Yankee Conference battle.

Maine's Carl Smith makes a habit of saving his best games for UMass, and Boston University's Vince Jackson established himself against the Minutemen two weeks ago.

But no one could have expected what Wesley did. Five yards total in three games, a bruised kidney against Southern Methodist four weeks ago. To carry for a Division I-AA season-high 272 yards would seem highly unlikely. But it happened.

"[Wesley] did a great job," UMass coach Jim Reid said. "He broke a lot of tackles, and the offensive line blocking was excellent."

Wesley added three touchdowns on the day, including the one that won it for the Huskies (4-2, 2-1 in YC play).

The game entered the overtime tied at 33-all. Connecticut won the coin toss and elected to go on defense first, knowing what it had to do to win. UMass (2-3-1, 1-3 in YC) trotted on the field behind sophomore quarterback Gary Wilkos, ready to start from the 25-yard line per Yankee Conference tiebreaker rules.

But a pair of runs and a pass gained only four yards, which brought on kicker Marco Gabrielli. The junior had missed two crucial extra points in regulation, and proceeded to boot the 39-yard attempt wide left.

UConn, needing simply any score to win, kept it simple. Wesley carried for 8, 6 and 11 yards. Ballgame.

Not to be forgotten though, is the way the Minutemen came back to tie it. Down 33-26 with 3:32 to play,

Field hockey gains split of key weekend

Beats UNH, falls to Iowa

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

It was a long weekend for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team, but in the end the Minutewomen got what they wanted.

Traveling up to New Hampshire for two games in less than 24 hours with the University of New Hampshire on Friday and Iowa on Saturday. The Minutewomen beat UNH, 2-1, on Friday but fell to the Hawkeyes on Saturday, 2-0.

"We came into this weekend knowing we needed at least a split and we got that," UMass coach Pam Hixon said.

UMass wanted Friday's game because it was a regional contest and could have a larger bearing on any post season hopes that the Minutewomen may have.

On Saturday, the game was played on a neutral site but you'd never know it with the sudden turnout of a slew of Iowa fans. There was a plane load of Iowa fans, rattling their cow bell during the game as well as the Amesbury high school field hockey team which turned out to watch ex teammate Kristy Gleason who plays for the Hawkeyes.

And Gleason did not disappoint the crowd at all, scoring both goals before Iowa coach Beth Beglin substituted for the freshman forward with 53 seconds left to give the crowd a chance to acknowledge her.

Yet through all the noise, the Minutewomen dominated the first half but just could not put the ball in the net. Iowa goaltender Eileen Moyer held on for dear life as the

Men's soccer gets first A-10 victory, 1-0

They did it. The University of Massachusetts men's soccer team not only won two consecutive games, but in doing so, clinched their first Atlantic 10 victory (1-0) — and on the road to boot.

Saturday the Minutemen shutout the Hawks of St. Joseph's University in Philadelphia on mud-dried and gopher hole-ridden field, 1-0.

UMass came into the game with a 2-8-1 season record. St Joe's went in with a 3-7-1 record. The game was aggressive; the city kids were hosting the suburbanites and ready to give them a rough game. "These were big guys [St. Joseph's]," assistant coach John Martin said. "They were aggressive and hard to the ball.

"For a team that gives punishment," said Martin, "it seems they took more from us."

The small playing field "nullified our speed advantage," said Martin, "which forced us into a physical game — we came out on top. It shows a lot a heart and strength."

The first half was scoreless as UMass and St Josephs's volleyed in the midfield. In the second half, UMass dominated play and was able to capitalize on their offensive chances. UMass outshot St Joe's 26 to seven.

"We were able to settle more in the second half," said Martin.

As the Hawks' goalie came out of the box, on a drive down the sideline, senior Louis Hollmeyer beat him and snuck around him. In a scuttle for possession in the box, sophomore Ray Cunha passed the ball to junior Carl Hanks who scored the only goal of the game with 14 minutes left in regulation.

"Hanks was the man of the match," Martin said. "Hollmeyer made the plays happen. [Sophomore Dan] Lawrence and [sophomore Darren] Stone had their usual good game. I saw a gutty performance from our guys, an overall team effort."

The men's soccer team won its second straight, beating St. Joseph's, 1-0 Saturday.

Slide continues for volleyball team

By DAN SARAZEN

As you read this, remember that the Baltimore Orioles went from last place to contenders in just one year, and that the way they did it was by playing their future, their younger players.

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team traveled south this weekend and lost to Rutgers, Temple, and Drexel — all in three games.

Friday night the Minutewomen lost to the Lady Knights 6-15, 12-15, and 5-15. Nancy Sullivan again played well, as she has all season. "She had a great weekend," said coach Carol Ford, "She played great D." Sullivan also played great O and walked away with 13 kills in the match.

Saturday proved to be a busy day for the UMass squad. They played Temple at noon and then traveled across town for a 5 p.m. match at Drexel.

The scores for the Temple match went 6-15, 5-15, and in a very close game to end it 15-17. "I'm real happy, all of our scores should have been like this," Ford said. "We're not that far behind these teams. Our blocking was really improved."

UMass then traveled to Drexel and lost by the scores of 9-15, 8-15, and 12-15. "Fatigue was a part of it but it wasn't everything," said Ford. "We're not digging enough balls to make a difference."

On the plus side of things Rachel Bredemeier had her best weekend of the year and seems more comfortable on the court, Sharon Panoff continues to improve her blocking skills and all the players coming off the bench are finding ways to con-

Men's tennis team rolls to 8-0 win

By KIM BRATER
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts men's tennis team raked in another win Saturday, beating Clark University, 8-0 in Worcester. The Minutemen outplayed Clark in improving to 8-1.

"Clark is a Division III school. They came in around 20th at the ECACs and we won the whole thing," said UMass senior Chris Johnson. "The number one Clark player is pretty good, but it was a pretty easy match."

At the number four singles slot, Lloyd Teitelbaum beat his opponent, 6-1, 6-3 to remain as the only undefeated UMass singles player this season.

Other singles matches for the Minutemen had number one Barry Wadsworth (6-3, 6-3), number two Paul Audet (6-4, 6-2), number three Jeff Hechemy (6-4, 6-0) and Johnson at number five (6-1, 6-2) pulling out wins. Rich Stone had a long match at sixth singles, winning 6-1, 1-6, 6-1.

The unbeaten second doubles team of Audet and Wadsworth won its match at number two, 6-4, 6-4, while the third team

It's not often that a team can not only win, but also do it addressing all of its coach's concerns at the same time.

But that's exactly what the University of Massachusetts women's cross country team did in its impressive victory of Rhode Island, New Hampshire and Vermont Saturday in Durham, N.H.

Throughout the several weeks before the meet, coach Julie LaFreniere stressed the need for her team's top runners to run in a tight pack to be successful.

"If we don't get our top five running close together, we'll be in trouble," LaFreniere warned.

Against their three New England rivals, the Minutewomen did exactly what they needed to do, placing their top five runners within 21 seconds of each other. Senior captain Shana Smith led the way, finishing first overall in a time of 18:34.

After URI's Stephanie Ulicny and Deanna Germano took second and third, respectively, UMass dominated the rest of the top 10. Perhaps most encouraging were

Dukakis: tax hikes are solution to cuts

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Gov. Dukakis told Massachusetts college and university newspaper editors yesterday that the only way to reverse the devastating effect of budget cuts to public higher education is to raise taxes — an idea stalled in the state Legislature since January.

"Voting for additional revenue is not an easy vote," Dukakis said, "particularly after eight or nine years of a national atmosphere that says 'put it on my tab' and 'read my lips.'"

Dukakis said legislation he submitted in January would raise $600 million by taxing cigarettes, alcohol, gasoline, as well as introducing several sales taxes. The Legislature has rejected all parts of this package, he said.

"One of the things I hope students do is not just meet with legislators but give them the support they need to [support a tax]," he said.

The meeting, which was scheduled late Friday afternoon by the governor's office, was attended by representatives of the University of Massachusetts-Amherst, UMass-Boston, Salem State, Framingham State, the Massachusetts College of Art and Cape Cod Community College. Dukakis stressed the meeting, held in his Statehouse office, was not scheduled to temper the effects of a rally against budget cuts scheduled for noon tomorrow.

"I've been scheduling meetings with people about this for quite a while," he said.

Dukakis reiterated an early statement that the budget cuts would not affect needy students, who would be eligible for tuition waivers if they could not afford increased tuition.

Dennis Madson, UMass vice chancellor for student affairs, said late yesterday that passage of a tax package is necessary.

"My hope is that people value higher education in this Commonwealth enough [to support the tax]," he said.

Madson said the combination of three events will relieve the University of fiscal woes — the tax package, some fee and/or tuition increases and greater efficiency at the University.

Franklyn Jenifer, higher education chancellor, told editors that he hopes several thousand students rally tomorrow at the Statehouse.

"But it's very important to remember to Education cuts to be reduced

Dukakis, Jenifer to spare $10 million

BY KEVIN GALVIN
Associated Press

BOSTON — Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and Higher Education Chancellor Franklyn Jenifer announced Monday a pact to reduce public higher education's share in the next round of budget cuts by $10 million to avoid laying off tenured faculty.

"I don't know of anything that is more crucial to this state... than the investment we are making, and will be making, in higher education," Dukakis said.

The announcement comes after the Board of Regents declared a fiscal crisis and college and university presidents met last week with Dukakis. The proposed cuts were reduced from $35 million to $25 million.

Dukakis noted it is the fifth time since spring 1988 that the state's education budget has been trimmed, and he said that even the reduced cuts would be devastating to higher education.

The governor said the state's schools have greatly improved in the 1980's and cautioned that further cuts jeopardize their future.

"And if we forget that, if we continue to nickel and dime our public education system... then we're going to throw away the future of this state," Dukakis said.

Dukakis said increased fees and tuition would be necessary to keep the system operating, but he said that the state would continue to grant tuition waivers to needy students.

"Even this adjustment is not a long-term answer," he said.

The announcement Monday came after two weeks' behind-the-scenes positioning between Administration and Finance Secretary L. Edward Lashman and higher education officials over the proposed cuts.

Jenifer said that Dukakis agreed to reduce the cuts after college and university presidents told him Friday that they would be forced to lay off tenured faculty.

With the reduction, Jenifer said he hoped to avoid even laying off part-time instructors.

"The thing that we cannot overlook is that it will be bad," Jenifer said.

Campus Center vending policy may be altered

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The Director of Auxiliary Services said yesterday commercial vending sales on the Campus Center Concourse should cease so University retail stores can increase their contribution to the Auxiliary Enterprises fund.

Ashoke Ganguli, the director of auxiliary services, said he would like to see the vending policy changed to prohibit commercial vending and sale of products in direct competition with the University Store.

He said some of the student vending space is being misused for individual gain by people with no affiliation to the University. The commercial vendors prevent the educational and culturally diverse atmosphere that concourse vending was intended to create, he said.

"The overall strategy is to keep the student money on campus," he said. "That's why we have four ATM machines and check cashing services available in the Campus Center."

He said profits from University retail stores in the Student Union and the Campus Center are put into the Auxiliary Enterprises account. The account is used to pay for staff payroll, meeting room furniture and building maintenance.

The Campus Center benefits the students, faculty, staff and administration, so profits from University retail businesses are spread throughout the University community, he said.

Ganguli said auxiliary services needs between $700,000 and $1 million a year to adequately maintain the Campus Center. Between $200,000 and $300,000 a year is now spent on maintenance, he said.

He said he would like to see all vendors selling only hand-crafted items.

"My biggest concern is that students are being used as fronts for outside vendors," he said.

He said if the vending coordinator makes policy changes and ensures that outsiders do not abuse it, he would support student vendors selling manufactured products. Outside individuals and organizations are using student agents to qualify to sell on the concourse, he said.

The University store now contracts space on the concourse to Apple, IBM and Zenith computer companies, he said.

"Computer sales are allowed because computers enhance the academic mission as an educational tool," he said.

Vending Coordinator Bruce Ledoux said he is willing to work to create an educational concourse, but there should be one standard for both the University store and the students.

"The education extends beyond the classroom," he said. "They meet people with interests like their own and the job experience provides a lot of people with an entry level position in a free enterprise related job."

Hilson denies calling fights racial

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Dr. Arthur Hilson, the director of public safety, flatly denied yesterday that he told a Collegian reporter an Oct. 8 fight in the Northeast Residential Area was "definitely racially motivated."

Hilson, who was quoted in an Oct. 11 Collegian story about two separate weekend fights as saying, "Both incidents were definitely racially motivated."

Hilson said a police officer told him the beating could have been racial because the victim had a Hispanic surname and the suspects were White.

However the victim was identified Friday as a Caucasian male. His friend, who was in the car at the time of the attack, had a Hispanic surname.

"What I told the reporter was that if the victim were Hispanic or Latino, then it is possible that it was racial," Hilson said.

Shouting match to be investigated

Police responded early Saturday morning to a call concerning a fight on the cultural diversity floor of Brett House.

When the officers arrived they found no fight but a shouting match between students on the fourth floor and someone outside the building, police said.

According to police, the term 'faggot' was used by at least one student. Officers at the scene also found one resident bleeding. The resident attributed the injury to a fall, police said.

Central Area Coordinator Susan Allan said, "We are doing an investigation to see if this is a homophobic incident. We do not tolerate that type of behavior."

Students can phone to say no to more cuts

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

Father Joseph Quigley, director of the Newman Center, donated the use of 30 telephones for students to call their parents or state legislators and urge the officials to vote against an additional cut to the University of Massachusetts operating budget, according to Dennis Madson, vice chancellor of student affairs.

Madson also encouraged students and parents to advocate for an increase in taxes to compensate for past cuts to the University coffers.

"The budget crisis is absolutely critical," Madson said. "I encourage students and their parents to call legislators and put pressure on them [not to approve the cut.] We have to lobby to have them end the cuts and support a tax increase."

Students can use the phones, free of charge, from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. today through Thursday. They are located in the front lounge on the main floor of the Newman Center. The phones are used nightly for the Phone Bank to raise money for the center.

The Alumni fund is financing the calls.

Edward Lashman, director of finance and administration for Gov. Dukakis, asked Chancellor Joseph Duffey to cut 5 percent — $8.4 million — from this year's budget. However Duffey refused to make the cuts earlier this month.

If the legislators approve the cuts, the administration will be forced to further slash library acquisitions, access to majors and general education classes, and student payroll. Undergraduate enrollment is also expected to be cut by some 1,000 students by the end of fiscal year 1991.

In addition, students may face increased tuition and fees. Since the beginning of the semester, 52 Cooperative Extension staff members were laid off and 62 more will follow through attrition and the hiring freeze if legislators vote for the cuts.

Already $17.2 million has been cut from the operating budget and financing for library acquisitions was cut by close to 60 percent. Also, the state froze some $16 million in capital funds which was promised to the University.

Game teaches safe sex

Players answer questions to win condoms

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The "Condom Game" is not Pat Sajak's newest game show and to be a contestant one does not have to fly to Hollywood to participate.

In fact, the game is sponsored by the Five College Aids Awareness Committee as part of the AIDS Awareness Week in the Campus Center Concourse. Anyone who walks by is eligible to play. The game entails three questions dealing with condom use.

Also, all participants are guaranteed to walk away with prizes which include lubricated condoms, spermicide and an instructional booklet which shows how to put on a condom.

This display, which will be on the concourse Tuesday and Thursday of this week, is the University Health Service's way of getting people to learn the facts about safe sex.

Sharon Majewski, member of the peer sexuality group at UMass, said she feels this approach is more effective than a strictly informative approach.

"Last year when we were giving condoms away, people just went to the other side of the concourse," Majewski said. "They were afraid if they came over everyone would think that all they wanted to do was get laid."

Majewski added that since there is a light-hearted tone, people are less afraid to come over to the display and find out what information is available.

Ali Kaplan, another member of the group said, "People are curious as to what the 'Condom Game' is. But, we have to encourage people. If we don't actively solicit students, they don't come over."

The overall student response has been positive according to Majewski.

'People are asking questions that they don't usually get to ask," she said. "And this input from students helps us counteract the misconceptions in our workshops."

Junior Andrea Canty said she thought this concept was a good idea. "There is definitely more awareness now," she said. "For so long, the issue has been brushed under the carpet."

Kaplan agreed that students are more comfortable with the issue of safe sex.

'It seems that students are realizing that safe sex is fun and cool and it's okay to practice it and do it without taking chances," Kaplan said.

Majewski added, "Condoms are for all types of sex. You need to protect yourself and be careful."

Elise Jakabhazy said, "It is so good for condoms to be out of the bathrooms and out on the concourse."

Volunteers help fund shelter

Project to provide housing for women

By ANNE RUSS
Collegian Correspondent

Sunday, Oct. 22 has been designated "Shelter Sunday," according to Hill Boss, activity coordinator for the Amherst Friends of the Homeless, a local organization working to open a shelter for homeless women in Amherst.

All day Sunday, volunteers will go door-to-door collecting donations to help fund the opening of the shelter. Boss hopes to get as many as 200 volunteers.

Homelessness, usually a problem associated with large cities, is a big problem in the Amherst community, Boss said.

"This is a problem that most of us associate with urban areas...the fact that it's documented here in Amherst hit me pretty hard," Boss said.

The proposed shelter, consisting of seven to 10 beds, would be open from 7 p.m. until 7 a.m seven days a week from November through April, according to Boss. The shelter would be staffed mostly by volunteers and there would be at least one professional staff member on duty at all times, he said.

The main goal of the shelter is to provide emergency housing for as many women as possible, Boss said. Under no cicumstances would the shelter provide space for women under the influence of drugs or alcohol, he said. Women staying at the shelter would be guaranteed up to three months of housing, and possibly more if there was no waiting list, he said.

Boss said he became involved with the Amherst Friends of the Homeless because of his surprise at the fact that homelessness does exist here. "I never thought in terms of homeless in Amherst," he said.

Although the efforts of the Amherst Friends of the Homeless cannot solve homelessness nationwide, it can deal with the local problem, Boss said.

Sunday fire at UHS under investigation by Amherst Fire Dept.

A suspicious Sunday afternoon fire in the Urgent Care area of University Health Services is under investigation by the Amherst Fire Department, police said.

Cardboard boxes containing paperwork caught fire causing smoke to fill the area, according to David Kraft, director of Health Services. Urgent Care was evacuated as a result of the heavy smoke, police said.

"I don't know how a fire could've started there," Kraft said. "It seems strange the boxes caught fire because there are no electrical fixtures in the area."

Amherst Fire Department responded to the fire. Kraft said damage was minimal.

Three vehicles parked in Lot 22 were damaged Sunday night, police said. Police said a trash barrel in the area caused the damage, which was estimated at more than $1,000.

In other police reports:

ARRESTS

- Mark Shea, 20, of Van Meter, was arrested Thursday on charges of being a minor in possession of alcohol, police said.
- Michael Kicza, 19, of Hadley, was arrested Saturday on North Pleasant St. on charges of operating under the influence of alcohol, police said.

LARCENY

- A wallet was reported stolen Friday from a room in Van Meter Residence Hall, police said.
- A staff member in the Center for Student Businesses reported the theft of an IBM typewriter from the office Friday, police said. The typewriter was valued at $500 to $1,000.
- A John Adams Residence Hall man reported $18 was stolen from his desk Sunday, police said. The man furnished police with a description of a man going through rooms in the dorms. Police conducted a floor by floor search but did not locate the man.
- A man reported his mountain bike was stolen from the basement of Van Meter Residence Hall Sunday, police said. The bike was valued at $300.
- Two residents of Chadbourne Residence Hall reported money was stolen from their rooms Sunday, police said. The losses were valued at $35.

VANDALISM

- A woman reported the rear window of her vehicle was smashed while it was parked in Lot 22 Monday, police said.
- A person in the Northeast Area reported Friday a number of annoying calls, police said. The alleged caller was identified and the victim may seek court action, police said.
- A Northeast Area resident reported a threatening call was left on the answering machine Saturday, police said. The incident is under investigation.

Model United Nations draws students from afar

By ROB SIMPSON
Collegian Staff

About 220 students from colleges and universities throughout the Northeast will be participating in the Smith Model United Nations Conference 1989 this week at the Stoddard Annex on the Smith campus.

The conference, which is scheduled to run from Oct. 19 to Oct. 22, is to include some 50 students from the Five College area and some 170 students from 18 other schools.

Students have registered from as far as Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore and McGill University in Montreal.

UMass is sending 10 students to partake in the conference.

The Smith College World Affairs Committee is sponsoring the conference.

Smith senior Ann Drummie, a board member of SCWAC who will be acting as Secretary-General, the organizer of the conference, said she hopes the conference will promote a better understanding among students of how the United Nations works and how the various countries interact.

"The purpose is to, besides having fun, enhance international awareness," Drummie said. "This is an easier way to do it than to take a class."

Drummie said knowledge of international events and politics is important because it is ingrained in our everyday lives.

"It affects our lives whether we notice it or not," she said.

Colleges and universities in the Northeast were sent pamphlets last spring inviting students to apply to be model delegates of countries which are members of the United Nations.

65 countries will be represented in the conference.

"It's a lot of role-playing," Drummie said.

Opening ceremonies will commence Thursday evening at 7:30 with political science Professor McAllister Brown of Williams College delivering a lecture on Kampuchea, the formal name of Cambodia.

After the lecture, the delegates will split up into four committees to discuss various international issues.

The Security Council, made up of 15 delegates, will discuss Kampuchea, the Middle East, and the African nation, Mozambique.

The Special Political Committee, composed of 50 delegates, will discuss the issue of "coercion through natural resources," or how countries use their natural resources for political gain, Drummie said.

The Social, Humanitarian, and Cultural Committee will discuss the power of information and racial discrimination, and will be composed of 75 delegates.

35 delegates will make up the African Summit Committee, which will discuss the AIDS epidemic and pan-Africanism, the goal to unify Africa.

Delegates will be dressed in "Western wear," and will engage in formal and informal debate while in session, Drummie said.

The committees will meet for four days, with closing ceremonies on Sunday.

focus our attention not only on this problem but the long-term problems," Jenifer said. "Based on our forecasts, the situation [in Massachusetts] is not going to get any better if we don't soon get additional revenue."

Jenifer said no one in the Dukakis administration is trying to escape criticism for the state's budget problems.

"But the important question to ask is how do we get out of this," he said.

Students from throughout the state, critical in the past of Dukakis, should be more understanding of constraints placed on the governor by the Legislature, Jenifer said. Dukakis, in compliance with state laws, is not allowed to have a deficit at the end of a fiscal year, he said.

Robert Schwartz, special education advisor to Dukakis, said after the 40-minute meeting that Dukakis does not want to make cuts in higher education, but that he is running out of choices as to what to cut.

"We understand that for many colleges and universities, the fat has been cut and then some," Schwartz said. "Anyone who has talked to the governor can see he is not happy with the need for additional cuts."

"The most you can do is deal with it where you can," he said.

Betsey Johnson, a board member of the Amherst Friends of the Homeless, and a co-chairperson for the shelter-opening project, said that while the Amherst/Northampton area presently has provisions for families, single mothers, battered women, and troubled teens, many single, homeless women are turned away from shelters.

"The clearest need was for a shelter for homeless single women, " said Johnson.

Jessie's House, a Northampton shelter for homeless families, published statistics showing that 15 to 30 single women were denied shelter each month from July 1988 to June 1989.

Catherine Bennett, director of Jessie's House, said that because the nature of homeless people has significantly changed, the crisis is now more pronounced than ever.

Ten years ago, the majority of homeless people were single men, but today more families are homeless, she said. Thus, very young children are affected.

"The bulk of the homeless nationally, and in Hampshire County, are all under the age of five," Bennett said.

She said a whole generation will be affected, and she said that she worries where the homeless children of today will be in 10 to 20 years.

Bennet, Boss, and Johnson all agree that the problem of homelessness must be addressed by the entire community, and the nature of homelessness must be better understood.

"There are many people that are homeless that are just like you and me," said Johnson.

"It's a lot of people who just cannot afford the high rents in our area," she said, giving the example of graduate students working for low stipends.

Boss said he hopes Sunday's fund-drive and the shelter project will help raise the awareness of the problem in the area.

"I think through efforts such as this, a sense of consciousness will develop in Amherst," said Boss.

Homeless AIDS victims find shelter in modern-day underground railroad

BOSTON (AP) – A network of private homeowners is taking in homeless AIDS victims, much as the underground railroad helped runaway slaves before the Civil War.

The homes, known as safe houses, are not licensed with the state and their locations are kept secret to protect against threats or evictions.

There are up to six in Boston, and there are five on the North Shore that are part of a group called AIDS Shelters and Hospices.

They probably house fewer than 100 people, but activists in the fight against AIDS say their existence points up the need for special housing for AIDS victims. Activists also say the state is not doing enough.

"I consider it akin to the underground railroad," John Sakowicz, former executive director of AIDS Shelters and Hospices, told The Boston Globe.

AIDS victims are "shuffled from hospital to shelter to home," and are a suffering minority fighting against a system that denies them dignity and independence, he said.

Sakowicz, now executive director of AIDS Project Worcester, said that when neighbors of a North Shore suburban house learned it was used to shelter three people with AIDS, the owner was threatened with arson, and the patients moved.

"Being on the move and homeless is perilous and life-threatening," Sakowicz said of AIDS victims. "They spend one night in the cold alone, and they catch pneumonia. They spend one night in a shelter, and they get tuberculosis."

There are an estimated 15,000 people with the AIDS virus in Massachusetts, and there are expected to be twice as many in 18 months.

Last year, the state allocated $1 million for three residential programs for AIDS patients, but there is no money for new AIDS shelters in the budget for the current fiscal year.

Victims who are healthy enough to live alone or with their families often are not well enough to work full time and must rely on public assistance, activists said.

But, waiting lists for public housing in Massachusetts are up to eight years in some communities, and that is longer than many AIDS victims can expect to live.

Robert Greenwald, law and policy director for the AIDS Action Committee, said dozens of clients list their homes as the streets.

The committee recently applied for money to build a home for AIDS patients under a federal program to build housing for the elderly or handicapped.

The application was rejected last week after the federal Department of Housing and Urban Development said AIDS was not a permanent handicap addressed by the program.

"They believe people with AIDS die to quickly to fit into that program," Greenwald said.

He said the AIDS Action Committee is considering taking legal action against HUD to make people with AIDS eligible for the program.

Activists say that patients who need nursing care must stay in hospitals because alternatives are lacking, and some patients are forced to live in homeless shelters, where they are prone to infections that are life-threatening.

Dow rebounds after plunge

NEW YORK (AP) – The Dow Jones industrial average managed a rebound even as a wave of selling hit Wall Street yesterday in some of the heaviest trading in the history of the New York Stock Exchange.

The Dow average, which represents stock prices of America's 30 biggest industrial companies, was up 52.87 points at 2,622.13 at 2:30 p.m. EDT. The average gyrated wildly in early trading, starting with a decline of about 63 points shortly after the opening bell.

Later in the day, most of the stocks that comprise the Dow average were posting gains as investors snapped up blue-chip issues. Other stocks lagged behind.

The Down Jones average had plunged 190.58 points on Friday in the worst decline since the 508-point Black Monday crash of Oct. 19, 1987. Some had feared yesterday would be a rerun of that Monday two years ago because it had been preceded by a sharp, 100-plus-point drop in the Dow the previous Friday.

By early afternoon, analysts were encouraged that the market so far had avoided that scenerio, but said stock prices were still volatile.

Today, volume was even heavier than on Black Monday, said Richard Torrenzano, the New York Stock Exchange's chief spokesman. About 330 million shares changed hands by 2 a.m., far more than an average day's trading.

WATCH THE CHILDREN PLAY — As guerillas stand by, children play atop a tank which guerillas fighting the Vietnam-installed government destroyed with newly acquired anti-tank weapons. Guerillas guided an Associated Press reporter on a tour of this and two other towns in western Cambodia to show the gains of their biggest victories in 11 years.

de Klerk sparks improvements

'New South Africa' here

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa (AP) — Since becoming president two months ago, F.W. de Klerk has promised repeatedly to seek a "a new South Africa." To an extent, it is here.

In the old South Africa, whites would have not turned on the state-run TV news or looked at pro-government newspapers and seen African National Congress leader Walter Sisulu gazing back, fist raised, a free man.

But yesterday, there was Sisulu, flanked by six colleagues, on TV and the front pages of virtually every daily paper in the country. Their guerilla movement technically remains outlawed, but at a news conference Sunday following their release from long prison terms, they made clear that they were back at work.

The ANC has never lost its hold on support in the black community, but most whites have accepted the government's view that it was a communist-controlled terrorist group, bent on forcible seizure of power and imposition of a one-party system.

Since de Klerk replaced P.W. Botha in August, however, the political climate has changed dramatically. For the first time, the government is openly acknowledging the ANC's broad popularity among blacks, and even relatively conservative whites are beginning to accept the inevitability of negotiations between the guerillas and the government.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The time to act is now

Second of three editorials on the budget cuts

The importance of tomorrow's rally at the Statehouse against the budget cuts is unparalleled in the history of this University.

It is unclear who should hurdle whom to get to the buses at Haigis Mall at 8:30 a.m. tomorrow. Juniors and seniors have seen what the budget cuts — $23.5 million in 27 months (with a possible additional $8 million to come) — have done to this once up-and-coming University. Freshmen and sophomores should recognize that the worst is yet to come.

Students may be wary of leaving the campus for a full day, thus missing classes and other campus activities. But students should acknowledge that the greatest lesson to be learned may be given tomorrow on the Statehouse steps.

However, we feel strongly that Chancellor Duffey, instead of merely asking students to go, give them reason not to fear reprisals in the classroom. The University, if for no other reason than convenience to all who want to go to Boston, should be closed. Furthermore, we feel there is a need for the University to more dramatically express their dilemma.

Given that a closing will not occur, students will hopefully prioritize their Wednesday, getting up bright and early to take a bus to the Statehouse.

Studying a 'major' theory

Now is one of several times in many college students' lives when the thought occurs to consider changing majors.

Another time is tomorrow, and let's not forget the next day.

David R. Mark

When I was a senior in high school, I first discovered the question, "What will I do in college?" to which I responded, "I don't know."

My family consists of a long line of business-types, and as early as age 8 — when I sold weeds as Iowa's state flower and earned $7.63 — people saw in me a future businessman.

Upon arriving at UMass, the natural major — business — appeared out of reach. So off I trotted to economics, with the hope of learning how to hone my skills.

Sometime during my sophomore year, I discovered my talents truly lied in writing. I also realized this career had some earning potential. Alas, it was too late to turn to journalism, English or comparative literature. I was an econ major for life.

Though it has no bearing on my immediate career goals, I have found that I enjoy several facets of economics. Urban economics, the economy of women and the study of underdeveloped nations have sparked my interests. If I should move someday to the world of magazines, I could probably incorporate these interests easily.

Even during an internship at a New Jersey newspaper, I was aided by my knowledge of economics. Business features are a part of my clip file, no doubt because of my background.

Except for the above, however, economics, like any theory-based subject, has no bearing on life.

An example:

In Comparative Economic Systems (Economics 371), we studied theoretical capitalism and its shortcomings.

On Oct. 19, 1987, we were studying the above. The stock market crashed.

Did we look at the real-life example that matched or even superseded the theory?

No.

Why?

Theories are just that — theories. They have little, if any, bearing on real life.

There's no such thing as a "two-product economy." Try to convince a microeconomics professor. We can study the butter and automobiles economy all we want; without bread and gasoline we'll still die of starvation in our Buick, unable to drive to the store.

There are principles to be learned, but without the real-life examples to back the theories, what's the purpose?

Answer: There is none.

But then, why am I still an economics major?

Every major has its drawbacks, just like every major has its strengths. One thing I have learned while at UMass is that the ability to categorize what is necessary and what is not. All unimportant events in my economics books are filed in the short-term memory slot, while the important occurences are saved in the long-term memory banks.

That's how I prevent clogging.

So if you're in a quandary, remember: the grass is always greener on the other side, and what you're interested in and what your major is do not have to be the same thing.

Most times its better if things remain that way.

Set those alarm clocks early!

These are urgent times at UMass. This week, the Massachusetts State House will consider a proposal which would cut UMass' budget by $8 million. With our university already staggering because of previous cuts, UMass can no longer sit idly, as state politicians whittle our school away.

Participation in Wednesday's rally at the State House in Boston is the only way for UMass to establish its' insistence on being a higher state priority and will not tolerate any more budget cuts.

This means that students, faculty and staff must accept responsibility and get on the buses leaving for Boston.

Chancellor Duffey has made it clear to Department Supervisors that he wants professors to encourage students to go. Professors have to alleviate academic obligations on Wednesday so students can participate in the rally. If they don't cancel classes on Wednesday, they may not have classes to cancel next year.

So let's get involved, let's have a good time, let's party in Boston and save our school and our education. Set your alarm clocks early because the buses leave at 8:30 AM. It's time to wake up UMass—WAKE UP!

Relating to our neighbors

I will not harass nor remain silent for those who do.

This is how the University of Connecticut Voluntary Racial Honor Code reads. Simple words. Bluntly stated.

Meredith O'Brien

Last week Paul Bock, Professor of Hydrology and Water Resources at the University of Connecticut, brought a petition to me. He hopes that students here will sign this honor code to show their antipathy toward racism that occurs not only at UConn, but here at the University of Massachusetts.

He presented me with a bit of the history of racial attacks at his school:

"How would you feel if you knew your children were going to college to be spit on, not once, but again and again, by a group who found it amusing, and to have your daughters subjected to violent men pulling down their [the mens'] pants in front of them?"

On December 3, 1987, Asian-American UConn students were on a bus headed for a semi-formal. While on the bus, they were not only verbally abused and intimidated with racial epithets, but physically spit upon by White men from their school.

"Our clothes are still stained with tobacco stain, but they can be removed, but our emotional scars are much deeper and harder to remove," one of the victims said.

John T. Casteen, UConn president, formally responded on May 20, 1988, saying that "our Asian-American students and faculty are correct in their complaints about racial harassment, abuse directed at them by other students, and responses from university leaders to their appeal for support and assistance."

Bock said in a proposal of reforms put forth to the UConn Senate Committee on Discriminatory Harassment, "Racism declines when there is mutual respect for ethnic pluralism and racial diversity. Racism atrophies when there is strong institutional leadership and commitment to openness, fairness, accountability, vigilance, multi-cultural education and affirmative action."

So how does this relate to UMass?

UConn students are not alone in the fight against racism. Just recently, a Black UMass student was not even safe enough to pick up his pizza in the lobby of his dormitory. Three White men used racial slurs while beating him up. Granted, these men are not UMass students, but the fact remains that Black students have to fear physical and mental attacks in the buildings that they live in at this university.

"Racism can be institutionalized. It can be embedded into polices and procedures of institutions like the U.S. government or the University of Connecticut," Bock states.

While the administration here at UMass seems to be doing its best to combat racism and punish those who blatantly act out their bigotry, the UConn administration seems to be ignoring and denying it, at least according to Professor Bock.

But what we need to remember here, at our university, is that not only is racism carried out in violent and vocal manner deplorable, but the subtlteties of racism that lie just below the surface are equally as offensive. Little comments, negative stereotypes might "slip" out of the mouths of fellow students. This too is racism. Though it doesn't physically injure, it does hurt, even in so-called "light" or "subtle" contexts.

Bock does not suggest that his honor code scheme will end racism. The simple idea behind it is to make students think, evaluate and reject racism — not through the passage of statutes or rules mandating that students refrain from acting like bigots. This will not solve any problem of racism.

The voluntary code is just that, voluntary. You can voluntarily commit to not harass other students, nor keeping silent when others do. By looking at UConn's fight with racism, we might just learn something ourselves.

Fear will be used as fuel at rally

As Hillel Council members, we are faced with the obligation to react to the violent, anti-Semitic attack which was committed against three Jewish students at Brooklyn College on October 8th. The correctness of labeling this crime anti-Semitic need not be debated because the special division of the New York City Police Department that deals with racially and ethnically oriented crimes has officially labeled it so. The reason we feel that displaying a reaction extends past desire to the point of obligation and commitment, is that we each feel personally victimized and physically injured by this act.

In addition to the Brooklyn incident, our attention is demanded by a large scale anti-Semitic graffiti incident in Wellesley, even closer (only in the physical sense.) Also, we have since learned of racially motivated assaults on campus. We are certain that the undeniable existence of racism here and the numerous accounts of anti-Semitic defacement and vandalism we've witnessed here conlcude the existence of anti-Semitism at UMass.

Being that anti-Semitism is not highly publicized here and that New York City will elect its next mayor in a few weeks, it is expected that emotion towards the Brooklyn College incident will be stronger down there than here in Amherst. But Elie Wiesel came to speak here, as well as many times in New York and we all saw a high level of emotion, especially on the part of Chancellor Duffey. The question that must naturally follow is: How should we apply Wiesel's teaching to this attack so that everyone on campus reacts with a strong feeling? The single feeling we mean is FEAR — fear of society and fear of ourselves. Elie Wiesel encourages all people of the world to live in fear as he does himself, because sleeping and not being afraid is dangerous.

On Friday, October 20th, we will conduct a rally on the Student Union Steps at noon to protest Jewish oppression and racism. At that time, fear will be used as fuel to power the rally and illuminate the campus so that religious and racial hatred won't be able to hide in even the darkest corners of it.

BOOKS

Author discusses violent youth

Rita Kramer

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

In her book, At a Tender Age: Violent Youth and Juvenile Justice (1988, Henry Holt & Co., $18.95), Rita Kramer offers an account of the New York City Juvenile Justice system as she witnessed it.

It is not a pretty picture.

Though the book describes New York's problems, she said the problems are the same in almost all large urban centers.

Kramer gives several reasons for the hordes of teen-age thieves, rapists, murderers and drug dealers terrorizing our cities:

- An increasing population of unsupervised teen-age males who grow up without parental restraint, without socialization and without sanctions from the local community.
- Drugs. "Drugs mean easy money. These kids can work on the street just as lookouts. Some kids could earn $200 a day. It's hard to tell them to go and sit in school all day," she said.
- A juvenile justice system that fails to help violent youth. "Which is more appropriate for a violent youths: a defense lawyers or a legal guardian? Their [the youths'] legal rights are not always the same as their needs. You have a revolving door policy because cynical kids know they can do as they like and not get touched until they're 16."

Kramer added, "A kid that might have been helped is hurt by the fact that his legal rights are those of an adult."

she said that when trying to find out the details of a crime, juveniles are given the same Miranda rights adults receive. However, "when it comes around to sentencing, the legal arm acts like a social worker."

"If that is all you can do, then in the beginning it would be better not to interpret his legal rights as if you were going to hang him if he were found guilty. It would be better to send him someplace and teach him some discipline," she said.

- A closed court system (sealed criminal records) that Kramer said helps no one. "Who does that protect? Certainly not the community. It doesn't help the kids either, because it is one factor, along with the way they are defended and the disposition [sentencing], that says to kids, 'You can get away with anything and you don't have to be afraid of us. See, it's not so bad to be in court.' These kids are being trained to be adult criminals."
- A school system that is ineffective, partially because too much is demanded of it. "The function of the school is to transmit the common culture, teach them to read and write and what used to be called civics. Now schools are being asked to be parents, social workers – being asked to teach about sex and drugs," she said.

"Schools could do more, and they could do better, but I think it is a mistake to think they can replace the parent," she said.

Kramer said the system has failed because it is obsolete. Laws dealing with today's teen-age rapists and murderers were written more than 25 years ago. She suggests that the generation gap in the laws leaves them powerless against today's teen-age criminals.

The author, who has written about child development and child welfare for more than 20 years, said her aim was to provide the reader with a detailed look at "the system from the inside."

"I've always looked at myself as a translator or a presenter of ideas and facts. I'm not myself a professional psychologist or social worker, but a journalist," she said.

Commercial rap leads to racism and sexism

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

This past summer saw the explosion of rap music. It was greeted with open arms by the media, and money hungry producers looking to cash in on the latest of trends. YO! MTV RAPS gained enough momentum to sign unknown acts in hopes of turning them into stars. A breakthrough in the sense that now young talented Black artists are being given the chance to express themselves and to exercise their art. Even though the only merit on which to measure the success of the program was based on how much money in advertising it raised, at least now MTV is doing something about its colorblindness.

On the other hand YO! MTV RAPS has also become the breeding ground for some talentless "artists" as well. Tone-Loc is a prime example of this. He is truly awful and has written some of the most tasteless music within this medium. To think that this drivel has made millions is further proof that mega-commercialism is built upon untruths, and the utter lack of creativity. Tone-Loc is a bastard for feeding millions of kids false images of Black lifestyles and Black people. He's as whitened as you can get. The women in his videos are straight out of channel zero and have thus become the subject of exploitation. Does he know what he's doing?

ART ATTACK

The first time I saw the video for "Wild Thing" I was appalled. It was so bad it was hurtful rather than laughable. Even if you wanted to shut the lyrics out of your mind, the music would still get to you. It sounded like it was recorded in the same amount of time as the length of the song. Furthermore, the women in the video feed into America's vision of the perfect female object. They're seen and not heard. This guy isn't selling his music, he's selling sex, which is also the theme of the song. The Black women chosen to serve as a backdrop are also very light-skinned, which feeds yet again into the image that the perfect Black person is a White one. For the past four-hundred years whitened Blacks have been favored over dark-skinned Blacks. If a Black artist is going to make a video with Black women, what is wrong with having "true" Black women in them? For how long must us African-Americans have to tolerate such unexcusable ignorance from other African-Americans?

L.L. Cool J is another rap artist who has managed to feed into the White misconception of Black lifestyles. In his video "I'm The Type of Guy," L.L. is breaking into what seems to be a bank to unlock a vault wherein are a dozen or so "Whitened," perfect females. Since I've been brought up in a world where the TV is the reality indicator, I almost bought it. But then one starts to think about the situation provided here and what image that projects. To someone who understands Black culture, L.L is running the risk of confirming Black stereotypes. And to someone who knows nothing of Black culture he's doing exactly that. Picture young South Boston kids saying, "Look at that Nigger breaking into a bank." Even worse, picture young Black kids trying to emulate him. A suggestion I would have made if on the set would have been to change the gangster image into one of a spy. There's nothing wrong with having a Black James Bond.

I don't understand how such run-of-the-mill artists can be so blind that they can't see the racism and sexism they've projected in their music and in their videos. I have discussed this matter with Black women and they have seen it in the same light. These media figures have given into the stereotyping that is a threat to the moral fiber of our community.

The same could be said about N.W.A. It saddens me to hear and see some of our Black youth leading lives of crime and drug abuse because they heard it being glorified on a record. But N.W.A are different in the sense that that lifestyle was once a reality for them and they feel it important to provide for all communities a document of the ghetto and the horrible conditions under which some are forced to endure. Whereas with Tone-Loc and L.L. Cool J. it is supposed to be fantasy. Unfortunately, it is this fantasy that is all too often confused with reality.

A farewell to Python Graham Chapman

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

> "No one enjoys a good laugh more than I do . . . except maybe my wife . . and maybe some of my men . . come to think of it, most everyone enjoys a good laugh more than I do."
> —from Monty Python's Flying Circus

The character who said that, an officer in the British Army, was one of the creations of Python "straight man" Graham Chapman, who died last week at age 48.

He wasn't a true straight man, he could be as silly as any other member of the troupe, and got his share of laughs. What made him so interesting, however, was the fact that he would do the silliest things with a straight face. His subtlety provided a strong balance to the "fall guys" of the Pythons—Eric Idle, Michael Palin and Terry Jones. One sketch that showed this contrast involved Jones and Palin as mobsters trying to get protection money from the British army. The sketch abruptly ends as Chapman's character, an army officer, complains that he didn't have any funny lines and decided the sketch was too silly.

Another army officer sketch involved Chapman chasing after the rest of the cast whenever anyone spoofed the slogan, "It's a Man's Life in the British Army." Decidedly silly, but with Chapman's straight face.

It seems that Chapman's finest hours were with Python. He was quite versatile with his characters, from military men, to old ladies in London to an agnostic blowing up an Anglican church with a ballistic missile.

He was perhaps most famous for his roles in two of the Python movies, King Arthur in Monty Python and the Holy Grail and the "prophet" Brian in Monty Python's Life of Brian. In both films, he played to perfection the beleaguered leader surrounded by looney followers, and faced with strange adversaries.

You may get a last opportunity to see Chapman later in the year, for Monty Python's twentieth anniversary special, filmed three weeks ago.

Fantastic French film is fresh, fun and forlorn

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Correspondent

La Boheme
New Yorker Films
Tower Theaters

La Boheme is a wonderful French film which illustrates the pain of love, and of growing old in an impoverished situation. Barbara Hendricks is the main character and she does a fine job as her plight evolves throughout the movie, her role changing with the situation.

The movie begins with Hendricks alone in her small lifeless apartment. Her expression reflects absence and loneliness as she listens to the lively young men next door talk playfully of the future. When three of the men set off, the fourth, a poet, is left behind and Hendricks makes her move to end the loneliness she endures.

MOVIE REVIEW

Although it develops well up to this point, the film then becomes boring as the two strangers pledge undying love to one another after a short song and dance. Following this, the four romance the town, embellishing in their youth, in spite of their poverty.

All of this pointless frolicking passes rather quickly, as the film eases into a much different tone. Mimi's relationship with the poet, Rodolpho,falls apart. Rodolfo leaves her as he is afraid to suffer losing her to disease. She follows after him not to escape loneliness, but to maintain their love. Even in her sickly state she drudges far and long to rekindle their love, and the two decide to break up in the spring when they are stronger.

They separate in spring and Rodolfo thinks of her constantly, his only joy is their memories. Finally, the two are reunited. Hendricks takes on a much different role at this point, which she plays as well as the others. Rodolfo's character dominates in the end and the reunion is violently painful. All that Rodolpho supressed in the past comes out now, as he is brought to his knees, with the loss doubly as painful as it would have been had he not been such a coward.

La Boheme reflects life and the tradgedy that accompanies it. It becomes very powerful, and the contrast with the earlier setting, which is young, without despair, and ultimately boring to view, is very effective. True to life, La Boheme is humorous throughout. And, as with any good tale, it is rich with conflict and ultimately tragic.

Bill the Cat's last gasp is full of hairballs

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Correspondent

This is nearly sacriligious for a Bloom County fan to write, but Berke Breathed's new book is on the whole not that funny. Like the last year or so of the comic, it lacks the famous wry satire which distinguished it from similar cartoons like Doonesbury.

It isn't as banal and stupid as the cartoon starring an orange cat who is now on nearly every lunch box, poster and Happy Meal in the free world yet it isn't of the same quality of earlier books like Toons For Our Times or Penguin Dreams and Stranger Things.

When he announced that he was "retiring" the cartoon, Breathed explained that he was burned out, and afraid that if he tried to keep publishing, the quality of the Bloom County strip would degrade, much like other long-running cartoons (veiled reference to a certain orange cat cartoon). After a series such as Rosebud the pregnant basselope, he must have realized it was time to take a break.

There are some great cartoons in this book, and of course, Opus the gullible yet loveable penguin, has the best lines. The series when Opus decides he wants to start smoking is alone worth buying the book. "Two-and-a-half billion smokers worldwide must know something we don't," he says to Milo. "They can°t all be dinks. Plus, it helps out farmer friends in southern tobacco-producing states."

Milo replies to the audience, "Looks like 'ol pudding-for-brains is on Jesse Helms' mailing list."

The oblivious penguin rattles on, "The anti-smoking forces are KGB-funded."

BOOK REVIEW

One radical change in the cast of characters is Steve Dallas, the conservative penguin-hating attorney, who is now a "Jackson progressive" after his brain was transreversed by aliens. He is now a permed-haired yuppie, rather than a smoking, sunglass-wearing cruiser. His schtick with his mother is also worth buying the book.

In one of Breathed's last great series, he breaks new ground with his parody on the inane drug war. Oliver, while trying to develop a new deodorant, accidentally concocts a potion that grows hair. It is wildly successful, the surgeon general outlaws it, and, of course, the price goes up astronomically. Milo writes the government, "Dear Feds, Thank you so much for the price supports for our little business. If you ever need help with your hairline, you know where to go! Sincerely, Milo."

Presently, Breathed publishes the abysmally humorless Outland cartoon, which runs only on Sunday. It stars Ronald-Ann, a six-year-old (who explains to Binkley that she was born on Election Day 1980, "and in a fit of unbridled, patriotic optimism, my mother named me after him." She reflects for a moment and quickly follows with, "There has been the occasional second thought." "Say no more," Milo replies.)

In a world populated by a right wing groundhog, a neurotic flightless waterfowl and a jealous child prodigy, who calls Cambridge physicist Stephen Hawking to complain that, "If he were any dumber he'd be Gomer Pyle." She is the only Beacon of Sanity.

For those who have the other five Bloom County books, you will probably want to get this one as well. But be forewarned, you might be disappointed.

Winter Hours turn up the heat on a cold night

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Correspondent

Winter Hours
Pearl Street
Saturday, Oct. 14

REVIEW

Pearl Street was a haven Saturday night, as Winter Hours warmed away the damp chill left by the stormy weather outside. The band plays pensive, rebellious, down home rock 'n' roll. Joseph Marques, lead lyricist sings with a soft, smooth voice about his personal experiences, and thoughts (often about the environment). For instance when Marques wrote "Roadside Flowers" he said he was thinking about flowers whose seeds came over here from Europe on people's boots and belongings, he added, they would take to any climate and just grow on the side of the road. Additionally Marques said "It's about the environment and how it affected me personally."

"Roadside flowers," "Familiar Places," and "Broken Little Man" all have a country beat. The band even has a country look, all five wore cowboy boots at the Pearl Street show. In addition, their songs tell a story in the tradition of country music. At one time the big difference between country and rock music besides the rhythm was the story told in country songs. Rock has evolved, and isn't as thoughtless as it once seemed, but country overtones still appear in this rock bands sound. Their music wasn't all the same however, and many of their songs weren't country at all. And Joseph Marques' stage performance was in great contrast to country music as he fell victim to the music, his body twisting and curving so slowly, and then shimmying across the stage with the mike. He looked almost too feminine, in this totally enveloped state. Adding to his femininity was his beautifully, long curly hair, that any girl would envy.

Winter Hours were hot at Pearl Street

Even with this, he came off as a very sexy musician. My favorite song was "Stay with Me," as Marques gazed into the audience, and pleaded passionately "Stay with Me there'll be better times."

Although they played mostly their own music they answered a cry of "just play it" with a good rendition of The Stones' "It's only rock 'n' roll." In appreciation the crowd cheered. Although the weather kept the masses away the response of those there was good.

Winter Hours play down home rock 'n' roll. Their spirit is inspirational and yields a good feeling. They model themselves after Dylan, and middle-period Stones, however their performance left me with that peaceful easy feeling that I sometimes get from the Eagles.

Maybe he should place a call to Lester Hayes: UConn cornerback Rusty Neal probably should have stayed in bed all week. Last weekend he was arrested for drunk driving and suspended for one game by UConn coach Tom Jackson.

After sitting out the six-OT loss to Villanova, Neal started Saturday's game, and managed to do the following:

- Watched flanker Mike Tobin blow by him as tailback Jerome Bledsoe threw a halfback option pass for a touchdown. Neal couldn't have caught Tobin if he'd hopped aboard a Concorde.
- Bobbled a reverse handoff on a punt return that Lance Neveling recovered. UMass scored twice in the last minute to take a 26-20 halftime lead.
- Tried to down a Fay punt at the 1-foot line, but had it squirt through his hands, bounce off his foot and roll into the end zone for a touchback.

Nice fitting name. Rusty.

Update from the local M*A*S*H unit: Nothing new to report here. Blauvelt may still be out Saturday with his ankle sprain. Tight end Ron Villone is also doubtful with an ankle sprain.

Around the Yan Con: Maine, ranked sixth in the nation, remained unbeaten with a 47-21 win over Rhode Island. Delaware, which comes to town this weekend, lost to Villanova, 20-11. New Hampshire outlasted Colgate, 17-10. Boston University lost to 13th-ranked Bill and Mary, 13-10. Richmond had the week off.

Quote of the Week: Uttered by Jackson after his team lost in six overtimes to Villanova the week before. The UConn coach wasn't exactly in a singing mood heading into Saturday's game.

"Losing in overtime is like having your heart torn out with a dull butter knife," Jackson said. "I'm just hoping we won't do an East coast version of the Tony Bennett song and leave our hearts in Philadelphia."

Gaudette (6-6-18) and Eynard (5-3-13) have been able to keep the pressure on opposing goalkeepers, with both averaging five shots on net per game.

A key addition back in the UMass lineup will be freshman Lisa Mickelson. Sidelined for about the last week with a hip injury, Mickelson will see some time before the upcoming crucial weekend.

"We're going to give Lisa a little bit of time," Rudy said. "We'll try to work her back in."

One of Harvard's best game of the year was their William and Mary loss in a tough 2-0 game.

"They held them until the last minute as I understand," Rudy said. One thing's for certain, Rudy understands how the Reds will have to play hard until that final minute runs out.

Intramural notices

The track meet, rescheduled because of rain, will be held today at 12:30 p.m., weather permitting.

The intramural office is still accepting entries for volleyball teams.

A meeting for all volleyball managers will be held tomorrow and Wednesday. Managers must attend at least one of these meetings.

A meeting for anyone interested in officiating volleyball games will be held tomorrow and Wednesday.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Seeking revenge is a waste of time. Adopt a more positive approach. Weigh the odds carefully before making a far-reaching decision. Further research could lead to a more exciting career.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Cooperation is the key to making pet projects successful. Hide your contempt for difficult people. You could be hailed as a hero if you play your cards right. Do not reveal trade secrets.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may prefer to be compensated with cash instead of favors now. Rivals can make it hot for those who are in charge. If traveling today, you will find a new friend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Resist the temptation to throw your weight around; it will only antagonize others. A calm, mature approach becomes you best. Your social life accelerates. Romance holds promise.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22): You are acutely aware of a power struggle within the family circle. Be careful not to become involved in someone's machinations. You and your mate enjoy better rapport than in the recent past.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22): Try not to make any rash decisions. It is pointless to brood over past mistakes. In a financial pinch, consider refinancing your home or borrowing against an insurance policy.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22): Look your best today. A friend's careless remark could upset your partner. They will work out their differences if you do not interfere. Travel plans may fall apart. Have an alternative in mind.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21): Put your house in order and your productivity will rise. You and your mate reach an important agreement. Joint holdings could be involved. You may decide to continue your education. Seek financial aid.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21): You can profit from combining your business acumen with an interest in the arts. An aggressive parent or authority figure demands more of your time. Tensions rise. Avoid squabbling.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19): Someone close to you is trying to deceive you. Get a clearer perspective by heeding the advice of one who lives far away. You could become involved in politics in the near future.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18): Tackle the toughest tasks first today. Financial considerations could dictate an important decision. If you are planning a trip, contact a travel agent for the best possible deal.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20): Teamwork is necessary today. Make the most of every moment. Marital harmony can be restored. Keep your spending in check. Romance plays a major role in your plans.

When showed a copy of the printed quote Hilson said, "That is a lie!"

The Northeast fight began about 2:30 a.m. Sunday on Thatcher Way, when three people, who were not UMass students, pulled up behind a students's car, police said. A fight erupted and one student was thrown to the ground and repeatedly punched and kicked, police said. In the story the assaulted student was first identified by police as an African-American.

Another fight began about one hour earlier the same night outside the lobby of John Quincy Adams dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area. A Black freshman leaving the lobby with a pizza was assaulted and called racist names.

The story was published on page one with a headline which read, "Two Black Students beaten, Director of Public Safety calls attacks 'racially motivated.'"

Hilson said he did not have time to dispute the quote before yesterday.

Minutewomen hit the road to Holy Cross

Last-minute change switches home match

By C.J. ABATI
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team will travel to Worcester this afternoon to take on the Crusaders of Holy Cross. The match was originally scheduled as a home match for the Minutewomen, but there was a last minute change.

The change was made at the request of Holy Cross coach Oscar Nejurian. Last season, the Crusaders came to Amherst for both matches with the Minutewomen. Nejurian requested the site change and UMass complied. The match is scheduled for a 3 p.m. start in Worcester.

The Crusaders recently finished second in the Metro-Atlantic Athletic Conference tournament, so they should prove to be a tough team to beat. Holy Cross has also played Providence College, and lost by a 6-3 score. Providence and UMass met earlier in the season, with the Friars winning that match as well.

The line up in the top four spots for the Crusaders is very impressive. In the top singles spot is Brenda Flannagan. Behind Flannagan in the number two spot is Cindy Burke. Burke won the number two singles title in the Metro-Atlantic tournament. Tracy Poirier and Kelly Lee follow up respectivly at the number three and four singles spots. Flannagan and Poirier teamed up to take the number one doubles title in the tournament.

UMass coach Edwin Gentzler will have to motivate his team if they are to pull off a much needed victory. A win will bring their record to an even 5-5, and gain some momentum for the upcomming New England tournament.

came out and held the Brown offense to only one fastbreak goal in the game. However, UMass was unable to get its own offense on track and trailed after each quarter, 3-1, 5-2, 9-4, and finally 10-6.

Jon Miller and Brian McIver led UMass with two goals each while Alex Yelensky and Adam Feldman each scored once.

Carl Johnson came up with 10 saves and played what Yarworth described as a great game. At one point UMass was two men short and Brown came down with a 6-on-4 break only to be thwarted by Johnson on two spectacular saves. "Those were two unbelievable plays," said Yarworth. "They kept us in the game in the fourth quarter."

16th ranked Army brought its high powered offense against the Minutemen on Sunday. Using a slow down offense in hopes of caging the high flying Army attack UMass found itself down 4-0 at the end of the first period. "Freezing the ball, all that was doing was lulling us to sleep," said Yarworth.

After the opening stanza he turned his troops loose and they battled back after three periods, down only 7-5. They didn't have enough gas to finish however, losing the fourth quarter 2-1 to create the final 8-6 score.

Eagles run over Owls for first win of year

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time this season Coach Jack Bicknell and his Boston college Eagles were able to laugh after a game.

And, miles away in central Massachusetts, Coach Dave Secino welcomed an obligatory dousing by his Fitchburg State Falcons.

"It wasn't an artistic performance, but a win is a win and we got the monkey off our backs," Bicknell said Saturday after the Eagles, 1-4, ended a victory drought by whipping winless Temple 35-14.

Secino, who had banned radios and loud talk on the bus rides to practice during the week, was able to celebrate with his Falcons for the first time since Sept. 21, 1985.

Fitchburg State ended the country's longest college football losing streak at 36 games by scoring 26 points in the second half for a 33-7 victory over Southern Massachusetts.

Secino, who has a 2-48 record as Fitchburg State's first and only football coach when not at work as a downtown tailor, feared for the goalposts at the Falcon's temporary home field at Monty Tech High School. Then he spotted the players getting the bucket of Gatorade ready.

"These kids, they're just not used to this," the coach said. "I saw them coming and I said, 'What the hell.' I turned my back and braved the cold."

Boston College introduced a new quarterback, junior Willie Hicks. He had just an average game, but the Eagles' defense dominated Temple's 0-7 Owls with four interceptions and two fumble recoveries.

Kicker Brian Low booted three field goals and two conversions to become BC's all-time top scorer with 223 points while junior Tim Frager ran for two touchdowns.

Holy Cross, which had won 12 consecutive games in Division I-AA, moved up in class and was knocked from the unbeaten ranks in a 45-9 thumping by Army. The Cadets rolled up 493 yards on the ground in embarrassing the Crusaders, who dropped to 5-1.

Maine, Bridgewater State, Lowell and Williams extended perfect records with easy victories.

Carl Smith ran for 245 yards and one touchdown, as Maine off to its best start since 1965, improved its record to 7-0, 5-0 in the Yankee Conference.

Women's soccer ready to take on the Crimson

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team will travel to Cambridge to play Harvard today.

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

As the regular season nears the end with five games remaining, the University of Massachusetts has to be considered one of the best teams in the nation. The Reds were ranked eighth by the ISAA last week, and awaits the release of the latest poll today. The Reds (9-2-2) have not lost a game since the third game of the season against Vermont. That makes it over a month ago since UMass has been on the losing end of a final score.

In the two best games of the year, UMass produced come-from- behind ties against Connecticut and Central Florida. Sophomore Michele Woodside came through in the clutch, coming off the bench to score both the game-tying goals.

UMass will have to do well in its this weekend, playing against fifth-ranked William and Mary and fifteenth-ranked North Carolina State in the William and Mary Tournament. Connecticut, the No. 1 team in New England and the fourth-ranked team overall, will be the fourth and final team in Williamsburg.

The possibility looms that if the Reds win both its games and UConn splits its matches, UMass will vault ahead of the Lady Huskies in both the region and the nation.

But hold your horses, the Reds have to get past Harvard University this afternoon before flying south.

An underrated team with a 3-5-1 record, the Ivy Leaguer has shown that its record is quite deceiving. Examining their showings so far, the Crimson has lost to Vermont and UConn by respective 1-0 and 2-0 scores.

Most recently on Saturday, Harvard upset Cornell 1-0 and will be on a high on their home turf to upset another quality team.

"It was a pretty good win for them," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "We only beat Cornell 2-1 [in the fourth game of the season]. They're a very physical, hard-nosed team. They put UConn under a lot of pressure."

Evaluating the Crimson, Rudy said that sophomore Robin Johnston is their top forward. The forward has scored five goals and assisted on another in nine games.

"In the midfield Tracey Hackeling is a very solid player," Rudy said. "She's big and is decent in the air. She plays physical and tackles hard."

The defensive duo of Tara Weinstock and Andrea Montalbano could present some problems for the UMass forwards. Rudy said, "Weinstock is very quick, has good skills, and likes to come forward. Montalbano has been an All-New England sweeper for some time now."

Those two will certainly be busy trying to keep a check on April Kater, Sue Gaudette, and Kim Eynard. Kater has already passed her scoring mark of last season (20 points) with 8 goals and 7 assists, and has worked well with the two forwards up front.

Minutemen take Eastern Championships

Smith, Corso, Livorsi, Ryan lead the way

By JON REIDEL
Collegian Staff

It had been eight years since men's cross country coach Ken O'Brien had sent his top five runners to the Eastern Conference Championships.

It had also been eight years since his team had won the E.C.C's.

Last Saturday at Smithfield, R.I., O'Brien and his team laid both of those streaks to rest by placing its top five runners in the race's first eleven overall finishers to easily outpoint runner-up Lowell University by a score of 34 to 73.

Keene State, who was expected to give the Minutemen some trouble, came in third just behind Lowell with a score of 78. The University of Vermont(110) was fourth and the University of Maine(118) was fifth, followed by a host of other schools.

O'Brien, who usually opts to rest up his better runners for the Atlantic 10 and New England Championships the following two weekends, felt this year's team needed some extra racing experience.

"I felt that we needed some more racing experience," said O'Brien. "As well as some momentum going into the bigger championship meets. Our best performance came at a good time. We certainly kicked off the championship month on the right foot."

Going into the meet the Minutemen knew there were only a handful of runners who could beat any of there top five.

Fortunately no unexpected harriers pulled any surprises. Senior Art Smith led the way with a third place overall finish in a time of 25:38.

Impressive bunching of the next four Minutemen, something that hadn't happened in the previous three races, was definitely the key to the victory."

"Everyone raced pretty well," said O'Brien. "We had a lot of people finish close together. We couldn't beat every individual that we could have. I couldn't have asked for a better day."

Jon Corso and Joe Livorsi were only two and three places behind Smith in fifth and sixth places in times of 26:05 and 26:09 respectively.

Closing out the top five for UMass were Pat Ryan in ninth place in a time of 26:34 and senior Herb Heffner in 11th place in 26:45.

Although they didn't figure into the scoring Mike Davis and James Chute finished impressively in 16th and 17th places. Both could very well figure into the scoring in the next few weeks.

Next weekend the Minutemen will venture to historic Van Cortland Park in New York City for the prestigious Atlantic 10 Championships featuring nationally ranked (14th) Penn State.

Only weeks ago the Minutemen ran neck and neck with Penn State for three miles before falling off the pace. But now, although only two weeks later, the Minutemen have proven they are much stronger.

"We took a major step up this weekend," said O'Brien. The timing was great, we're really coming together. Everything we've been working on in practice is starting to come together in the races. The team is starting to crystalize."

Polo loses 2 out of 3

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE

The University of Massachusetts water polo team lost two out of three games this past weekend to finish in fourth place in the Eastern Varsity Tournament at the Naval Academy. The Minutemen (7-8) beat Bucknell 10-4 and lost to Brown and Army by scores of 8-6 respectively.

Against Bucknell UMass sprinted out to a 3-0 first period lead and stretched it to 10-4 late in the contest before Bucknell countered with two late scores.

"We pretty much dominated them," said coach Russ Yarworth. "It was a good way to start the weekend."

GT Ladd finally did what Yarworth has asked of him all season. "He played up to his potential," said Yarworth. His potential was good enough to rack up four goals, one assist and draw three knockouts.

In goal, Todd Larson got the call and responded with 13 saves. "Our goalies played great all weekend," said Yarworth.

Despite winning, the Minutemen suffered through a poor shooting afternoon (10-25), a distressing pattern that held true throughout the weekend. "We shot poorly against Bucknell and it plagued us all weekend long," said Yarworth.

UMass lost to Brown for the second time this year, dropping a tough 10-6 contest. Earlier this season Brown won by a 11-7 score which was misleading because they played their B-team the entire second half against the Minutemen.

"This time around we made them play an entire game," said Yarworth. "We played a good game. I was pleased with what the kids did."

Using what Yarworth termed "significantly better effort" UMass

Hard work pays off for UM quarterback

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Looking at him, at a lanky 6-foot-1 and 175 pounds, it would be hard to imagine Gary Wilkos as the starting quarterback of the University of Massachusetts football team.

And anyone who watched Wilkos during the team's spring intrasquad scrimmage would probably agree.

Now, two full games into his collegiate career, he's done a lot to dispel all the doubts. He has ran and passed his way to Yankee Conference Rookie-of-the-Week each of the last two weeks, as well as similar honors from the ECAC this week. Not bad for someone listed fourth on the depth chart entering preseason.

Last season, Wilkos sat out as a freshman redshirt, mainly because of a ruptured disc in his back that was so painful he often had to lie down in class.

"He didn't do anything last fall, and then in the spring he screwed up so bad we moved him down to number five [on the depth chart]," UMass coach Jim Reid said. "In the preseason, there wasn't a finer conditioned athlete in terms of endurance and strength gained."

The turnaround is the result of a summer's worth of hard work, lifting and running. Wilkos came back to Amherst in fine shape, able to run a 4.7-second 40-yard dash. It is this speed, along with a solid arm, which has given rebirth to the UMass option.

"Someone told me he could run a 4.7 and I said 'get outta here," Reid said. "Then he ran four in a row."

Wilkos often finds that, because of his size, opponents doubt his ability as well.

"One hundred percent of the people underestimate me, because I'm so thin," Wilkos said. "Each week, I'm just going to get more confident out there — I'll feel like a veteran."

Which doesn't bode well for future opponents. After debuting in a loss to Boston University two weeks ago, Wilkos made his first start against Rhode Island last Saturday. He completed 9 of 16 passes for 149 yards, and ran for 75 more out of the option before suffering bruised ribs which held him out of practice early last week.

But he didn't show it Saturday, completing 19 of 29 passes for 244 yards and three touchdowns. He hit on a pair of touchdown passes in the last minute of the first half and then found Chip Mitchell with 38 seconds left to tie the game and force overtime. He also scored on a 6-yard run in the first quarter.

UMass lost in overtime to Connecticut, 39-33, and Wilkos was upset with himself over a fumble and an interception that led to UConn touchdowns in the first half. But the lanky kid from Staten Island, N.Y. did plenty to establish himself as a player to watch in the future.

Getting a hold on things: Reid credited backup quarterback Tom Fasano for the job he did holding for extra points in Saturday's loss.

"Tom Fasano did a great job bringing down the high snaps," Reid said. "With our first two holders out, it was kind of shaky."

Flanker Ron Blauvelt is the normal holder for kicker Marco Gabrielli, but he was sidelined with a sprained ankle. Then backup holder Roger Baldacci left the team last week.

We're checking with the NCAA . . .. Unofficially, there may have been two records set during Saturday's game, each of dubious distinction. Here are the gory details.

During the fourth quarter, Husky punter Sean Fay must have watched his life flash before his eyes as he saw a wall of white jerseys coming toward him.

Upon watching the films, UM assistant coach Tom 'Waxy' Cullen confirmed the achievement. "Most players roughing the kicker simultaneously: 5." No one else ever remembers seeing anything like that, and reportedly the coaches were still chuckling over it yesterday morning.

In our other category, "Most yards penalized, one player, single play," UConn linebacker Troy Ashley gets this one. The rough-and-tough Ashley did have a game-high 18 tackles, but was whistled for three clipping penalties.

Following the third one, Ashley voiced his displeasure and was tagged with back-to-back unsportsmanlike flags, for a grand total of 45 yards in all. Fortunately for he and his team, the last two could only be measured half the distance to the goal line, slicing the "to the rear march" total to 36 yards.

San Francisco earthquake kills at least 200

Measures 6.9 on the Richter scale; causes section of Bay Bridge to collapse

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — A major earthquake rocked Northern California on Tuesday, killing at least 200 people and injuring 400, caving in a section of the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge, igniting fires and causing widespread damage to buildings.

The World Series game was postponed and 60,000 fans were forced to evacuate Candlestick Park.

The quake, which registered 6.9 on the Richter scale and struck at 5:04 p.m., was centered about 10 miles north of Santa Cruz and about 65 miles south of San Francisco.

President Bush said Tuesday night that the federal government was prepared to send help to the earthquake area in California and was sending Transportation Secretary Samuel Skinner there to assess the damage.

The quake was felt as far away as Reno, Nev., 225 miles to the northeast; as far north as the Russian River area, 70 miles to the north; 180 miles southeast in Fresno and 120 miles due east in Stockton. All those areas registered reports that they felt the quake strongly.

Lt. Gov. Leo McCarthy said a section of Interstate 880 in Oakland had caved in, killing at least 40 people who were in their cars.

Six people were crushed to death in their cars when part of an old four-story brick building toppled onto the vehicles on Bluxome Street in San Francisco, said Police Lt. Jerry Kilroy.

One person died of a heart attack and four people were injured in San Jose, 50 miles south of San Francisco, according to Willis Jacobs of the National Earthquake Information Center in Golden, Colo.

San Francisco Mayor Art Agnos' press secretary, Eileen Mahoney, said as many as 20 people had been injured at a fire in the Marina section. Another fire was blazing near downtown Berkeley.

A 30-foot section of the San Francisco-Oakland Bay Bridge collapsed and there were reports of fire and damage in the city.

The earthquake shook Candlestick Park at about 30 minutes before Game Three of the World Series was to be played Tuesday night. No major injuries were reported.

The stadium swayed and fans screamed as the tremor lasted about 15 seconds. The players from both the Oakland Athletics and the San Francisco Giants were on the field and stood around as fans began to leave their seats.

The power in the stadium was knocked out and phone lines were briefly disturbed. A few minutes later, some aftershocks rumbled through the park as the crowd buzzed.

"The game couldn't be started because a power transformer is out," commissioner Fay Vincent said. "We have to wait to see if the power comes back on. We're not going to start the game unless we get lights."

ABC, which was on the air from Candlestick Park at the time, announced they lost the feed from their truck at the stadium.

The network was doing its pre-game show when announcer Al Michaels said: "There's an..." and the picture was lost.

The first aid station at Candlestick reported that a few people were hit by falling debris and were being treated. None of the injuries were said to be serious.

The press box shifted as the initial tremor hit. There was an announcement to clear the upper deck, but most of the fans remained.

Baseball officials and players remained on the field while it was being determined what to do.

Giants catcher Terry Kennedy said the immediate reaction by players from both teams was nervous laughter and remarks. But the seriousness of the situation became clear when the field started to rumble.

"We found out where the priorities of life are," Kennedy said. "The World Series doesn't mean anything compared to what happened in this city tonight. People were hurt and people lost their homes, it makes me feel sick."

Brett incident probed

By DAN SARAZEN

Housing and resident education officals are investigating an incident that occurred at Brett House that may be homophobic.

Police responded to a call early Saturday morning concerning a fight on the cultural diversity floor, according to Dr. Arthur Hilson, director of Public Safety.

Larry Moneta, associate director for Residential Education and Housing Services said, "If we can prove that this was an incident based on homophobia, we will act accordingly. Right now we are trying to separate fact from fiction."

Police reported a shouting match between students on the fourth floor and someone outside the building, in which the term "faggot," was used, Hilson said. Police witnessed no physical violence, but found a trail of blood leading from the ground level up to the fourth floor.

The Resident Director Khandi Bourne and Resident Assistant Christina Linehan told students in the building not to talk to anyone about the alleged fight, according to Brett residents.

Bourne would not confirm whether she told students this, but said that all judicial actions are confidential and not subject to discussion.

"I can't talk about it. I was told by the R.A. and the R.D. not to," said one student who would not give his name but said he was a witness to a fight.

The student did say, however, he thought the incident was "more than two guys fighting." About whether the fight was homophobic related, he said, "That played

Protestors question Hilson's response

By SARAH DEMASTER

A group of more than 40 students and faculty gathered at the Student Union steps Tuesday to protest the University of Massachusetts police's reaction to two allegedly racist attacks on two UMass students.

"We are disgusted by the fact that the police did not arrest the assailants, despite plenty of witnesses," said Brian Tremblay, chairperson of the Organization for Marxist Studies.

The rally, sponsored by the Young Communist League and the OMS, occurred despite Arthur Hilson's statement that a person can't be arrested simply because witnesses alleged the person assaulted someone else.

The alleged racially motivated attacks occurred in Northeast and Southwest residential areas last week.

Carey Feldman, a UMass sophomore, said the rally was also held to protest the administration's prior handling of racial incidents.

"The administration has not in the past made an effort toward pluralism," Feldman said. "It's pretty obvious we do not have racial unity [at UMass]."

Guest speaker John Bracey, professor of African-American studies at UMass, said the budget cuts have a direct effect on racial tensions on campus.

Budget explained

Capital outlay. Building Authority. Maintenance appropriations.

These terms probably mean nothing to the average University of Massachusetts student, but they are essential to understanding the current budgetary problems facing the University.

Joyce Hatch, Campus Budget officer at UMass, said that many of the students she has talked to have misconceptions about how the state allocates money to the University.

Hatch said students commonly ask why the state is committing $25 million for the construction of the new Mullins Convocation Center, which will house an ice hockey rink and a basketball court, and a further $15.4 million to install a new phone and cable television system as part of the Telecommunications Project.

Suspect to face court hearing

Hilson urges D.A. to prosecute for civil rights violations

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

An eastern Massachusetts man is scheduled to appear at a hearing Nov. 6 to determine if there is enough evidence to charge him with assault and battery stemming from the beating of a Black University of Massachusetts student in the Southwest Residential Area.

> "Our job is not to determine guilt or innocence. Everyone should have their day in court."
> -Arthur Hilson

Dr. Arthur Hilson, director of Public Safety, said William F. Reposa, of Arlington, who was given a trespass notice by police immediately after the incident on Oct. 8., is scheduled to appear at Northampton District Court to answer the charges.

Hilson said he also asked the District Attorney last week to press civil rights violation charges against Reposa. The District Attorney is still in the process of evaluating the case and has not yet added the charge, he said.

Hilson, reading from a police report, said an African-American student was leaving the lobby of John Quincy Adams Residence Hall with a pizza about 1:30 a.m. on Oct 8. when three White men demanded a slice.

The student refused, and was verbally assaulted and called "nigger," according to Hilson. The student then confronted the men and was thrown to the ground and beaten, he said.

Hilson said the alleged assailant was not arrested because police did not witness the crime and were told conflicting stories of the incident.

"I would love to arrest [the people] who are clear offenders of the law," he said. "Our job is not to determine guilt or innocence. Everyone should have their day in court."

He said the victim's friend will be the only witness at the 10 a.m. hearing.

The police arrived after the fight and stopped five people for questioning: the three white males who are not UMass students, the victim and the victim's friend, Hilson said.

The victim identified the alleged assailant and the police gave the three white males trespass notices and ordered them to leave the campus, he said.

Police brought the the Black student to University Health Services where he was treated for cuts to the face and hands.

Student says fight involved ethnic slurs

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

A Puerto Rican student who was involved in the Oct. 8 fight in the Northeast Residential Area said yesterday that although the dispute did not begin as a racial confrontation, one of the alleged assailants verbally abused him by calling him "Spic."

The alleged assailant proceeded to taunt Jose Ruiz and shout other verbal abuses at him, who was accompanying a Caucasian friend. The friend was physically assaulted.

Ruiz said he did not report the racial slurs to the police immediately after the incident because he was more concerned about ensuring that his friend's injuries were treated. He filed a harassment complaint with the UMass police Oct 12.

The UMass police stopped the alleged assailants for speeding later that morning. The three men will be summoned to appear at a show-cause hearing Nov. 6 to determine if there is sufficient evidence to charge them with assault and battery, UMass police said.

Ruiz said the dispute began when his friend pulled his car onto Thatcher Way to drop a woman at her dormitory. A car drove up behind them and "three loud males" began complaining about his friend's driving, he said. "I told [my friend] to keep cool because they sounded like they had been drinking," he said. "They were looking for trouble."

Ruiz said he and his friend got out of their car and confronted the men. The two men knocked his friend to the ground and punched and kicked him, Ruiz said.

Another of the alleged assailants noticed Ruiz' accent and began shouting racial abuses and pushing him, he said.

Ruiz said that after he helped his friend up from the ground, they both ran into a dormitory and called the police.

Radio talk show guest arrested

Raymond Allain, 38, of Northampton, was arrested Monday in the Campus Center on charges of trespassing after notice, police said. Allain was discussing military-funded research on WMUA and police arrested him after the radio show.

Police served Allain a trespass notice last May after he was arrested following a building occupation protesting Department of Defense-financed research at the University of Massachusetts.

- The sensitive crimes unit is investigating a report that a woman was harassed and assaulted three times since Saturday night by the same assailant, police said. She was last harassed Monday night near Fisher Lab, police said.
- A man reported the theft of his parking decal from his car parked in Lot 62 Monday, police said.
- Police are investigating a report that all four tires were slashed on a man's car parked at Gorman Residence Hall Monday. Damage was estimated at $1,000.
- A woman reported her bike was stolen Monday from a bike rack at Mary Lions Residence Hall, police said. The loss was estimated at $180.
- Graffiti was found spray painted on an Orchard Hill walkway and on a sidewalk near Machmer Hall, police said. UMass day of action, Oct. 25 appeared in white paint, police said.

Students stage library sit-in to protest budget

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Six people, including five University of Massachusetts students, sat in the main library for an hour past closing Monday night to protest state budget cuts to UMass and demonstrate how individuals can make a statement.

Jennifer Tarr, a senior, said this protest was chosen because the library is the heart of the university, and its reduced accessiblity is symbolic of what is happening all over the state and campus.

"I work 20 hours a week and have night classes," she said. "By the time I get to the library it's 10 o'clock, and an hour is not enough study time."

She said she is protesting UMass being under-funded by the state legislature and not any specific budget cut on the campus.

"I am not here to protest the library administration, their hands are tied," Tarr said. "They should not have to say 'Sorry you can't have access to our facilities' because the cuts should not have been made."

David Golovner, a junior who planned the protest with Tarr, said they did not advertise the sit-in because they wanted to make a statement of individual power.

"We are trying to show people that you don't have to be part of a huge group to take action," he said.

Tarr said whether a person is part of a large or small group they should make their voice heard. "Only strong individuals make up strong groups," she said.

At 11:15 Lt. Stephen Warren called Charmaine Wijeyesinghe, the special assistant to the vice chancellor for Student Affairs, to come to the library. He told the protesters to either make plans to be arrested or to leave once she arrives. At midnight Wijeyesinghe arrived and the police recorded the names and addresses of the protestors and escorted them out of the library.

Dr. Arthur Hilson, director of Public Safety, said the names of the students involved would be turned over to the Dean of Students and the non-student would be cited for trespassing.

Warren said Tarr and Golovner staged a library sit-in Oct. 11.

into it." He refused to comment further.

Moneta said, "Once we have concluded what happened and can conclude that there was a homophobic nature to the incident, we can react. If this is a homophobic incident, that ups the stakes and the impact on the assailant."

"I'm concerned about that floor in particular. That floor has some problems because of stigma," said Moneta.

Because of the housing crunch at the beginning of the year, some students were placed on the cultural diversity floor of Brett, which is in the Central Residential Area.

"That created some tension, with rumors about it being a gay floor, there are some gay students there, but it is a multicultural floor," Moneta said.

Falise Yeskel, director of the Program for Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Concerns, said, "A general climate on campus of prejudice and stereotyping exists, not just at UMass but worldwide."

Yeskel cited a survey done by the department in which gay, lesbian, and bisexual students were polled. Those who said they experienced general harassment were 44.6 percent. About 21 percent said they had been physically confronted or assualted at one time or another. The survey also reported that 85.9 percent of the students had witnessed gay or lesbian graffiti and 87 percent had heard anti-gay or lesbian jokes or slurs.

Spectrum: a forum for student creativity

By WILLIAM J. GEORGIADES
Collegian Staff

Spectrum — The Literary and Fine Arts Magazine at the University of Massachussets at Amherst turned 20 this year. The result is a more than an impressive publication filled with the best work from the last forty issues.

Names such as Scott Prior, Michael Thelwell, Tim Harvey and Christine Couture pepper the pages with work from their student days at UMass.

Poetry, prose, art and photography, all by UMass students past and present, fill the magazine and its audience with the knowledge of one simple fact: that over the last 20 years this campus has been home to some of the most vibrant artists around and that this is still true today. The yearly publication also plays host to this artistic excitement free of charge.

Charles F. Carroll, the co-managing editor of the magazine's anniversary issue, spoke to the Collegian in the ridiculously cramped office of Spectrum, a space the publication will soon have to reluctantly leave due to an administrative decision. Carroll continually stressed that "Spectrum is the last material thing that students get for their SATF (Student Activities Tax Fund)."

David Lyng

The SATF does bring the Minuteman, the Distinguished Visitors Program, WMUA and a number of other organizations to life, but, as Carroll pointed out, "Spectrum is just about the last, physical, artistic thing available to students for free." The poetry journal Troy is a notable exception to this, but, as with the CATE guide, it is funded by the Arts Council.

Unlike the Collegian, Spectrum does not rely on advertising for its survival. It does receive funding from the Arts Council, but the majority of its funds come from the Student Government Association (SGA), supplemented by the Graduate Student Senate (GGS allocated the largest portion of their budget to the magazine last year). Problems arise because "the SGA is solving their budget problems by cutting the arts," Carroll said.

"This is not a communist country; we don't give out free lunches here." That pleasant little reminder of American patriotism dripped from the orifice of one Bill Bennett. He made the statement as the president of the SGA in 1986, in response to a request for funding by Spectrum, according to Carroll.

The history of Spectrum's SATF funding over the last 20 years has proved to be equally disheartening. In 1967 the magazine received $35,000 for it's first issue. For the last double issue it received $6,725. What's pleasantly strange is that the magazine has such a high quality of production, not to mention its submissions, in the face of these financial set-backs.

Indeed the deluxe double issue, now available, is the best issue the publication has yet put out. The production is excellent, sheer professionalism that acts as a solid backdrop to highlight the work at hand. "We don't have Desk Top publishing, we have a more personal process. We use photo reproduction as opposed to laser, and this is what the majority of our money goes toward," Carroll said.

Concerning the actual material that makes Spectrum a literary and fine art magazine, Carroll said, "I felt that the publication had no direction or theme for a while there, so we started to create a theme for every issue. We began in 1983 with the theme of the social significance of art . . . later we did 'the third world and a new world'. The theme for the anniversary issue was 'artistic excellence'". The work is chosen for publication carefully and fairly. Every work submitted is reviewed by the appropriate editor (art, photography, poetry and prose). Every editor and staff member gets one vote as to whether or not a piece submitted will be published.

"It's very surprising to me when other organizations or people say that there is no opportunity to be published,"Carroll said. "Spectrum is always looking for new people, we're here as a part of the University, and you're certainly not going to lose any artistic integrity by being in Spectrum."

This final point is made more than clear by the the quality of the work in Spectrum, as well as by the current activities of a number of people who were involved in the publication.

Scott Prior, who is now a successful artist with works hanging in the Museum of Fine Arts in Boston and in the Whitney Museum in New York among other places, was the art editor for Spectrum in 1970. His is the only work printed in the magazine's anniversary issue that was not done when he was a student. It (a stunningly real piece titled "Yellow Chair") was included, along with two of Prior's student works from 1970 and 1971, to show the progression of his work as an artist.

"Scott Prior told me that his student involvement in Spectrum was the most important part of his education at UMass and his subsequent success," Carroll said. Michael Thelwell, currently a professor of Afro-American studies at UMass, was an M.F.A. student here in 1966 when he won the National Short Story contest with a powerful story titled "The Organiser" about race-relations in the south two decades ago. The story is reprinted in all of its taut intensity in the anniversary issue.

There's also Gary Callahan, who was the production editor of Spectrum and who is now the production editor of Boston Magazine.

Other people who have been involved in the publication in the past include Tim Harvey, Mark Brown and Christine Couture, all of whom have become prominent artists. Samples of their student work is included in the anniversary issue. David Lyng, the co-managing editor of the deluxe double issue, and the founder of Fred, "a short-lived mini Spectrum," in his words spoke to the Collegian. He stressed the accessibility of the magazine for people interested in both the editorial side of things and in the artistic side.

"We have a completely democratic situation, whereby anyone who is qualified can run for an editorial position," he said. As of now positions are available for every editorial position, including the poetry, prose, art and photography editorships and the positions of production and managing editors. Nominations "which generally consist of a person nominating themselves and giving a little speech saying why they feel they are qualified to hold an editorial position," according to Lyng, will be held at the next scheduled Spectrum meeting, next Tuesday night, Oct. 24.

At the next weekly meeting elections for the editorial positions will be held. To take part in an election one must be a staff member of Spectrum. To become a staff member one must simply attend two consecutive meetings of the magazine's meetings, held every Tuesday evening. Being a staff member means that you have a say in deciding who will be an editor (through elections) and in what work will go into the final product of the magazine.

"I'm very excited about where Spectrum is going," Lyng said, "because of the great turnout we've had for our last two meetings where the people seemed both interesting and interested in all facets of the magazine. I think Spectrum can only get better. We have the money, about $10,000, and we have people interested in working for this. What we need is more people, to add to our diversity. I would urge people who have any art-work, writings or photographs lying under their bed to send it in to us."

"This is the most secure I've ever felt," Carrol said, concerning the future of Spectrum. He's leaving the publication after working for it over the last 10 years, to concentrate more on his doctoral work. He will remain only as an advisor to the magazine in the future. "This is the best time I could leave" he said. "When people pick up Spectrum they see that this is cool, that it's a real magazine that gives good but young artists an audience."

"Spectrum shows that we're putting out the best literary magazine of any college in the country," Carrol said.

Spectrum can be contacted by writing to them at R.S.O. Number 125 in the Student Union or by attending one of their regularly held Tuesday night meetings. The next meeting will be held at 7 p.m. in Campus Center 917.*

The fight doesn't end today

The last of three editorials on the budget cuts

Hopefully, the majority of students, faculty and staff will read this editorial after a day of Boston rallies against the budget cuts. The question is: Where do we go from here?

Franklyn Jenifer, higher education chancellor, said Statehouse projections do not mean an improved higher education future.

Dukakis wants taxes. Many on our campus, including Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson, agree. But the Legislature is reluctant to pass a $600 million tax package. Students should not hold their breath waiting.

What the Legislature should also consider is removing money from the state's capital outlay budget and turning it over to higher education. Future projects legislators want to fund — similar to the 1988 decision to grant an $8 million Mullins Arena, the proposed UMass arena for basketball and hockey games as well as concerts — should be put on hold.

If legislators don't change their priorities, perhaps rallies should focus on their votes and how they effect UMass.

The campus' students and administrators need to remain aggressive, and question the goals of the state's Legislature. The momentum of today's rally needs to continue if we are to battle the cuts successfully.

I'll opt for the burger, thanks

It looks like the stock market is up to its old tricks again, and I bet President Bush is more worried than he lets on. He's not stupid, even if it does seem like he never knows what to do.

I'm no economist, but I take pride in the fact that I sold all my stocks shortly before the '87 crash and invested in a double cheeseburger at the Hatch. It's true that I later suffered from indigestion, but that was strictly a microeconomic phenomenon, and has nothing to do with the stock market.

Last Friday, the Dow Jones Industrial Average, a popular measure of how well the stock market is doing, dropped 190 points.

Al Arpad

Experts on the stock market, most making lots of money when the stock market does well, usually like to talk about the Dow Jones, because the stocks it measures almost always do better than the other stocks. The Dow stocks are from quality companies like IBM that never go bankrupt or behave in a disorderly fashion.

Most experts explained the drop, second largest in Wall Street history, as a "flight to quality," which means that investors suddenly became afraid of Dow stocks and wanted to put their money in something safer, like Treasury Bills.

Other stocks did worse than Dow stocks, because they are even less respected.

Over the weekend, the Bush Administration, the Federal Reserve, and other heavy hitters took a hard look at the situation and decided something should be done. Bush didn't do anything, but reportedly clapped his hands enthusiastically at suggestions.

Big investment houses acted quickly, though. They said everyone should buy now, quick, while stock prices are low.

The Federal Reserve also did its part by printing about $2 billion of new money to cover the assorted shortages that occur when big stock portfolios are no longer worth as much as owners borrowed to pay for them.

These concerted actions helped boost the confidence of market players, which responded by bidding up the Dow 88 points on Monday, making the front pages of Tuesday's papers. What didn't make the front pages was the vast majority of stocks — lower quality stocks that aren't included in the Dow, continued to fall.

On the prestigious New York Stock Exchange Monday, losers outnumbered gainers 975 to 749.

The Wall Street Journal reported junk bonds, which have been providing most of the money for stock price increases this year are in worse shape. Most are suffering a "crisis of liquidity," meaning nobody will buy them.

In other words, investors are still fleeing to quality, but they decided that a few stocks are quality enough to deserve another look. With junk bonds in trouble, however, it is unclear where investors will get the cash to sustain quality stock prices.

I am once again recommending cheeseburgers to all my clients.

Al Arpad is a UMass student

We must save the ostrich!

M is for Monkey.
N is for Nurse.
O is for Ostrich.

My childhood alphabet drills often involved images from the wildlife kingdom. As a result of this environmentalist brainwashing, I consider certain animals untouchable. An attack on a zebra is an attack on my Dr. Suess-saturated psyche.

Add me to the list of hypocritical carnivores. I believe that vegetarians are inherently right, but I am scared to become one. I cannot see myself munching on soybeans and vegetable protein for the rest of my life.

Darren Garnick

Slicing up a chicken is okay, but diced seal is disgusting. Chopped lamb is appetizing, while rattlesnake pancakes arouse alarm. My position reflects moral inconsistency. I should either support the concept of killing for food or reject it.

My remedy is for Congress to pass a federalized Storybook Animal Protection Act, preventing restaurants from adding exotic animals to their menu. Sure, there would be some token opposition from people who eat ostrich, but their political power can be overcome.

For if ever there was a time when our ostrich friends needed our help, that time is now. Plans are in the works to socialize the American public to dream of Ostrich McNuggets and ostrich-leather jackets.

Ostrich-meat, which contains one-third less fat and cholesterol than beef, is already catching on in Europe. No doubt, California is next. But luckily, it is not quite time yet to pull out the recipe file.

Tom Mantzel, executive director of the American Ostrich Association, told The Washington Post that ostrich burgers are at least seven years away. The U.S. Department of Agriculture recently imposed an ostrich-embargo, refusing the birds entry visas because they carry ticks harmful to cows, sheep, and goats. Plus, the current population of ostriches legally residing in this country is only 6,000 — not enough bodies to sustain a slaughterhouse.

Save the Ostrich!

Those who crave ostrich snacks will probably claim it tastes "just like chicken," a false promise usually made to first-time pigeon eaters. There is something just not kosher here.

My religion backs me up on this one. Kashrut, the Jewish dietary laws, forbids the consumption of 24 species of bird ("And these are the fowls which are an abomination and shall not be eaten. . ." — Leviticus 11:13), including a knives-off policy on ostriches, eagles, vultures, swans, storks, owls, and pelicans.

But religious arguments will carry no weight with the American Ostrich Association. Hinduism, they can easily argue, prohibits eating cows.

The AOA has been watching too many Flintstones episodes, getting ridiculous inspiration from the meals of that era — leg of brontosaurus and pterodactyl eggs. Ostriches can reach heights of up to nine feet, weights of up to 300 pounds, and produce two and a half pound eggs.

Will the American family embrace a bird larger than their kitchen table? I do not know.

But what I do know is this: The jury deciding the ostrich's fate is made up of millions of American taste buds. Whether the ostrich remains a proud creature or is reduced to just another pizza topping sadly depends on a mere whim.

Educating the students who should be the first priority

Jill decided to have a small quiet party in her room, and arranged for an older student to buy a liter of vodka for the occasion. Knowing that underaged drinking in the residence halls is now being enforced, she closed the door behind her guests and began to party. Her best friend had seemed coherent when she got up to go to the bathroom, but suddenly became dizzy and collapsed. Everyone at the party stood around laughing. Someone exclaimed, "Get an R.A.!"

Jill spun around frantically, "I can't do that! We're drinking underage. We'll be written up immediately, have to meet with an R.D., probably go to REAP, and might lose our housing. I can't afford to lose my housing! What am I going to do?"

This is one of the many scenarios now possible under Residential Education's decision to enforce underage drinking in the residence halls. As R.A.s, we applaud Residential Education's stance on the issue of alcohol use/abuse on campus. However, we disagree with the means by which Res. Ed. is trying to achieve their ends. It is easy for the administration to "take action" concerning policies, but in practice it is the 350 plus R.As on campus who are enforcing the policy decisions.

The consequences of the extra responsibilities handed down have slowly begun to erode the fragile connection we have with our floors as peer educators. Most R.A.s agree that the most successful programming/educating is done on an interpersonal level. The new enforcement is turning the peer educator image of R.A.s into an "authoritative monster" to be avoided at all costs.

Mechaber/Herscovitch

One veteran R.A. from Southwest recently commented that he is finding more doors closed on his floor this year. He is experiencing difficulty in finding common ground on which to relate.

What is especially frightening is the lack of support we are getting from Residential Education and the lack of forethought in recognizing the position in which we now ~~find ourselves in.~~

A first-year R.A. in the Orchard Hill/Central Area felt deceived when she attended the R.A. information sessions and was not told of the new strict enforcements of underage drinking and the "carding" she would have to do. What is deceiving is that only after we signed our year-long contracts were we informed of the decision to tighten the alcohol policy.

What Res. Ed. fails to realize is that the repercussions will effect the R.A. position. The new restrictions on R.A. alcohol use and underage drinking enforcement will discourage many qualified people from applying.

We are asking for more input with an R.A. Matters Committee where we can have some say in the policies that we have to enforce. It is easy to applaud Res. Ed. for "cracking down" on alcohol; we are taking the heat.

We understand the alcohol-related problems on our campus but feel that Res. Ed.'s plan of combat is inadequate. Not only is the new enforcement encouraging closet drinking, but it is also creating some serious barriers by preventing us from doing the job we intended to do — educate.

Glen Mechaber and Lara Herscovitch are Gorman/Wheeler cluster R.A.s. 48 additional R.A.s signed this column.

ARTS & LIVING

Scenery, not Douglas, stars in Black Rain

By GEORGE LENTZ
Collegian Correspondent

In 1979, Ridley Scott's Alien set a precedent in the sci-fi/horror film genre. It was the first film of its kind to establish its setting, Nostromo, as its premiere character. The massive space barge took on a frightening appeal all of its own. The ship became Scott's intergalactic fun house, a haunted mansion where a crew of seven people became the prey to an eight-foot, insect-like alien that utilized the Nostromo's heating ducts and overhead pipes, to make its way around the ship.

Scott's follow-up masterpiece, Blade Runner, will be forever remembered for it's haunting, Orwellian portrayal of futuristic Los Angeles. Highly industrialized, spewing smoke and grime into the atmosphere, Scott's L.A. of the future is a grim nightmare land of glowing lights, rain slicked streets and massive, Kafka-esque buildings. Scott set the precedent that film makers like Terry Gilliam (Brazil), James Cameron (Aliens) and Tim Burton (Batman) would build upon.

It is no wonder that the real star of Scott's latest film, Black Rain, isn't Michael Douglas, but the Japanese city of Osaka. Ablaze in neon signs, pounding with an inexhaustible night life, Osaka becomes a living, breathing element of this cop-thriller that plunges us into the heart of Osaka's crime world.

Michael Douglas is Nick Conklin, the typical "tough New York cop with an attitude," who is ordered to return a Japanese gangster by the name of Sato, back to Japan. The problem is, Nick wants justice his way and will do anything to get a piece of Sato before the Japanese can get a hold of him. But orders are orders, and Nick and his partner Charlie (Andy Garcia) have to bring Sato back and let the Japanese handle the situation.

When they arrive in Japan, Sato's friends are waiting for him, and manage to smuggle him back into the Japanese underworld. Considered by the Japanese police as foreign observers, Nick and Charlie are forbidden to involve themselves in the investigation. Overbearing with his American bravado, Nick naturally sticks his nose where it doesn't belong and pursues Sato anyway.

THE SCREENING ROOM

Michael Douglas (whose performance here convinces me that his Best Actor win for Wall Street was the con of the century) goes way over his head in his efforts to "toughen up" his character. He's either insulting the Japanese left and right, or swearing faster than Eddie Murphy on a good day. His character comes across as more of an arrogant jerk than a hero, leaving the audience without a character to identify with. His supporting cast doesn't offer much assistance either, with the sole exception of Ken Takakura as the Japanese detective assigned to baby-sit Nick and Charlie.

Takakura's detective envies the vigilante approach of Douglas' character, but finds himself bound within the constraints of the ethics and honor of the Japanese police code. He's a good cop just trying to do his job within the limits of the law, no matter how foolish the law may be. When he finds out that Douglas' character accepted mafia payoff money at one time, he's disappointed and dispirited. "When you take the money, you disgrace yourself and you disgrace me." His character provides the film with a conscience and is the one saving grace of a script devoid of emotion.

Like most films of this genre, Black Rain offers nothing new, building itself upon one cliche after another. What really makes the film annoying is it's lack of respect for the audience, playing down to them like a pack of morons. There isn't one aspect, not one scene in Black Rain that isn't anticipated long before it is executed. But despite such incredible drawbacks, Black Rain is an entertaining piece of mindless Hollywood filmmaking. Scott knows how to build up a good action sequence when he has to, and this overrides the banality of the script.

Interestingly enough, the film does manage to raise some insights about Japan's increasing superiority over the United States in the technological race. At one point in the film, Takakura's character blasts Douglas for his American arrogance with, "You won the war but we won the peace." The claim reduces the American belief of being the world's powerhouse to a mere attitude rather than a reality.

Scott's creative talent is the main reason to see Black Rain. It's not often that scenery and setting get due credit, but like most of Scott's films, Black Rain demands such attention. Scott's vision of Osaka is deceiving. The buildings and public transportation vehicles are strung with glowing lights that hide the unnerving sense of evil lurking deserted streets in the city's shadows. When Douglas and Garcia walk the deserted streets in search of their hotel, it's not surprising when a band of motorcycle hoods roar out of the shadows, swarming around them like a horde of wasps, reving their motors in a violent frenzy.

Black Rain is a good bad movie that relies on the visual presence of its setting to make up for the gross lack of substance in its script. It is by no means Ridley Scott's best work, yet it doesn't sink as low as his worst film, the 1985 fantasy, Legend. Thankfully enough, Black Rain doesn't come across as taking itself seriously, presenting itself, instead, for what it really is — an action film that's high on concept, thin on plot. On that level alone, the film works and passes off as a reasonably entertaining night at the movies.

Francis Ford Coppola and Mario Puzo finished their long awaited script for another Godfather sequel this past July, and are set to put the story on film. Shooting is scheduled to begin Nov. 15, on location in Sicily.

Everyone Welcome to Attend!!

Play gives hope, offers solutions

By LISA MILLIGAN
Collegian Correspondent

In the program notes for Project!, Patrick Henry, the show's creator, is described as wanting to "use the performing arts to focus on the toughest of inner city problems, often to mirror life as well as to entertain." He fulfills all of these goals with remarkable effectiveness in Project!, a creative multi-media production performed at the Fine Arts Center Monday and Tuesday nights.

For two hours, the cast of 21 people used song and dance to convey the experience of living in one of Chicago's toughest housing projects, Cabrini-Green. Although the audience was made up of a sparse crowd of about 300, they seemed to enjoy every minute of the performance.

From the time the curtain opened, Rob Hamilton's set at once emphasized the differences between sedate, middle class Amherst and the tough world of Cabrini-Green. Seventy television sets were stacked across the stage in front of a harsh, red background to simulate skyscrapers. Between some of the "buildings" were wire fences behind which cast members alternately sang songs.

Videos of Cabrini-Green residents talking about the problems they face preceded most of the songs. Residents discussed the problems of protecting their kids against drugs and gangs and having to constantly worry about whether or not there would be enough food to put on the table. The video prologues provided virtually all the spoken word in the production with most of the story told through song.

The singing was excellent, save for some problems with balance in the beginning. In its enthusiasm, the four-piece band sometimes overpowered the singers.

There were no real stars or lead singers. Almost all the women and men had solos. The female vocalists were particularly strong, belting out soulful ballads like "Suddenly Blind" (about a mother whose deaf son was killed in gang cross fire) to the rousing, upbeat spiritual, "In Spite of All That."

The number which got the most audience response was "Women's Blues." Featuring four powerful singers, the song concerned women whose "no-good" husbands left them to raise their children alone. It contained some insightful humor to lighten the seriousness of the subject.

Donald Douglass' choreography was well done. In "West Side Story" fashion, the cast danced out a gang fight. Douglass combined breakdancing moves with a driving rhythm section to produce a vivid picture of street life. Doug Lofstrom's music direction was adequate. The band was good but seemed to rely heavily on being loud and fast rather than precise.

On the whole, Project! was an extremely inspirational production to watch. Throughout the play, the messages of holding on to your dreams and believing in the power to control one's own life were emphasized. Cast members didn't simply whine about the problems of living in Cabrini-Green, they offered solutions. According to one song, hope is around the corner and all you need is the "Nerve to Start."

Thoughts of Belfast and peach pits

By JENNIFER DEMPSEY
Collegian Staff

The first of an occasional series on a UMass student's experiences in Belfast.

I've been in Belfast for a week now, and the only thing I've had to dodge has been peach pits.

After finding my flat the first night I arrived, I went out to see the city. As I was crossing Great Victoria Street to head into the city center, I felt something hit my rear end. I turned around to see a young girl laughing, and taking aim again.

I glared at her, letting her know that I saw what she was up to, but she threw several more. After about the fifth pit, her two friends finally convinced her to stop, saying that it wasn't all that funny, and that the person she was hitting was twice her size.

A bit baffled, I headed down Malone Road where I saw a group of people spilling out of a lively pub called Lavery's. Inside, I found a sympathetic ear from a 20 year old University of Ulster student named Billy, who heard my accent when I ordered my pint of cider, and asked me if I was American. I told him I was, and he asked me what I was doing in Belfast.

"I'm doing a junior year abroad at Queen's University," I told him, "studying English literature."

He shrugged and took a gulp of his warm Guinness and said that he couldn't understand why a person would ever want to leave the United States for Northern Ireland, even if it was just for one year.

"Aren't you worried about the troubles?" he asked with a grin.

I told him that the only trouble I had encountered was from a 10 year old who threw peach pits at me.

After hearing the story, Billy laughed and said, "Oh, aye. The wee ones are rough around here."

Of course there are real troubles in Belfast, as the military presence indicates. Covered tanks roll down the streets throughout the day, and policemen in bulletproof vests are out on street corners at night.

But where Queen's University and its student accommodations are located, there is little danger.

At the Overseas Student Orientation lecture, the chancellor of Queen's told us that we shouldn't have any problems or see any trouble unless we go looking for it. Places like Falls Road, and the Shankhill are places to avoid if possible, as well as West Belfast.

The chancellor also told us, that he found it distressing how the newspapers worldwide portrayed Belfast during the 20th anniversary of the occupation of Northern Ireland by British troops, this past Aug. 14.

"This summer I got a phone call from Malaysia (more that 300 Malaysian students come to Queen's every year), and they wanted to know what in the heck was going on in Belfast! And I thought, nothing's going on here in Belfast. But there were stories all over the front pages of their newspapers. But I'll tell you, there were more reporters here than troublemakers," he said.

The chancellor also explained that reporters have been known to stage, or recreate situations, to represent fighting in Belfast. In one particular incident, a photo that was used on the cover of the Aug. 14 issue of the Boston Globe, with the caption "Unhappy Anniversary." The photo, which depicted a soldier confronting a screaming, irate woman, had been arranged and set up by a group of photographers. Pictures of the entire event show the woman being given a pint of lager afterwards in gratification for her help.

My flat is off Lisburn Road, a prominent street in the city. Lisburn Road looks like some streets in Cambridge, Massachusetts, with its shops, restaurants and parks. But the graffiti is quite different. Spray painted on the buildings of this mostly Protestant area, are slogans such as UFF (Ulster Freedom Fighters), UVF (Ulster Volunteer Force), and UDA (Ulster Defense Association) — all paramilitary groups supporting Northern Ireland's union with Britain.

Thus far, I haven't see any overt support or sympathy for the IRA (Irish Republican Army), and it is unlikely that I will in this area. There are Irish culture groups within the University and the Irish language is used on public signs around campus, but the Ulster Unionist Party plays a more political role at Queen's than Republican parties, which are scarce, if even existent.

According to Billy, who calls himself a Green Party Anarchist (and looks like a member of Def Leppard), none of his friends are overly concerned with a person's religion, and unless someone starts a debate, politics are, for the most part, ignored.

"A party me and Martyn (his housemate) had, it had everyone — Irish, British, Catholic, Protestant. No one was bothered. Or if they were, they didn't say anything. When you're going to get pissed (drunk), the last thing you're going to do is worry about a person's religion."

There's a lot going on here that I have yet to encounter, and even more that I have yet to understand. But my first impressions of Belfast tell me that there is potential danger in certain areas, and it is advisable to stay out of politics.

As I was at home (in a suburb of Washington D.C.) preparing to leave, people said going to Belfast would be like stepping into a war zone, and that I'd need a bulletproof vest just to cross the road.

Here, when I say that I'm from Washington D.C., people respond with, "Don't you need to carry a gun with you all the time there? Aren't you always dodging bullets?"

For the average citizen, neither city requires a gun or a bulletproof vest. Just a bit of common sense and caution.

I haven't had to dodge bullets in either city. Just peach pits.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Be careful who you choose to represent you. You will be held responsible for what is done in your name. A troubled romance can be saved. Make that telephone call or apology.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): If you believe in someone, do something concrete to show it. Lend your time and talents to help your community. New business and financial gains are featured. Strengthen home security.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A sudden revelation could change your plans. Strive to improve your image. Hard work and long hours will help make a dream come true. Loved ones ask questions. Answer them honestly.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A day filled with flashes of brilliance and intuition. Curb a tendency to go overboard. Stick to your priorities. Loved ones share wonderful news. Host a small celebration.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Communicate with others in a sincere, well-thought-out manner and you will be heard by all OO including the most stubborn. Love, affection, even passion, may be expressed in a tense situation.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): The less said the better, especially where your career or finances are concerned. Others are more interested in deeds than words. Psychological matters you thought buried may come up again.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Impulsive acts could prove costly. Spend sparingly and avoid overindulgence. Financial backing comes from an unexpected quarter. Learn from your mistakes but do not dwell on them. Forge ahead.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Seek an attorney's advice if you are moving toward a legal hassle. Your colleagues are understanding. New investments show promise. A party will bring people together. Enjoy yourself.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Keep a close watch on route operations. Deal more openly with your associates and loved ones. Others begin to come around to your way of thinking. Pursue romance tonight.

■ letter-writing campaign their area representatives and senators.

"Participating in the write-in campaign is equally important to going to the Statehouse," Cohen said.

She said that by sending letters to the legislators, students will demonstrate their concern about the quality of education they are receiving at the University.

Cohen said the Student Government Association, which is organizing the campaign, is hoping that students will relate personal experiences to the legislators about how they are affected by the cuts to the University.

"The letters will show the legislature that students here are concerned about the quality of education they're receiving at the University," Cohen said.

Students might want to mention specific programs and services that have been cut, including the library, the University Without Walls program, and the Escort Service, she said.

She said other subjects for correspondence include the increases in tuition, less individual attention for students because of a reduction in teaching assistants, and concerns about delayed graduation dates because required courses are often oversubscribed since hundreds of class sections were cut.

Cohen said that next Monday 12,000 postcards will be distributed to on-campus students so they can write the Statehouse regarding their concerns. The postcards will be arranged according to each representative and senator and presented to legislators.

■ protest

He said that White students have the misconception that minority students can more easily solve their financial troubles than Whites through easy access to scholarships.

"This produces frustration on the part of the White middle class," Bracey said. 'They take it out in the form of racial attacks."

Bracey said the University needs to pressure students to resist these attacks.

"What kind of University is this where the norm is going out and getting drunk and beating up people?" he said.

Following the rally, approximately 15 protesters marched to Dickinson to present their demands to Hilson, chanting, "Here we come, Hilson, here we come."

The protesters' demands included an explanation by Hilson and Chancellor Duffey as to why the assailants were not arrested, a federal and state investigation of racist attacks on campus, and prosecution of the assailants to the fullest extent of the law for assault and battery, as well as for civil rights violations.

Hilson stated his understanding of the law regarding arrests, then informed the students that he is working with a local district attorney to add a civil rights charge to the assault and battery charges the students have already received.

■ budget cuts

She said students also ask why this money can't be used to help fund academic departments and various University programs that are suffering due to reductions in their budgets.

Hatch said many of the students she has talked with are not fully aware of how great the cuts really are.

She said the University did not simply lose $8.2 million from fiscal year (FY) 1989 to FY90 in state funds, but cumulatively lost $17.2 million from FY88 to FY90, during which time the state appropriation to the University dropped from $178.1 million to $160.9 million.

The University receives three basic types of funding from the state. State maintenance appropriations and state special appropriations is ongoing funding the University receives from the state on a year to year basis. However, the state borrows most of its capital outlay funding from bondholders.

State maintenance appropriations go toward instruction, research, and public service, whereas special appropriations are spent on University programs such as the library and the Cooperative Extension Program, Hatch said.

The library budget was reduced from $2.6 million in Fiscal Year 1988 to $1.1 million in FY90, a loss of $1.5 million, resulting in the cancellation of 1,650 periodicals.

The Cooperative Extension Program, an off-campus educational program which provides services to the families, young people, and the agricultural communities of the Commonwealth, had its budget reduced by $1.8 million since FY88.

Capital outlay money funds long term projects like the new convocation center and the new phone and cable system.

According to Jack Littlefield, associate vice chancellor of Administration and Finance at UMass, capital outlay funds are appropriated to the UMass Building Authority, a semi-public, state created agency.

The Building Authority, at the bequest of the Board of Trustees, undertakes long term projects like building dormitories and dining commons for the University. The authority invests the capital outlay as bonds in order to gain interest for the projects, Littlefield said.

He pointed out that the state appropriated funds to the authority to construct the convocation center in August 1988. The authority then invested the money in October 1988. After the money was invested, the state's revenue problems intensified, and the University's budget began to be reduced significantly. As a result, the University does not have access to these funds.

"[Capital outlay] is not liquid money. It's not sitting in anyone's checking account. It's committed funds, invested in bonds, for a particular project, and it can't be exchanged for anything else," Hatch said, adding that the reverse is true: appropriation money can't be interchanged with capital outlay.

Women's soccer sloshes past Harvard

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Despite the rain yesterday, the performance of the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team wasn't quite all wet.

UMass coach Jim Rudy wasn't exactly pleased with his team's play, but it was good enough to get the Reds a 4-1 win over Harvard University in Cambridge.

The game was a good tune-up for eighth-ranked UMass (10-2-2), which next faces a big challenge at the William and Mary Tournament this weekend, playing the fifth-ranked hosts along with seventh-ranked North Carolina State.

"It was not a very good performance for us," Rudy said. "I'm hoping we'll bounce back against William and Mary, and N.C. State. If we play them like we played today, we probably won't win."

But two goals in the first seven minutes and some key saves by senior goalkeeper Mary Curtis were more than enough to fend off any challenge the Ivy Leaguers had in store. UMass, which outshot the Crimson, 18-6, added two late second half goals to put the notary's stamp on the win.

Five minutes into the game, junior forward Sue Gaudette put home the first of her two goals on the day. After Crimson goalie Beth Reilly bobbled an initial shot, sophomore forward Michele Woodside dug it out and found Gaudette in tight for the score.

Two minutes later the lead grew to 2-0, this time Woodside getting the goal. Junior midfielder Robin Runstein served a corner kick from the right side and junior back Becky Bonzano, standing at the edge of the box, chipped it over a crowd. Woodside headed it past Reilly for her fifth goal of the year.

In the meantime, Curtis was making the lead stand up, stopping Sharon Oiken point-blank on a breakaway and then diving and knocking away the rebound attempt by Tory Fair. UMass took the 2-0 lead into the intermission.

The Reds kept up the attack in the second half, but got caught on the offensive for Harvard's only goal. Robin Johnston hit a rocket over a leaping Curtis and in the net with 25 minutes to go.

"We got at them and we didn't give up a lot," Rudy said. "Then out of the blue they caught us on a counter-attack."

But Curtis and the defense turned away any other Harvard efforts, and UMass got two more goals within five minutes, sparked by a strong effort from the bench, to finish it.

Gaudette pushed the ball through the Crimson defense, and freshman forward Kim Eynard outraced everyone to the ball and beat Reilly for her sixth goal of the year.

Eynard had a few other chances, but it was Gaudette who got the last one, taking a feed from freshman forward Leanne Swartz and winning a 1-on-1 challenge with Reilly.

With her two goals and an assist, Gaudette now has 23 points (eight goals, seven assists), tying her with junior midfielder April Kater for the team lead in scoring.

"We had most of the pressure, but we did not play a good game," Rudy said. "We had our spots of brightness."

Men's soccer to visit Connecticut today

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

On their second consecutive road trip, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team heads to the University of Connecticut. Today at 2 p.m. the Minutemen will ranked fourth in New England.

"There's more at stake than just the game," said head coach Jeff Gettler. "This is a big game of the season at this point."

The Huskies have defeated some impressive teams including University of South Florida (1-0), University of Central Florida (2-0), Boston College (2-0), University of Rhode Island (3-1), University of Dartmouth (2-1), Harvard University (1-0) and, most recently, University of Pennsylvania (3-1).

All but one of UConn's overtimes have ended as ties: University of Howard (0-0), University of Syracuse (1-1) and Providence College (1-1). Losses this season have included Boston University (3-0), Yale University (1-0, overtime), University of North Carolina (4-0) and Fairleigh Dickinson University (2-1).

"We have always responded to Connecticut. They're a very physical team," Gettler said. "The results will be a measuring stick for us."

Senior goalkeeper Tom Foley has started all of UConn's 14 games. He currently has 69 saves this season with five shutouts. In 14 games he has allowed only 15 goals. Last year Foley was named New England Intercollegiate Soccer League All-Star.

Junior Brian Parker is the leading scorer for the Huskies with four goals and four assists. Classmate Danny Sanchez also has four assists with three goals. Sophomore Rob Lindell leads the team with assists, seven for the season. Last year, sophomore Chris Albrecht was the only underclassman to be selected to the Big East All-Tournament Team. Senior Bill Lawrence, older brother of Dan Lawrence, is a Husky starter in the backfield.

"I'm looking forward to this game," Gettler said. UMass starters will remain the same. Steve Armenti will be in goal, supported by Tom Skiba, Darren Stone, Gael Sullivan, Evan Buxner and Lawrence. In attack positions are Steve Cesnek, Ray Cunha, Brett Anthony, Pete McEvoy and Carl Hanks.

Sports Notices

Yesterday's University of Massachusetts women's tennis match at Holy Cross was postponed because of rain. The Minutewomen will travel to Waltham to face Bentley College tomorrow (3 p.m.).

The UMass men's basketball team will be holding open tryouts Friday at 9:30 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Cage. For more information call 545-2610.

Volleyball returns home in search of second win

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

In many ways the team that the University of Massachusetts volleyball team will play tonight, Central Connecticut, is a team that it would like to emulate.

The Blue Devils started out the season an emaciated 1-11. Since then they have been 7-10, winning their last four home games.

The Minutewomen's record stands at a frightening 1-14, but they have recently shown a flickering light of hope in recent matches against such powerhouses as Temple and Rutgers. It may very well be the time for UMass to breakout and beat the teams that can be beaten. Central Connecticut is one of those teams.

"If we play like we played this weekend we can finish off the season well," said UMass coach Carol Ford.

The team has also seemed to settle into the 5-1 offense as the play of setter Kelli Ramsey has been stable over the last few matches. "We used the 5-1 against Temple and Rutgers and Kelli played well." said Ford.

The team's injury situation is positive. Only Joy Gmeiner, who has not been able to play so far, is still out with a bad back and it appears that will not change.

"Joy had some tests and she is out for the rest of the season for sure," Ford said.

The Blue Devils are a dreadful 2-14 away from home. The leading hitter is Lisa Douglas, who is also the only senior on the squad. The captain for Central Conn. is 5-foot-8 Tina Popp.

The match is the Minutewomen's first at home since they beat St. Bonaventure on Sept. 30. They have played 12 of their first 15 games on the road and are looking forward to the home court advantage. The game starts tonight at 7 p.m. at Totman Gym.

BOSTON — Holding placards and led by the strains of the University of Massachusetts Marching Band, some 15,000 people converged on the Boston Common yesterday to protest budget cuts to public higher education.

Students, faculty and staff from 29 colleges and universities statewide as well as concerned parents and community members were on hand for the 11 a.m. rally, which began with a march from the Statehouse and lasted for more than three hours.

Forty-two buses overflowing with some 3,000 cheering protesters embarked from Haigus Mall at 8:15 a.m., fueled by the threat of what may be fifth wave of budget cuts to public higher education since March of 1988.

The buses left behind about 1,000 people who formed impromptu car pools or scrambled to find alternate means of transportation.

At the Common, the crowd was met by a handful of University of Lowell students with guitars and drums, who maintained the crowd's excitement by playing rock and roll songs.

The upbeat music and the voices of the roaring crowd were abruptly halted, however, as protesters held a moment of silence to remember fellow students who did not get into state colleges and universities this fall.

After the crowd participated in the Pledge of Allegiance, David Valera, president of the Student Government Association at Framingham State College, kicked off the rally with opening remarks.

Valera, who also gave closing remarks, organized a statewide network for the rally last week. He said the current fiscal situation stems from "a leadership crisis" in the state.

"As taxpayers, we save their futures, we save their children's futures. All we want is a little honesty," he said, warning state legislators: "Don't leave your children behind."

Fourteen students representing state colleges and universities as well as other concerned citizens joined Valera in urging the crowd to vote and actively voicing their concerns to state legislators.

Speaker Binky Feldman, a UMass student, said the problem of underfunding must be addressed on both the state and national levels. She said the United States should slash military spending and incorporate more money into human services and education.

"Education is a right, not a privilege," she said.

Roseanne Bacon, president of the Massachusetts Teachers Association and a UMass graduate, urged the students to vote and take control of their situation.

"You have every right to expect and demand the same education as past generations," she said.

Roxbury Community College SGA President Abdul Sadik said he is concerned about the minority student population on state campuses.

He said education is an "investment in our future. Without it, we face another roadblock."

The rally culminated with a march to the Statehouse, where chanting protesters were met by security and police, and eventually by Paul Tsongas, chairman of the Board of Trustees.

"Up until now," he said, "we didn't know you cared."

Protesters storm Statehouse

BOSTON — Hundreds of people participating in a rally yesterday to protest curtailments in the state's education budget stormed the doors and windows of the Statehouse after many were unable to speak with their state senators and representatives.

A handful of students climbed onto the roof during the confusion. Outside, students uprooted flowers from the Statehouse landscape, sparking anger and disappointment from many legislators.

Rep. Susan C. Tucker, D-Andover, said she was disappointed with the students' conduct, and feared the disturbance would overshadow the rally's important message.

One University of Massachusetts student was arrested after he stormed the doors of and knocked over a representative, according to Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for Student Affairs. Three other students were arrested for disorderly conduct.

In spite of the disruption, Madson said, "It was a very successful rally, I was very proud. People spoke out loud and clear."

Statehouse doors were locked periodically during the day, preventing students from entering or leaving. About 25 police officers lined the main entrance after students had flooded the building. They chanted "Mi-chael," carried mock coffins and placards emphasizing the "death" of public higher education.

Eric Nakajima, UMass student trustee, said: "It was very difficult to get inside because of the way the Boston police shut the Statehouse down. There was confusion between the governor's staff and the police."

In spite of the lockout, students who were able to lobby their representatives were very effective, Nakajima said.

"At least five of the aides that I talked to were very impressed by the lobbying effort," he said.

Hundreds of students wrote and telephoned the Statehouse yesterday from the University of Massachusetts as part of the statewide protest against budget cuts to public higher education.

"It's been amazing," said Rhonda Cohen, a UMass junior who coordinated a letter writing campaign in the Cape Cod Lounge. "All day there's been a constant flow of people."

Cohen said more than 500 letters were written to state representatives and senators and Gov. Michael Dukakis. The letters will be collected in albums, arranged according to each legislator, and presented to them in Boston, she said.

Students wrote at least 420 letters and many other students took the addresses of their area representatives and senators with them so they could write longer letters, Cohen said.

She said the letter writing campaign will continue today.

In addition, more than 100 students con-

Bush's planned veto draws mixed reactions from activists

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

President Bush's announcement last week that he is prepared to veto legislation which increases the scope of federal funding for abortions to include rape and incest victims provoked mixed reactions from student activists yesterday.

"It shows he's not in step with the majority of the country," said Marci Lew, co-founder of People For Choice, an abortion rights group on campus. She added that the impending veto "totally disregards the sanctity of womens' lives."

The issue of federal funding has come to a head recently in light of the July Supreme Court decision that upheld restrictions on abortion in Missouri.

Bush is presently opposed to federal funding for all abortions, except in cases where the mother's life is threatened. One advisor said that it would be unwise for the president to change his position now, the Boston Globe reported recently.

"He's backing himself up against the wall," said Lew, explaining that the President must address the needs of the public.

"He's been all over the board," she said. "He already is a wimp."

But Bernard Cooney, a member of the UMass Republican Club, said that although the president and the Congress represent the public, they should not have to sway from their original positions.

"The president and the Congress are being forced to deal with this now, but they should not base their decisions on just pleasing the public," he said.

"The abortion issue should definitely be decided at the Federal level, but the [Federal Government] can't cater to individual needs."

Bush's stance on the federal funding issue has been unclear for a good reason, Cooney said. "Bush has to evolve, he can't seem like he's uncompromising," he said.

Yet pro-choice advocates say Bush and other anti-abortion supporters in Congress will pay for their decisions come election time.

Members of both sides said there will be negative implications in future elections for anti-abortion advocates in Congress and for the President.

"There will be a lot of problems for supporters of the pro-life side," Cooney said. "Many of them won't get re-elected."

Lew said a problem that many pro-choice advocates have with Bush is that he is not sensitive to issues of violence against women.

"I'm disgusted, but I'm not very surprised [about the planned veto]," Lew said. "It shows that the anti-abortion stance is anti-women."

Pagan club is not another ghost story

By HEATHER M. RONOVECH
Collegian Correspondent

Do Pagans worship the devil?

Do witches ride brooms?

The answer to both of these questions is no, according to members of the UMass Pagan Association, a student group on campus.

However, Neopagans do have varied beliefs about the world, characterized by polytheism, a reverence for nature and the physical world, and a belief in non-authoritarian religion.

UMPSO is a Registered Student Organization acting to further the concerns of Neopagan students at the University through networking and educating the public. It is also open to non-students and members of the community with similar beliefs.

Neopaganism is a true religion and spiritual movement that is growing in popularity today. Wicca, or witchcraft, is part of Neopaganism and is based on a belief in both a goddess (the Earth Mother), and a god. Most Wiccans and Neopagans are also concerned with nature and preserving the environment.

Jason Weissman, a member of the group, and Scott Sherter, one of its co-presidents, said that many neopagans left "established religions" because of their so-called lack of individuality.

Sherter said, "UMPSO is really a group to talk about your worship of the god and goddess. It's nearly impossible to define Neopaganism. Besides the belief in the earth as divine and polytheism, there is the belief in anamism, which is all things in the universe have a soul."

"Magick," or Extra Sensory Perception, psychic powers and prayer are also other parts of neopaganism. Some members of the group said they can see auras, or energy fields, of people.

But, Sherter said, "You don't have to have psychic powers to be a Neopagan."

Tarot cards, healing rituals, and the use of crystals are also common practices. The UMPSO recently held a major fundraiser, Tarot card divination, last Friday on the Campus Center Concourse.

Various rituals and events (often held around the solstices and equinoxes), are open to all who are interested.

Co-senator motion stalled in Undergraduate Senate

By ROB SIMPSON
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate last night continued to delay a vote on a proposal to allow only one candidate to run for or hold any position in the Student Government Association, with the exception of those in Area Governments or House Councils.

The motion, a focus of controversy in recent months, was proposed by Senator Dan Chesnicka (Wheeler) last April. Since its inception, the proposal has been delayed repeatedly, Chesnicka said. Passage of the motion would eliminate co-senators.

"The opposition has a very strong belief that co-senators are beneficial to student government," Chesnicka said. "And if the motion can't be defeated right away, they hope to prolong it until it can be defeated."

Chesnicka said people who serve as co-senators cannot efficiently represent their constituencies. He compared being a co-senator to holding "a part-time job."

"This is an activity that you should put all of your time into one hundred percent," he said. "To resign ourselves to less than one hundred percent would be harmful to the University as a whole."

After SGA Attorney General Robert Fadel attempted to clarify the motion by adding that only one person can be appointed, as well as elected to positions, the senate voted to delay making a decision on the motion. Several senators said Fadel's clarification changed the intent of the motion.

In other business:

- The senate voted against a Chesnicka motion to hold elections to fill vacant senate seats rather than to have vacancies filled through appointments by House Councils or the area government presidents.

Paul DelGallo, chairman of the Rents and Fees Committee, spoke in favor of the motion, alleging that the presidents of the area governments and House Councils sometimes abuse their power of appointment.

"They do things like get kicked off the senate and then reappoint themselves," DelGallo said.

Sen. Angus McQuilken of the Commuter Area Government argued against passage of the motion because, he said, it would be too difficult to organize the elections and get students to come out and vote.

Students avoid labs with Rent-a-Mac

By LISA ROSSI
Collegian Correspondent

Last year Laura McDermott headed to Herter Hall to finish her term paper and discovered long lines at the Apple Macintosh Computer Lab, forcing her to manually type the end of the paper.

This year, she vowed, things would change.

With the help of a new service offered out of the Personal Computer Maintenance Lab in the Goodell library, she and others can rent a Mac and avoid the hassle that many students face with when trying to access the computer labs.

Computers are located in several locations around campus, including Herter Hall, Bartlett Hall and the New Africa House, according to Brian Clouthier, one of three campus representatives for Apple.

Clouthier said the students have the option to rent the computers by the semester, month or week, allowing for end of the semester term paper crunch. Prices range from $59 a week for the 512 K Enhanced to $69 a week for the Macintosh Plus. Peripherals, including printers and external drives, as well as software can be rented for an additional charge, he added.

Because computers are expensive for students, Mark Semonian, another campus representative, suggests that students share the cost. Semonian said four or five floormates pitching in is better than waiting in long lines.

Clouthier said that other universities, including Harvard, Temple and Connecticut have successfully implemented similar Macintosh renting services.

So far, business has been slow, but when the end of the semester approaches and the term papers pile up Clouthier said business will boom.

The computers are owned by Campus Computer Rentals, a Boston based company, that provides the university with computers and servicing as needed.

Most students prefer renting because they will only use a computer for word processing, computer games and homework. In short, renting is more practical, said Clouthier.

In addition, Clouthier, a senior computer major, stressed buying a computer could prove useless, since today's computers often become out-of-date quickly.

Explaining the popularity of the Mac, he said most people can learn to use a Mac in five minutes, where as the IBM P.C. intimidates people because it takes more time to learn.

"The Mac is all object oriented which makes it easier to conceptually understand," said Clouthier, referring to the icons that visually guide the user through its functions.

Nuclear war not a casual debate

By DEBORAH OSSEN
Collegian Correspondent

Extremely abstract euphemisms and acronyms allow defense intellectuals to discuss nuclear war casually, a Harvard University professor said at a recent forum held in Thompson Hall.

Dr. Carol Cohn, a research scholar at the Center for Psychological Studies in the Nuclear Age at Harvard University, said she worked with and observed defense intellectuals, and found these people "spoke in a foreign language." Cohn termed the language, "techno-strategic discourse."

The use of metaphoric speech, Cohn found, created "a set of associations rather than horrifying and allowing emotion." The problem with techno-strategic discourse, she said, is that not only is the language abstract but the system itself is made of its own rules and models, and that model is not one for the world and does not describe reality.

"The reason more people do not know this is that it

Change toward democracy begins

• Hard-liner Honecker steps down amidst call for reform

BERLIN (AP) — Hard-line East German leader Erich Honecker, who oversaw the building of the Berlin Wall, stepped down yesterday and was replaced by a younger Communist Party loyalist amid growing unrest and calls for democratic reform.

Two other ruling Politburo members also lost their jobs in a shake-up during a meeting of the Communist Party Central Committee, but changes from Honecker's course were unlikely.

Communist Party leaders have made clear they will resist pro-democracy movements like those under way in Warsaw pact allies Poland and Hungary, which yesterday approved constitutional amendments creating a democratic political system.

Tens of thousands of East Germans have fled the country in recent months, turning their backs on the rigid authoritarian system, and thousands of citizens have staged massive demonstrations in recent weeks.

Honecker's replacement, 52-year-old Egon Krenz, has a reputation as a hard-liner opposed to the growing pro-democratic movement. The state-run news agency ADN said Krenz will take over as Communist Party chief, had of state and head of the military, replacing his mentor in all three roles.

AP photo

Egon Krenz, new East German Socialist Party Secretary General, during his meeting with the heads of the other East German parties yesterday after he was chosen to succeed Erich Honecker.

The 77-year-old Honecker, who was reported ill following ill following a gall bladder operation in August, said he was resigning for health reasons.

"My health no longer allows me to bring the energy to bear that the fate of our party and people requires today and in the future," he said in a statement carried by ADN.

Krenz, the youngest member of the Politburo, is known as a tough backer of the country's orthodox communist structure. He had been in charge of internal security issues and government-run youth organizations while being groomed as Honecker's successor.

"I told the Central Committee that I realize this is a difficult task that I have taken over," Krenz told East German television after his appointment. "In this very complicated time there is much work before us."

During a recent visit to China, Krenz led an East German delegation that expressed support for the way Chinese leaders handled pro-democracy protests in June. The protest were crushed when Chinese soldiers moved in with tanks and guns, and hundreds of people were killed.

However, Communist Party sources have said it was Krenz's decision to ask East German police to stop attacking pro-democracy demonstrators earlier this month in East Berlin and Dresden.

The demonstrations were the largest in the nation's 40-year history.

In West Germany, the mass-circulation newspaper Bild reported that Krenz is considering loosening up on travel restrictions for East Germans.

The difficulty of getting permission to travel outside the country has been one of the main complaints among citizens.

East German television said Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, who has sponsored many of the reforms sweeping Eastern Europe, congratulated Krenz on his appointment.

President Bush held out the prospect of improved relations with East Germany but suggested it was "way too early" to say whether the changes could pave the way.

In Hungary, amendments formally ending one-party domination, regulating free elections by next summer and creating the office of state president won overwhelming approval at the nationally televised session of Parliament.

The country was renamed the Republic of Hungary. Like other Soviet bloc nations, it had been known as a "people's republic" since 1949.

But the chamber stalled on one key move toward democracy, postponing a decision on opposition calls for a referendum on when to elect the head of state. Government leaders want to elect the head of state. Government leaders want the election next month, but opposition leaders say it's too soon.

• Hungary changes name, amends constitution

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — In the glare of TV lights, Parliament changed the country's communist name and created a democratic system yesterday by adopting key constitutional amendments.

Amendments formally ending one-party domination in Hungary, regulating free elections by next summer and creating the office of state president won overwhelming approval at the nationally televised session of Parliament.

The country was renamed the Republic of Hungary. Like other Soviet bloc nations, it had been known as a "People's republic" since 1949.

But the chamber stalled on one key move toward democracy, postponing a decision on opposition calls for a referendum on when to elect the head of state. Government leaders want the election next month, but opposition leaders say it's too soon.

Nonetheless, speaker of Parliament Matyas Szueros, who takes over as acting president until a new head of state is elected, proclaimed yesterday a historical day for Hungary.

"A parliamentary democracy and a legal state is being built in Hungary on the ruins of a dictatorship of sorts," Szueros reportedly told the Yugoslav news agency Tanjug.

The voting followed dissolution of the communist party and its replacement by the Hungarian Socialist party, which vows commitment to a democratic system while continuing for the moment to dominate national politics.

The State Department said yesterday in a statement in Washington:

"Today the Hungarian Parliament voted overwhelmingly in favor of an amended constitution which leaves only about 10 percent of the 1949 Stalinist document in place. The amended constitution contaias democratic principles and many of the elements of our own Bill of Rights. The constitution provides that Hungary will be declared a 'republic' not a 'people's republic.' The word 'people's' was a legacy from the Stalin era.

Parliament also began discussion of a law that will regulate teh operation and finances of political parties in the first multiparty elections since 1947.

Among the 94 modifications were amendments eliminating all references to the leading role of the dissolved communist party.

"Political parties may be freely established and may freely function," the amendment declared.

An entirely new constitution is to be drawn up and adopted by the new Parliament after the national elections, but Justice Minister Kalman Kulcsar has said the amendments were necessary to make next year's elections legal.

The new post of president of the republic replaces the 21-man collective presidency that had broad powers, including acting for Parliament when it was not sitting, as

Atlantis finally lifts off for Jupiter after troubles

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Space shuttle Atlanta finally lifted off yesterday on its controversial mission to send the nuclear-poweed Galileo probe to Jupiter for the closest look yet at the colossus of the solar system.

"You looked marvelous going up," Mission Control told commander Don Williams as the winged spacecraft reached orbit after two launch postponements.

"I feel a lot better," said Williams.

The Galileo's troubles — including money problems over the years and recent protest over its nuclear power supply — were left behind, and the probe was ready to begin its six-year, .4 billion-mile roundabout journey to Jupiter.

The astronauts were to release the probe from Atlantis' cargo bay later in the day. The shuttle circled Earth at an altitude of 184 miles.

Although concern over the Galileo's 49.4-pound plutonium power supply was argued in court, it drew no protestors to the Kennedy Space Center on launch day. Environmentalists had argued that a Challenger-like accident could scatter deadly plutonium-38 over Florida.

Nothing like that happened yesterday, and even the weather cooperated. Clouds and rain threatened to half the launch until the last minutes of the countdown, but the clouds suddenly dissipated and the shuttle darted into a bright blue sky, trailing a 700-foot geyser of fire.

The 132-ton Atlantis has a crew of five for the mission that ends Monday with a landing at Edwards Air Force Base in California at 2:38 p.m. EDT.

The $1.5 billion mission already was seven years behind schedule when Atlantis was grounded by rain at the last minute Tuesday and by a faulty engine computer last week.

"It feels great," said NASA chief scientist Lennard Fisk after liftoff. "It's been a long time."

Williams' crew consists of pilot Mike McCulley and mission specialists Ellen Baker, Franklin Chang-Diaz and Shannon Lucid.

Striking miners rescue three replacement workers

DEHUE, W.Va. (AP) — Striking United Mine Workers set aside 2 1/2 months of hostility to rescue three non-union coal company workers whose van slid down a hillside into a flooding creek, state police said yesterday.

"We really hate these guys, but we couldn't let them die," striking miner James Justice said yesterday. "We don't like them. We don't want to kill them, though."

Three men who went to work in August for Con-Serv Inc., a non-union company hired by A.T. Masey Coal Co. to operate its Rum Creek Coal Sales tipple, where coal is loaded ito trucks, were headed home after Tuesday's day shift.

High water from Rum Creek blocked the normal road leading away from the Logan County operation, and they got stuck.

Another Con-Serv employee in a four-wheel-drive truck hooked a chain to the van to pull it loose and was towing it along an alternate exit road leading up a steep hillside when the van lurched sideways and fell 75 feet into Rum Creek.

"The water probably cushioned their fall," Justice said.

Witnesses said about eight UMW men who also were blocked by the high water were following the truck and van up the hill when the accident occurred. All jumped out of their cars and helped the three escape from the rising water.

One of the workers, Rodney Walker of Cincinnati, was trapped with his foot pinned in the van, said state police trooper Ric Robinson.

The UMW men held Walker's head above the rising water while waiting for emergency workers to arrive, said state police Sgt. G.A. Ables.

"Without a doubt, had they not helped, he'd have died," Ables said. "He could not have extricated himself form that vehicle himself."

Justice is a Pittston coal Group employee who has been on strike since April. He and others throughout southern West Virginia and Kentucky have picketed Pittston and other non-union operations since.

"We don't want to see anyone killed over this," he said. "We don't want nobody hurt. We just don't want anybody taking our jobs."

Walker and the other workers, plus one of the UMW men, were treated at Man Appalachian Regional Hospital for cuts and bruises and released, Robinson said.

"Yesterday was a little common human bonding," said Ables. "Today they'll be hating each other again. They'll be fighting up there again this evening."

When the UMW members arrived back at their picket shack, some were subjected to razzing and told they should have let the replacement workers drown.

Atlantis heads for Jupiter

The liftoff was the start of a voyage that will take the probe on a looping path past Venus in February, back to within 620 miles of Earth in December 1990 and past Earth again at a 200-mile altitude two years later. The craft will arrive at Jupiter in December 1995 for a two-year orbit.

As part of the mission, a robot will separate from the Galileo spacecraft and plunge through Jupiter's gaseous atmosphere.

Scientists hope to gain insight into the birth of the solar system by studying Jupiter, which holds original material from that even 14 billions years ago. The planet's radius is 11 times that of the Earth and its mass 318 times greater.

The mission originally was to have started in 198, but money ran out. Then came the Challenger explosion in January 1986, delaying all shuttle flights for three years and prompting a change in the rocket to propel the Galileo.

The mission originally was budgeted at $425 million. It will climb to $1.9 billion by the time Galileo finishes a 10-orbit trip around Jupiter in 1997.

The sweeps past Earth and Venus will take advantage of the planets' gravity to accelerate the spacecraft to the proper speed to reach its distant target well as overruling parliamentary decisions.

Once the amendments take affect this month, the presidential council will be dissolved and Szueros will assume its powers until a president is elected.

The new president will be the commander-in-chief of the armed forces, is authorized to call national and regional elections and may initiate a referendum.

The president may also dissolve Parliament if it fails to approve a new government or votes for no-confidence in the government four times in one year.

The new president may be stripped of his office if he knowingly violates the constitution or other laws and may not be a leader of any political party.

Before the key votes, Premier Miklos Nemeth called an emergency Cabinet meeting to discuss an opposition petition to postpone the election to the new state presidency, tentatively scheduled for Nov. 6, until after next year's parliamentary elections.

Some opposition parties assert they have no time or resources to organize against Socialist Party candidate Imre Pozsgay.

Three Sharon teenagers arrested in possible anti-Semitic incident

SHARON (AP) — Three teenagers from Sharon have been charged with painting swastikas and other offensive graffiti on a gymnasium wall outside Sharon High School, police said.

Police Chief Bernard Coffey said the teens were charged with willful and malicious destruction of public property.

Police identified one of the teens as Matthew R. Tillman, 18. The other two were juvenile females, ages 16 and 15.

Police said the three used spray paint to draw two swastikas and two series of three K's, an apparent reference to the Ku Klux Klan. The youth also wrote obscene statements. The graffiti was discovered Sunday morning.

Coffey said Tuesday that detectives were investigating whether additional charges should be fined.

He declined to speculate whether the cases were spurred by recent publicity about anti-Semitic graffiti in Wellesley, where two 19-year-old men were charged earlier this month with spray painting anti-Semitic messages and other racial slurs in more than 20 locations.

Are you looking for a challenging, rewarding profession? You'll find it, and more, while learning to help people with speech, language and hearing disorders.

Boston-Bouvé College at Northeastern University offers two exciting master of science programs in Speech-Language Pathology or Audiology (the only one of its kind in the Boston area). Both programs are accredited by the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association.

You'll have the opportunity to gain practical experience in our on-campus speech clinic. In addition, both programs include clinical practice in many of Boston's prestigious medical institutions. Graduate assistantships and other financial aid are available.

Call (617) 437-2708, or write Graduate School, Boston-Bouvé College of Human Professions, 106 Dockser Hall, Northeastern University, Boston, MA 02115. Because some people's problems are worth listening to.

Dr. Robert Redden, Program Director and Chairman of the Department of Speech-Language, Pathology and Audiology, will be available to meet with you to discuss the programs on March 22, 1989 in the Psychology Department, from 12:30pm to 1:30pm. Ms. Elaine Allard, Coordinator of Graduate Admissions will also be available to answer any questions you might have about other graduate programs offered by Boston-Bouvé College.

Notes from the Campus Center Basement

In order to dispel rumors that are flying through campus, Chancellor Duffey has stated for the record that winter session is not going to be canceled. Take a pill people . . .

Seen the new style of the Globe? It is absolutely hideous. I grew up on the Globe, it was respected and honored. Now it looks like a cheesey small town newspaper that prints high school football scores on the front page. Some yuppies must have taken control of the paper, leaving poor Mike Barnicle looking more like an financial consultant than the cigar smoking, loud mouth that he is.

I was watching Donahue the other day with two Congress people on the show. They was speechifying about the right to an abortion after a rape. The male republican Representative said that if a woman got prompt medical attention after being rape she wouldn't get pregnant.

Now I's knows I just a ignorant joe from a little town called Boston, but I always thought that a woman was just either pregnant or not, but not this "possibly going to be pregnant", but ain't 'till the test is done and we know fer sure! So then she wouldn't be getting an abortion, since no one knows if she be pregnant. But, I guess the gentleman must know what he be talking about though. Next. . .

Have you ever stopped and thought about what a wonderful thing it is to read? That we can, by merely looking at numerous combination of 26 different symbols, produce texts that explain or extol life as we know it. That these formations called words, and then combinations of them — sentences — allow us to communicate.

Peter Leon

We can use these letters, words, and sentences as a guide to making oral sounds that have meaning to everyone who speaks the language. Even that other languages using the same symbols can make completely different sounds and still have everyone understanding.

Isn't that great?

Music has taken a great turn toward social consciousness. A lot of groups are singing about problems in our society, using the profits to support worthy causes.

Who hasn't heard Tracey Chapman soulfully sing about being poor and a minority in our society. Bruce Springsteen sings Born in the U.S.A. to publicize the fate of veterans. French pop stars got together to lend their talents to raise money for Armenia, after the big earthquake (It was much like the We Are The World campaign.)

My favorite group 10,000 Maniacs, on their album In My Tribe, sing about everything from child abuse to alcoholism to being old and lonely. It makes me feel good to hear musicians using the media to advance social consciousness.

This weeks quote: "All those lines and circles, to me a mystery. Eve pull down an apple and give a taste to me. If she could it would be wonderful.

—10,000 Maniacs, In My Tribe

Reading and writing are the fundamentals of education, if you didn't go to Boston yesterday, or call, or write a letter it is you who may never taste the apple.

Thus 'till next week UMass, I hope you taken the time to help save our future . . . before we don't have one.

Read Peter Leon every Thursday

Keep faces out of the paper

Last year my managing editor approached me with a smirk on his face and mayhem in his eyes.

"Jim, can we get a picture of you?" he asked.

"What for?" I responded as I looked up from my daily readings of the Boston Globe.

"We want to put it next to your column," he said.

Jim Clark

Whoa, Nelly. I could think of several reasons why this would be extremely detrimental to my health, the first being that I would never qualify as a coverboy for Gentleman's Quarterly, and that I photograph slightly worse than Dorian Gray.

I glanced down at my paper. Staring back at me was Globe columnist Leigh Montville, to this day my idol in the business. I remembered the first time I met Leigh, totally expecting to see the face that accompanied his column four times a week.

Instead I saw this man, about 5-foot-6, with bright red hair, a red mustache and a voice that could impair the hearing of dogs. I almost split a gut on the spot. "That's what you really look like?" I thought.

That's why I've never been a proponent of photos accompanying columns in newspapers. Like radio disc jockeys, we were meant to be faceless. Sometimes we write stuff that upsets a few folks, and wouldn't want to be identified when buying Pop Tarts at Price Chopper. Why do you think Boston Herald resident pop-shot artist Howie Carr strolls the streets of Boston packing a gun?

Then the Globe decided to redesign its paper. Everything from type faces to design, including . . . columnists' photos.

I got my first exposure to this new idea Sunday morning at Dairy Mart. Picking up the Globe and thumbing to the sports section, I expected to see the usual Orphan-Annie face of Dan Shaughnessy. Instead I got some likeness that looked as if it had been contrived on an Etch-a-Sketch. Not only Shaughnessy, everyone had fallen victim of this high-tech trap.

Yeesh. Pass the Pepto-Bismol.

The more I dove into the new design, the sicker I got. As someone who grew up reading the Globe, such a drastic change was hard to swallow. It wasn't a slight alteration, like what the Herald did last month. This was a major overhaul, a total revamping. Back up the trucks, bring in the interior decorators.

As mortified as I was, I had resigned myself to believe that there was nothing I, or any of the other half-million Globe readers could do. Obviously, months of planning and discussion had gone into this particular demolition project. The damage had already been done.

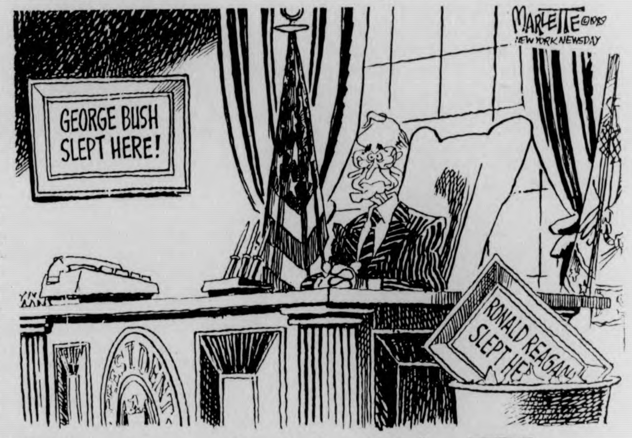
Then, along came Mike Barnicle. In his column Tuesday, he complained openly about the pictures, especially his — sans the traditional cigar. He also expressed disbelief in what these modern art computer whizzes had done to his colleagues. I stood up and gave a triumphant cheer.

The Herald jumped on the wagon yesterday, printing random new logos next to pictures of American heroes (Bella English and the Statue of Liberty, Peter Horton and Col. Sanders, etc.). English took her turn of criticism. But amazingly, there was no photo next to her column. Gone. Shaughnessy's . . . gone, too.

I could hear the sighs of relief echoing all over.

Maybe the new design will be easier to read, more attractive to the younger crowd, more up with the times. Personally it makes me gag. But the pictures are gone, so even though the Globe took one giant leap backward overall, scrapping the pix was a tiny step in the right direction.

Read Jim Clark every Thursday



Missing classic 70's TV

It was a time of huge collars, medallions, crappy music, and overall poor taste. It was an era of fashionless fashion, passionless passion, and peanut farmers from Georgia. Some laugh at it, be it out of embarrassment for being involved or sheer delight that it's long gone. It is the "seventies" in all its gook and glory. And I miss it so.

Josh Galitsky

One thing that the seventies had that was better than any other time in history was television. Oh sure, such bombs as Mr. T and Tina or Carter Country leave a bitter taste in our mouths, but I am talking more specifically about those shows that made it great to be a kid. Those Saturday morning, after school, and just before bedtime shows were the best.

Cartoons of the seventies ruled. Remember when the villains were truly terrifying? They weren't pencil-neck geeks like Skeletor or some clunky Transformer. They were scary and infamous bad guys such as Simon Bar Sinister the sneaky genius, Dr. Shrinker and of course the Jack Nicklaus of the seventies: Avery Schriver as Mr. Evil.

The cartoon heroes from that magical era were cooler too. They had all the characteristics of the true hero. They were strong and well-conditioned like Adam Ant. They were quick and agile like Ricochet Rabbit. They were courageous like Dudley Dooright. Some were even sensitive and fluffy like H.R. Puffinstuff.

Dogs in seventies' cartoons were much more amazing and real. Even Underdog needed to take a vitamin now and then to keep up his strength. Hong Kong Phooey spent long hours of training to perfect his martial arts techniques. Scoobydoo was doin' just fine gulping down those 3-foot grinders before that twerp Scrappy showed up. How can we accept cartoon canine going from a genius like Mr. Peabody to a semi-moron like Deputy Dog?

Cats were also much more interesting. Funky felines like Felix the Cat and the suave Topcat were the best. Now they have been phased out by the ultra boring, Heathcliff, and the somewhat hip Garfield. Let's face it, as cool as Garfield can be, his voice shouldn't sound like "Carlton your Doorman" from the show Rhoda.

Informational shows directed at kids have changed too. Back in the seventies one could turn on Channel 2 and learn how to speak in Ubby Dubby by watching Zoom. (Which one of you didn't learn a SASE was a Self-Addressed Stamped Envelope?) Also Doug and Emmy Jo taught us plenty at Freddy the Frog's expense on the New Zoo Review. When you weren't learning something you could always just sit and wonder if you could fit your whole arm up Henrietta the Hippo's nostrils.

And of course there were the two biggies, the Brady Bunch and the Partridge Family, that we relive today, in conversations past 3 a.m. Whenever I think of those two shows, two questions come to mind. First, if the Brady's were an example of the typical American family, how come they met so many celebrities like Joe Namath and Davy Jones? And two, if the Partridge Family was a real band, was the tambourine player really necessary?

Ahh, the seventies. I will look back on you and smile. Gone are the days of laughing so hard your "sides will ache, your heart will go pitter pat." I'll think of you in my days of suffering as I watch yet another lame show with Tony Danza.

Thanks for the madness

I would like to sincerely thank all of you who attended our Midnight Madness scrimmage to open up the beginning of our new season. We all were very happy with the turnout and we know that the "Rage in the Cage" is back.

We need each and every one of you to be behind us throughout the entire season. On behalf of the students and our fans, we have donated seven boxes of food to the Western Massachusetts Food Bank. Again, thank you.

Try to avoid an old mistake

For the fifth consecutive semester, Theta Chi has been included in the column "UMass Racism: Some History," the last time being October 11, 1989. Every time another racial attack occurs here, we are included in the chronology of incidents. Since the first article appeared in the Collegian, we have tried to clarify the actual incidents of May 16, 1987.

An incident did occur involving an African-American student and a Theta Chi member. After intensive investigation, the vice chancellor, the Amherst police and Office of Greek Affairs exonerated Theta Chi racist charges. The only charges brought against Theta Chi were for alcohol violations.

I suspect that the Collegian did not re-investigate the story, but relied on past stories that were incorrect, thereby perpetuating the same mistake and causing us a grave disservice. I would hope that in the future the Collegian will expunge our name from this evil list.

The Brothers of Theta Chi

Misinformation only hurts us

Dr. Arthur Hilson, director of Public Safety, made statements in the Oct. 17 Collegian that he was misquoted and misrepresented in my article of Oct. 11 when I wrote that he said two attacks which occurred over that weekend were racially motivated and involved Black students.

Scott Hill

I say again, Hilson told me that both attacks involved Black students. He said it to me for my story, and to two other reporters, one writing for the Associated Press.

By giving untrue information to the press, Hilson did a grave disservice to the Black/Third World community. As a result of this error, much of the UMass community thinks that neither incident was racial.

For some reason, Hilson was confused about his facts regarding the Northeast Area incident.

The confusion that Hilson engendered caused an extremely important occurence to be brushed aside. According to UMass police reports and to the victim whom I spoke to personally, a Black man was harassed, called "nigger," and beaten. If that is not a racial assault, I don't know what is.

By misinforming the press about the Northeast incident, many non-minority people may think that "those Black students just make up all that racism stuff." Now, the veracity of any racist incidents we expose will be questioned. Thanks Art.

As anyone who works with me knows, I never quote someone without telling him or her exactly what I intend to attribute to them word for word. He knew what was being attributed to him before the article was written.

The article was printed on the 11th, and it wasn't until six days later when his error was exposed that he started accusing Collegian staff members of misquoting him.

This is not the first time Hilson has lied to the UMass community through the Collegian. On February 16, 1988, during the New Africa House takeover, Hilson denied that a bomb threat occured in New Africa House.

The Amherst Fire chief later verified that a bomb threat had taken place and that Hilson himself told him to respond to it. Apparently, Hilson feels that keeping the community correctly informed is not important.

It's a shame Mr. Hilson doesn't have the courage to take responsibility for his mistakes and instead chooses to cast blame on reporters who are honestly trying to keep the public aware of racial violence in the community.

When a high-ranking University official seems so unconcerned with the truth of his statements made to the press, and by so-doing hurts the community he is supposed to protect. Perhaps his future as a UMass employee should be questioned.

Never a season for condiments

A while back, a colleague of mine wrote a column expressing his disdain for mayonnaise. The piece stirred my interest, for I too maintain a cautious attitude toward this heart-stopping mixture of eggs, oil, vinegar and God knows what else. However, my concerns go one step further.

Cosmo Macero Jr.

I hate all condiments. Ketchup, mustard, relish and even "Miracle Whip," whatever the hell that is, have no place on my food, in my refrigerator, and certainly not anywhere near my mouth.

The closest thing to a condiment that I've ever found even remotely tasty is barbecue sauce. Even that, with its tangy, biting flavor, becomes tiresome rather quickly.

This intense hatred I have for all that is jarred and mushy can be traced back to my childhood. Attempts by my mother to lace my lunch meats with thin layers of Grey Poupon were quickly met by violent launchings of the evil sandwiches, and summer cookouts became torture as I struggled to explain to my astonished aunts that I really didn't want that homemade piccalily on my hot dog.

As I grew older, I became plagued by inquiries as to why I favored dry salads, plain hamburgers and roast beef with no mayo.

Most exasperating were trips to McDonalds or other so called "fast-food" restaurants, where a simple request for a burger with no ketchup or pickles entails a painful delay of at least 12 to 16 minutes in which the rocket scientists behind the counter frantically rush around to prepare a "special order."

All this nonsense considered, however, I must admit that there is one particular incident that has been the greatest contributing factor to the development of my present state of mind.

Keep in mind that the following account is entirely factual:

Three years ago, I made a trip with a couple of other guys to visit a friend at Salem State College. After failing to gain entrance to the Trackside bar, we headed back to his apartment for a night of beer drinking, tobacco chewing and other male bonding-type activities. Sometime in the wee hours, after pledging to "booze 'til sunrise," I passed out in traditional form, slumped in a chair, a freshly opened beer spilled across my lap and my mouth opened wide.

What exactly happened during the time I was asleep is not entirely clear. However, when I awoke, all the chutney hatred I had ever posessed came rushing out with a vicious fury. My "friends" had dropped several heaping spoonfuls of mustard (easily the most un-tasty condiment of all) in and around my mouth.

The taste, smell and overall sensation was both disgusting and terrifying, not to mention infuriating. I coughed, choked and spit the retched concoction in all directions.

As my friends put it, I had been given "the mustard treatment."

To add insult to injury, I happened to be wearing my favorite 100 percent cotton, perfectly torn, XXL, hooded Navy sweatshirt. The gruesome yellow junk had splattered all over the precious garment. Only three years later, after at least 100 washings, did I feel confident enough to once again pull that sweatshirt over my head.

I was mentally scarred.

Needless to say, the trauma was too much to handle, and I have since passed the sweatshirt on to a close friend. Hopefully, she can better appreciate its value once she learns of my ordeal.

My loathing for anything creamy and spreadable is stronger than ever. Condiments suck. Got that?

The weather can be deceiving

It's Monday morning and you wake up shivering. You get up run into the bathroom and take a long, hot shower. Feeling refreshed and alert you look into your closet for something to wear.

Minu Sebastian

Still feeling cold and observing the weather outside (cloudy, gloomy and rainy), you come to believe that it is cold outside. So being the sensible person you are, you choose to wear a sweater and a pair of jeans. And before you leave to go outside you grab a warm jacket.

As you are walking to class you feel very content, you are showered and you are warm. As the wind blows in your face, instead of putting your head down trying to avoid the cold gusts, you stand tall and are ready to face any kind of potential bodily harm. You finally get to class. A couple of hours later, you step outside to challenge the weather again. This time you are not so content.

In the past two hours (while you were in class), the temperature has gone up at least 30 degrees. Earlier when you were walking around, it was 40 degrees, cloudy, rainy and windy. Now it's 75 degrees, sunny, and humid.

What is going on? Have you entered a time warp and gone back to the Spring of '89? You immediately take out your date book to make sure that it is actually October. You are relieved to discover that you haven't entered a time warp and that it is actually the season you thought. You look around and see that the leaves are changing color so your belief is confirmed, it is fall.

Lately, it has been easy to get the seasons confused. You wake up in the morning and you're shivering cold. Your mind wanders to thoughts of the upcoming winter months when you can go skiing.

Then all of a sudden you are hot, and your mind is forced to go back to times in the summer of swimming, tanning etc. This can make any person feel like they are losing their mind.

Well, you are not going crazy. Try to relax and make the most of the weather.

Contrary to the occasional warm weather conditions and bizarre weather reports, it is officially fall. What makes the fall any different from any of the other seasons? For one thing if you've had a chance to look around you, the leaves are vibrant colors of yellow, orange, rust and red.

The fall is especially beautiful in this area. The older buildings, churches, and small town atmosphere contribute to the warm and romantic feeling so characteristic of the fall.

One way to take appreciate the season, even for busy college students, would be to take a drive up to Sugarbush Mountain. Driving up to the top of the mountain, you are surrounded by trees which are at their peak of coloring. Surrounded by bright and majestic leaves you will be able too feel the essence of fall.

Once you are on top of the mountain, you can look down and admire the the surrounding mountains and view around you. The Connecticut River flows below separating a town from the wooded area. As you look down you can see the old-fashioned style of houses and churches which contribute to the magnificent view.

So before you have a nervous breakdown trying to figure out what season it is, try looking around you or take a drive. It could be a refreshing and invigorating experience.

Letters to the Editor

Spreading hatred is wrong

In his article, "I know how Cinderella feels," (Oct. 12) Josh Galitsky told a pretty grim tale of his upbringing with his wicked stepmother. The most impressive thing was the pure hatred which he so vehemently expressed. Surely he was deliberately trying to incite some reaction in his readers with this offense.

I am impressed with your courage and ability to expose someone as being so unhealthy in the mind — you! Don't get me wrong, this is not an insult as it seems. Your intelligence, creative writing ability, and awareness of your emotions all seem to be intact. Indeed you portray not anything close to an ideal for you and your Dad. But surely you are smart enough to transcend the exaggerated perceptions of your childhood and realize that you would have hated her regardless of who she is. You resent her because she's not your mother.

Lacking in intelligence, personality, sensitivity, or whatever her criminal faults are — we're not talking Ted Bundy here! Or not even Cinderella's wicked stepmother. No one deserves to be trashed like that. Hatred such as yours is not a nice thing to spread around the community in a newspaper.

Please watch your stickers

Before addressing my gripe, I must first clarify that I am in complete support of the LBGA and all that it stands for. Freedom and equality are basic human rights. Freedom of speech is also something we cherish in America. However, it has come to my attention that the LBGA and its supporters have, in informing the community, created a dilemma.

Stickers with the slogan "We are everywhere" are appearing. While the abundance of stickers is effective, their placement has become "esthetically displeasing." A small sticker in the middle of a clean white wall can be quite ugly! There are literally thousands of places these stickers can (and do) fit in nicely and effectively. I wish the LBGA members and supporters would be more conscious of others on campus. While I make this statement concerning the LBGA and its actions, I am not solely directing this to the LBGA. I hope that other organizations will understand that freedom of speech is essential, but that this campus is also the property and "home" of others.

I must address a specific act of an LBGA member or supporter concerning the placement of numerous stickers blanketing the Republican Club door in the Student Union. This act was an indirect attack on the LBGA itself. While I do not agree with all the ideals of the conservative Republican Club, I recognize the placement of these stickers as an attack on ideological differences. The campaign working toward a broader "awareness" should not be marred by an individual act of ignorance.

In the placement of these stickers, the person(s) responsible defaced the property of others, thus representing the LBGA in a negative light. In such a positive campaign, this act was unrepresentative of the LBGA.

While our campus may not be one of the most "esthetically pleasing," it is home. I hope that in the future the supporters of the LBGA and all other organizations with messages to publicize will be more conscious of their neighbors feeling and property.

Reality has nothing to do with color

To those of you involved in last weekend's violence and to others who condone it:

How ironic it is that next week is Civility Week.

Perhaps you will stumble upon wisdom. But, until then, maybe you can help me understand and tell me why . . .

Why do you believe in inferiority and superiority? Why do you put yourself in the latter group?

I am confused.

Are you so insecure that you need to act violently towards others because you cannot figure out who you are.

Or, are you threatened by the fact that the people who you consider to be minorities, are thinking, feeling, intelligent individuals. How did you come to believe in such low morals?

Are you that unenlightened that you can only comprehend blind ignorance?

It disgusts me, my stomach churns, my body shakes and my mind is puzzled when I hear that you or your bigoted buddies have decided to perfect your world.

Why is it so hard for you to understand the concept and reality of equality and that competence, in any aspect has nothing to do with color.

Have consideration of others

Recently I have needed to sell a particular possession of mine. I decided that the cheapest and easiest way to advertise would be to put up signs in the bus stops or on the many bulletin boards found around campus.

When I tacked up my signs I was very careful to make sure that I was not covering up anyone else's posting, or if I did, at least one that had expired. Unfortunately, many people are not this considerate. After only a couple hours of having my signs posted, I discovered that they had been indiscriminately stapled over, taped over, and tacked over by other signs. I won't name names, but the culprits vary from fraternities, RSOs, copy center, local businesses, to almost any kind of campus organization.

Please have consideration for the signs that have already been posted. I encourage others to do the same. It's time for this blatant, selfish disregard of others to end.

Marsalis gets coal in stocking for Christmas

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Only 67 shopping days until Christmas, and what's a yuppie to do? Let's decide what music to put on the CD changer for background listening while enjoying the California chardonnay around the tree.

Valley
Jazz

Hmmm, already have George Winston's December and Mannheim Steamroller's Christmas album. But wait! Now there's trumpeter Wynton Marsalis' Crescent City Christmas Card, on CBS records — the same folks who brought you Miles Davis and Bob Dorough's wretched "Blue Xmas" and (don't laugh) the God Rest Ye Merry Jazzmen compilation.

Although I am often tempted otherwise, I usually don't write about famous stars I don't like, because I figure that my column-inches would be better spent giving exposure to lesser known musicians who need and deserve it. (Hence no mention of Dave Brubeck's recent FAC concert).

I have never been a fan of Wynton Marsalis, although I respect him for his integrity and for his efforts (however misguided) to uphold jazz as a serious art form. However, I have also never been a fan of Christmas albums, so this album's "double whammy" makes me unable to remain reticent.

In an age when pop-fusion musicians dominate jazz radio and record sales, Wynton Marsalis has been an effective crusader for the respectability of traditional jazz. However, he has been indicted for his reactionary views and his over-seriousness; on record, in carefully-staged magazine interviews, and via the windy preachings of Stanley Crouch, his liner-note writer. According to him, jazz innovation stopped around 1960, and all developments in the music since then are circumspect.

None of this would matter if his music could stand on its own. Yet his playing, while technically impeccable, is almost entirely artifice at the expense of emotion. One critic called his performances "chilly masterpieces," and a knowledgable friend of mine said that Marsalis "studies the blues, while [another famous trumpeter] plays the blues."

Up to now, his integrity has been unimpeachable, though even then one could argue that it is easy to have "integrity" when, thanks to media overhype, his many albums have gone gold. I say "up to now" because Crescent City Christmas Card is an insidious thing: a way of selling out without playing fusion or new age.

Anyone who is familiar with Wynton's usual, harmonically abstruse style of writing will understand how ridiculous an idea it is to graft that and other jazz elements onto such Christmas songs as "Little Drummer Boy," "Hark! The Herald Angels Sing," "We Three Kings," etc., as he has done on this album.

The treatment of "Silent Night" incorporates the even sillier idea of having Kathleen Battle, a fine Black operatic soprano, join in. It might have been fun to hear Miles Davis play the tune instead, but that would be impossible since he and Wynton are arch enemies.

But the silliest of all is "Twas the Night Before Christmas," in which Wynton's whiny voice recites the poem over an Ellington-like band arrangement. The result sounds dangerously close to the version Eddie Murphy did (as Buckwheat) on Saturday Night Live.

To these ears, the album's only success is "Carol of the Bells," which gets a treatment in the Ellington "jungle" style.

Crescent City Christmas Card is part of what seems to be Wynton's struggle against advancing beyond the musical cage he has built for himself. Unable and/or unwilling to make his music progress, he instead embraces artificial sounding conceptual ideas. In addition, the album is blatant yuppie exploitation at its worst. It's the kind of music that is designed for yuppies to play and say, "Look, Muffy, it's real bona fide jazz, just like they have at Carnegie Hall." It deserves to be ignored as much as possible.

Dancing with the establishment

By WILLIAM J. GEORGIADES

Norman Mailer, one of the premier living men of American letters received the Emerson/Thoreau prize from the American Academy of Arts and Sciences last Wednesday Oct.11 for his "distinguished contributions to American literature." There have only been twelve previous recipients of this prestigious award, given out every four years, the first being T.S. Elliott.

Looking dapper in a beautifully cut three piece suit the surprisingly short and stocky Mailer held court among the academic elite of Cambridge, sipping weak whiskey and waters, looking like he was right at home. The prospect of asking such a proper looking gent about some of his more notorious past escapades seemed, at the least, to be inappropriate. The thirst for gossip, scandal and other assorted superficialites was, however, soon quieted and quenched by what the man had to say as a writer.

Close to 70 years old now, Mailer looked far younger but spoke and acted like a man who has more important things to do than singlehandedly carry the torch of debaucher extrodinaire. Important things like writing.

In his acceptance speech he made a number of points that could only have been made by a man who's been in the literary spotlight for over 40 years.

The man who Robert Lowell referred to as "our most talented writer," was introduced as just that by Helen Vendler from the Harvard University English department. When asked later on in the evening why Mailer was receiving this honor so late in his career she said, "well, everyone is recognized a little late."

This point was by no means an issue to the man who wrote The Naked and the Dead 42 years ago. His acceptance speech consisted of a piece of writing "that I've been working on, off and on, for as long as I can remember."

While waxing poetic on the "hazards of writing" Mailer spoke about being a young writer, recalling that The Naked and the Dead was published when the author was 25 years old.

"If your'e a young writer then there's little hope that you're an all American type of kid,"he said. "The young writer is a loner who carries with him the conviction that he is right and that the world is wrong. The world had better be wrong, otherwise he is. And the paranoid aim of the cockeyed young writer is to prove that he is right."

"The problem with writing," he said, "is that it's a profession that takes as long to learn as the piano." One of the biggest problems even an established writer must deal with is the critics. "Reviewers can be murderous," said the man who has had more than his share of unkind criticism. "A hole in the ego hurts worse than a hole in the heart. But it is fair, harsh but fair," he said. "The critics keep our numbers down."

He continued by saying that there are two categories for novel writing. "When I wrote The Naked and the Dead it was wholly comfortable, it was everything that I had learned and experienced in 25 years."

"The next book I wrote however, Barbary Shore, was much more of a mystery. It felt as if someone else was writing it. My unconscious mind was definately in action. Every other novel that I wrote falls into one or the other category. It makes me feel as though I'm a spirit medium," he said.

After the speech Mailer said "novel writing is like love. Poetry is more sexy, more of a one night stand."

He also said that "potential writers have to unite the spiritual and physical sides of life that has not been done in the last few decades of writing in America.

"There's been a gap from, say, F.D.R. to Reagan where I don't think that writers have done enough."

Currently he's working on something called Harlot's Ghost. When asked whether or not this work is "a gift from the gods," Mailer said the already 1500 pages of manuscript are a "punishment from the Gods."

Ari Vais ages well with new band Sound Pie

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

The more music stays the same, the more Ari Vais changes.

Vais is a local favorite in the Five College Area. His last solo acoustic gig packed Sheehan's cafe in Northampton.

Tonight, Vais will bring his guitar to the Hatch. But he will also bring bassist Daisy Aaronian, rhythm guitarist Matt Webster and drummer Eric Fortier. Together they make up Sound Pie. The acoustic trio, Green Eyes will open the show.

"This is my first band at UMass, and this is our first gig," Vais said. "It will be radically different from my solo show. When I play solo, my songs are kind of moody and acoustic. This will be sort of a punk/reggae fest."

The idea of a band formed when Vais heard Aaronian practicing. "Daisy lived in my building and I heard her practicing her jazz bass and she was excellent," Vais said. "She joined me for a few songs on one of my acoustic shows and it went over real well, so we decided to put a whole rhythm section together."

Vais put up signs asking for a drummer and rhythm guitarist. Fortier and Webster were chosen from the many performers who auditioned. "I thought it would be hard to find people who just wanted to learn my songs," Vais said. "But these people are really into it."

Fans who wish to hear their favorite Vais originals should not fret, for they make up the bulk of the Sound Pie set. They just sound a little different. "A lot of my songs are real fast. They're acoustic, but with an edge. With the band, that edge really comes through," Vais said.

An example of this is the lyrically rich "1980s," which Vais described as "a slow, Neil Youngesque ballad." Vais said, "It will sound the same [as it does solo], but with more of a beat."

The band will also perform a few covers, including the classic Iggy Pop and the Stooges song, "I Wanna Be Your Dog," and the Velvet Underground's "Femme Fatale," in which Aaronian sings lead. "She sounds a lot like Nico," Vais said.

At this point, Vais is unclear about the future of Sound Pie. "I still prefer to play solo, because it's easier," Vais said. "With a band, it's much more rehearsal. Because I'm such a perfectionist, if one thing sounds sloppy, I make everyone rehearse until it sounds perfect."

Vais' career has begun to take off lately. He will perform solo as the first major event at the new Hillel House on Nov. 9. Also in November, he will release a solo demo tape called Aging Well. The tape contains 14 Vais originals which will soon be available at Al-Bum's.

Cookie serves crumbs

By JENNIFER FINOCCHIO
Collegian Correspondent

Cookie
Amherst Cinema

Daddy's coming home. And Cookie doesn't care.

This is what we are led to believe in one of the opening scenes of Susan's Seidelman's new comedy, Cookie. The film stars Emily Lloyd in the title role as the quirky, street smart, gum-snapping daughter of Dino Delucia (Peter Falk), a convicted mafioso who is a bit rusty in the art of parenthood.

FILM REVIEW

Released on payroll after thirteen years of imprisonment, Dino wants to go straight, but only after he can collect on an unsettled debt from his back-stabbing former partner in crime. He employs Cookie as his driver and then fires her when bullets begin to fly from passing cars.

But Cookie is a tough one. She immediately takes a healthy, if naive, interest in her father's affairs and proceeds to help set up a plan to retrieve Dino's money and save his life. All in a day's work for a Mafia princess.

While Cookie begins well as a story of matching wits between father and daughter, it loses its appeal within the first half-hour. Aside from performances by Lloyd and Falk (which is still far from his best), the other characters are no more than over the top cartoon figures.

Cookie's mother, Diane Wiest, is the melodramatic "other woman" in Dino's life who has faithfully waited thirteen years for his return. She is the pathetic victim of circumstance who cannot have her man and cannot discipline her daughter, breaking out into uncontrollable fits of sobbing which can be consoled only by bon-bons, roses and melting kisses from Dino. She is, as Cookie refers to her, a wimp.

Bunny, on the other hand, is the scornful wife who won't give Dino a divorce, although her only true love is for her dog-grooming business, "Bunny's Bark Salon." Other characters include Dino's associates; sordid mobsters who think nothing of blowing up cars and shooting at their enemies while cruising down the highway at a hundred miles an hour.

In fact the whole movie is painfully stereotypical. As usual, we see backstabbing Mafia mobsters who toast each other at Christmas parties with tears in their eyes and then plot to blow each other up. We see the pining, spurned, ignored wives and lovers. We see the portrait of Italian men who try to match checkered blazers with striped pants and loud ties — the same men who decorate their offices with gaudy Roman statues and fill their bellies with canneloni. There is even a hot-shot attorney general trying to put them behind bars and bumbling all the way (I'm not sure how he could bug their offices, photograph their meetings, have them followed by the FBI and miss their plotting of Dino's assassination).

We can see it all in Cookie. Unfortunately we've seen it all before in some other movie and this time it doesn't quite work.

The only real potential in Cookie is the antagonistic relationship between Cookie and her father. Although not wholly original, it could have helped carry the movie more succesfully to its conclusion. But its development is vague and unconvincing. I could not decide at which point Cookie's feelings for Dino transgressed from contemptuous indifference to dedication - or why.

Cookie was mildly entertaining thanks only to Falk, who offered a few good one-liners, and Lloyd, who provided a new twist in a shopworn plot.

Student Films have new ideas

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Tonight, film buffs have a chance to catch a sneak preview of the creative works of the writers, directors, editors and producers of tomorrow, all for free.

The UMass communications department, in conjunction with Union Video Center, is sponsoring a showing of short, 16mm films produced by students who took the six week summer production course taught by Joel Saxe.

"The students learn the basic technique of 16mm operation using a Bolex camera," Saxe said. "It's a real basic camera. It runs on a crank, but it's a real workhorse. They're shooting silent, black and white film. We're very lucky in that UMass is one of the few universities to have a 16mm black and white film processing room."

Deborah Kaufman, who produced the film Eclaire's, a documentary on her father's pastry shop and its unique clientele, said of the class, "It was one of the few opportunities on campus to get practical experience. I wish there was further opportunity to further study film, not just theory. It's hard to gauge your talent on just one course."

The course, which involves only 12 students, is one of two production courses the University offers. In Saxe's class, students learn about the aesthetic properties of film, such as lighting, editing and pacing. But Saxe stresses avant-garde and experimental techniques.

"I try to get the people to think about what the medium is in its formal aspects," Saxe said. "There's a real freshness, vitality and passion to what the students do. Because we don't have the resources, it forces us to be creative."

Many of the class films include a technique called "scratching." In this tedious process, students scratch words onto each individual frame of film.

Thom DeVita, in his examination of counterculture, and Phil Straub and Gina Johnson, in their fantasy film, all use scratching.

The most powerful example of scratching is by Claire Youkilis. In her film, she raises questions about abortion by intercutting words from a feminist poem between images of women and children. "The scratched words have a life of their own. They literally dance on the screen," Saxe said.

Other films are just as intriguing in both content and technique. Gary Dixon interweaves both scratching and animation in Heart Throb, which Saxe describes as "a portrait of a woman who gets all dressed up and has no place to go."

In Richard Jone's film of Black pride, he documents people at the barber shop he goes to. Fueled by a jazz/fusion soundtrack, the movie includes amazing shots of nothing more than men lining up waiting to get their hair cut. The film was well received when it was shown at the Farrakhan speech last year, and Jones now attends the prestigious NYU film school.

Kimi Takasue's film, Culture Shock, examines exotic and Oriental stereotypes, as well as the commercialization of the Oriental culture in the United States. "Kimi's film raised a lot of controversy and discussion in class because she's putting things out there. There's a real freshness in her work," Saxe said.

The event takes place in Herter 227 at 7:30 p.m.

students rally at Statehouse

Nakajima presented petitions with 5,000 signatures from UMass students asking for an end to the budget cuts to the office of Richard Voke, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Some students who had gathered outside of Dukakis' office and demanded to speak with him, were escorted by Rep. Stan Rosenberg, D-Amherst, to the Gardner Auditorium where they voiced their grievances to some representatives.

For about two-and-a-half hours, legislators met with some 500 students for an impromptu forum in the auditorium. The legislators addressed problems and gave suggestions on how students can effectively utilize their frustration.

"This action today will turn the tide. It is inescapable," Rosenberg said.

He suggested that students target legislators opposed to a $600 million tax package for public higher education by writing letters, registering to vote and further mobilizing their campuses. Rosenberg and others believe the package's passage would alleviate the cuts.

Rep. Nicholas A. Paleologo, D-Woburn, informed students of his proposed bill which, if enacted, would increase state sales tax by one cent, earmarking the revenue for higher education.

tacted the Statehouse using telephones in Front Lounge of the Newman Center, said Mary Spellicy, who helped coordinate the phone drive.

"There's been a steady stream of students all day long. It's terrific," Spellicy said.

The phone drive was originally scheduled for 10 a.m. but began at 8:30 a.m. The early start was fueled by eager students who were turned away from the filled buses going to the rally in Boston.

Spellicy, a coordinator with Special Events, said some students on their way to the rally stopped by the Newman Center to offer rides to those who had been left behind.

She said the phones will be open again today from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m., and possibly later.

Calls were placed to the governor and several state senators and representatives yesterday.

Jacoby Carter, a graduate student, said he phoned 14 senators and representatives, some of whom were committee chairpersons.

Carter said he did not talk with any legislators, but was able to have conversations with their aides.

"Phoning will definitely have an effect," Carter said. "An important part of the democratic process is letting your representatives know how you feel about issues."

He said state legislators will have to raise taxes so that more money can be spent on education. He expressed his dismay at the anti-taxes sentiment sweeping the state.

"The other side that doesn't want tax increases is constantly lobbying the legislature," Carter said. "You can bet that if you don't let the legislature know how you feel, they will listen to that side that does."

Claudia Brass, a clerk at the State Relations office who also helped coordinate the phone drive, said every call to the Statehouse matters.

"It all counts. It all adds up," Brass said.

is a language that is highly specialized, scientific and intimidized," she said.

An example given by Cohn was the domesticated term footprint used for the pattern of MIRV missiles. Cohn said that the defense intellectuals "do not think of themselves as warmongers but as intelligent people who are doing their best and the civilian society does not understand what they are doing."

The lecture was sponsored by the five-college Program in Peace and World Studies.

It was conducted by the Boston chapter of the Names Project, a grassroots organization established for the creation and display of the quilt.

Sarah Malone, a member of the Boston Names Project, said she tries to educate people as often as possible about the quilt and what it represents.

"People don't want to hear about death and frustration. They just want to see the quilt, because it's beautiful," Malone said. "Then through the quilt they find out about AIDS, people, and the frustration behind this disease."

The quilt, which was first conceived by gay rights activist, Cleve Jones during a 1985 San Francisco Pride march, now contains over 11,000 panels, representing about 17 percent of the people who have died from AIDS-related causes in the United States alone.

The quilt, completing its second North American tour in Washington D.C. two weeks ago, now weighs more than 16 tons and its length exceeds that of seven football fields.

Two videos and three speakers accompanied this portion of the quilt. They provided a historical background of the Names Project and its intent.

According to Malone, the quilt's three-fold purpose is to educate, foster discussion on AIDS, and raise funds for direct AIDS relief in local communities.

Many audience members were moved by the presentation of this nationwide vision of American folk art.

"I thought it visually presented images of people who have died from AIDS," said UMass student Bob Bureau. "The image is beautiful and approachable and it opens the issue up for people who are afraid of AIDS."

UMass graduate student Maureen Burt said, "I found it very moving and inspiring that people take the time to make a living memorial."

The presentation concluded in a video with the words of Jones, the quilt's founder, "We bring a quilt . . . we hope it will teach our leaders to act."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Do not be in too much of a hurry today. Attention to details is critical when negotiating contracts. The opposition you have encountered recently disappears. A loved one is now in your corner.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A breakdown in communications can be repaired; take the first step. New financial rewards are possible. Team up with someone whose skills complement your own. Reach out to potential customers.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Bridge the generation gap by becoming a better listener. Make sweeping changes. Eventually, others will realize their mistake. You look forward to spending the evening with someone special.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Financial affairs require careful handling. Discuss your position with experts; you will learn what steps to take. A long-term romance should work out nicely. Be more affectionate.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Recycling is the key to greater career and business success. Reword an old project. Pooling your talents will boost profits. you welcome an unusual opportunity to pursue romance.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Steer your way through a complicated program with caution. Others look to you for leadership. Move ahead with confidence and you will find success. People who like you let you know it.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Keep your wits about you today and you will emerge on top. Revive an old plan, but apply new techniques. You have an important friend in your corner. Romance takes on deeper meaning.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): The past may be recalled but it will not touch you. Being a pro-company employee pays off handsomely. A promotion or raise is in the offing. Look your best this evening. Romance beckons.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Have the courage of your convictions and this will be a red-letter day. Defend your ideals. A health matter should not be neglected. Make vacation reservations now.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): New people and interests add glamour to your life. Make certain you are properly remunerated for your creative and artistic efforts. Get in touch with someone who has been on your mind.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Look before you leap in business or romance. An argument will erupt if you insist on having your own way. Secret agreements can help advance your career goals. Protect your reputation.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): An unforgettable adventure may already be under way. Do not miss a single exciting moment. New business ties require a period of adjustment. Hang in there!

49ers, Patriots look for place to play football

FOXBORO (AP) – Sunday's NFL game between the Patriots and 49ers, scheduled for earthquake-ravaged San Francisco, probably will remain on the West Coast, New England General Manager Patrick Sullivan said yesterday.

He expected the 49ers to tell him by this afternoon whether the game would be played in Candlestick Park, as originally scheduled, or moved to another site.

Tuesday's earthquake caused postponement of that night's scheduled third game of the World Series at Candlestick Park. Baseball officials decided not to play it yesterday either.

"A lot of the decision on where to play the football game has to do with what baseball decides to do and whether Candlestick will be available," Sullivan said.

"Someone told me that Candlestick was out of the question," Patriots coach Raymond Berry said.

Playing at Stanford in Palo Alto, Calif., appeared to be the most likely alternative.

Sullivan said it was "an unlikely prospect" that the game would be shifted to Sullivan Stadium, the Patriots' home, and even less likely that it would be played at a neutral site.

"The 49ers have traveled East three times this year," Sullivan said. "You have to have a place where you're likely to sell some tickets.

"I think the game's going to end up somewhere out there," he added, although he said arrangements have been made to stage the game in Foxboro "as a last resort."

San Francisco is 5-0 on the road this season and 0-1 at home. The team has already made long trips to Tampa Bay, Philadelphia and New Orleans and visits the New York Jets Oct. 29.

Sullivan said he talked Wednesday with both the NFL office and Carmen Policy, San Francisco's executive vice president.

The 49ers indicated that a decision on whether to leave the game at Candlestick would depend, in part, on the results of engineering studies which were expected to be available this morning.

"It's primarily the 49ers' call with the approval of the Women's tennis heads to Bentley College

By C.J. ABATI
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team has a busy weekend ahead of them. This afternoon UMass travels to Waltham, Mass. for a match with Bentley College. Friday, the Minutewomen have a match with the Vermont Catamounts, in Burlington, Vt. The match was scheduled to be played earlier this season, but was postponed due to rain. The Minutewomen will remain in Burlington for the New England Championships, which take place Saturday and Sunday.

Saturday's match with Bentley is an ideal situation for the Minutewomen. Bentley is a small Division III school that plays many of the other smaller schools in and around Boston. UMass should have an easy victory which will give them the needed momentum for the N.E. championships.

"We'll be stronger than they are," commented UMass coach Edwin Gentzler. "We've had a lot of rainouts this season, and it's supposed to rain again. I really want to play this one, we need it."

This match will help the Minutewomen in the long run as well. That may sound crazy, but by playing in Boston, the team will get more exposure. This exposure will lead to scheduling teams that are of higher quality.

"I wanted to play them in Boston," said Gentzler. "I've been trying to schedule as many matches in Boston as I can. I want to give us as much exposure as possible."

The Vermont match will be quite a different story, as far as the Minutewomen are concerned. The Catamounts have one of the toughest teams in New England. In last year's match, UMass upset Vermont by a score of 5-4.

"Two years ago, we had a terrible team. We couldn't win a match all season, Vermont smoked us," said Gentzler. "They expected us to be terrible again last year, but we snook up on them."

The Minutewomen have been playing well lately, but that doesn't comfort coach Gentzler.

"I like the way we've been playing recently, we have improved a lot over the season," Gentzler said. "I'm still a little nervous about the match though. They are a very good team, and the element of surprise is gone. This will be one of our most difficult matches this season."

The New England Championships, Saturday and Sunday, mark the end of the tennis season. Along with UMass will be seven other schools present at the tournament. These are teams that UMass has played throughout the season. The University of Vermont will host the tournament, and has invited all the New England state schools as well as Hartford and Central Connecticut.

World Series on hold because of quake

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Baseball still hoped Wednesday to salvage a World Series shaken by the Bay area's worst earthquake since 1906, though it was uncertain when or where games could resume.

Game 3 of the Bay Bridge Series between the Oakland Athletics and the San Francisco Giants was postponed for the second straight day, but commissioner Fay Vincent said, "Our inclination is to stay the course."

More than 250 people were killed and hundreds were injured when the earthquake struck at 5:04 p.m. PDT Tuesday, a half-hour before gametime. Part of the Bay Bridge, the very symbol of the Series, collapsed.

There seemed to be little thought by baseball officials to cancel the Series, in which Oakland leads San Francisco 2-0, but baseball was waiting from city officials to assess the damage, physical and mental.

The possibility of playing as soon as Thursday night had not been ruled out, but that would only happen if a stadium was deemed safe and other logistics, such as transportation, could be worked out.

Vincent said baseball executives were told that damage at both Candlestick Park, home of the Giants, and Oakland Coliseum, home of the A's, was "not significant."

But he said "the proper people have not examined it yet" and added that even if it were possible to keep the Series in the Bay area, he was concerned whether it would be appropriate right now. One other possibility was to move the Series to a neutral site for the first time.

"We want to be very sensitive to the state of the community," Vincent said. "Our modest little game is not a priority."

Candlestick Park, where 60,000 fans were watching the Giants and Athletics warm up when the stadium shook, and the Oakland Coliseum were inspected during the day. Candlestick was closed yesterday, while groundskeepers mowed the grass in Oakland.

The strongest alternate possibility was Dodger Stadium in Los Angeles, although it might take a couple of days to prepare the field. San Diego and Anaheim were also possible, but both stadiums had NFL games scheduled Sunday.

"Obviously, we're in a process of deciding what to do," Vincent said. "This is a difficult time for the area."

Vincent met with Donald Fehr, head of the Major League Baseball Players Association, to determine the Giants' and Athletics' outlook.

"Like anyone else, the players' first concerns were for their families and their homes. Everything seems OK," Fehr said. "I don't think that will be a problem. I think the players are ready to handle it."

"It's primarily the 49ers' call with the approval of the league," Sullivan said. "I don't see a scenario where we'd be temperamental about it."

NFL public relations director Jim Heffernan said only the league office can reschedule or move games.

Berry said he wouldn't be apprehensive about going to San Francisco and facing the possibility of aftershocks.

"Not particularly," he said. "But in this business, you're not always given credit for having a good sense anyway."

Several Patriots with California connections had been through earthquakes.

"You feel a rumbling coming from a distance. It comes to you, passes you by and keeps moving," said defensive end Gary Jeter, who spent the last six seasons with the Los Angeles Rams.

No place like home for volleyball

Sweeps past Central Connecticut at Totman

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Correspondent

For the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team, it was home sweet home last night after their road trip last weekend, as the Minutewomen crushed the Central Connecticut Blue Devils in straight games, 15-6, 15-8, 15-3.

UMass, 0-14 on the road, returned to Totman Gymnasium for the first time this month after six straight road games, and posted its second win of the season and at Totman to up its record to 2-14.

"There was an improvement in everything, good all-around defense," UMass coach Carol Ford said. "We went out and dominated."

The turning point in the match came in the second game when UMass rallied from a 5-3 deficit, scoring nine unanswered points as the Blue Devils, now 8-22 on the season, committed several crucial mistakes.

Central Connecticut's returns were not on target as the Blue Devils missed the court six times, batting five balls out of bounds and one into the net during UMass' rally.

"In the second game, there was not as much intensity," Ford said. "We sat back a little. In the third game, we came out much stronger."

After the Minutewomen won back the serve, freshman Sharon Panoff gave the Minutewomen the lead for good in the third set, 1-0, with a spike into a gap in the Blue Devil defense. UMass rolled the rest of the way to even its record at Totman Gym to 2-2.

In the process, UMass gave up just three goals, the lowest total in a single game for the Minutewomen this season.

"Anne DeSwarte had a great game, especially on defense," Ford said. "The team played good all around defense."

In the first game, UMass came out strong, jumping to a 4-2 lead with tremendous spiking and blocking. Leading the team in the first game, captain Nancy Sullivan increased the lead to 6-2 with a service ace. After regaining the serve, UMass freshman middle hitter Rachel Bredemeier, taking after Sullivan, had a service ace of her own to make the score 7-2. With numerous great saves and consistent blocking, UMass went on to win 15-6.

Leading 4-1 in the third game, Sullivan came up with a service ace. Retaining the serve, senior Catherine Lis found her serve, earning five consecutive points to nail the door almost shut on the self-destructing Blue Devils. CC's Lisa Douglass, still intense, attempted a futile comeback with two service points but Panoff stuffed Douglas' next serve to put UMass in command. Junior Cheryl O'Brien came off the bench to increase UMass' lead, 14-3, with a service ace. Panoff then served up an ace to win the match, 15-3.

Minutemen tie up Huskies in scoreless game

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

The road isn't such a terrible place after all. Although not quite a victory, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team was able to sustain the University of Connecticut to a 0-0 double overtime game yesterday at UConn.

Considering the Minutemen have a knack for losing on the road, away games at St. Joseph's University (Saturday) and UConn have been exceptions to the rule as UMass now holds a 4-8-2 record.

"Our play was absolutely brilliant," said head coach Jeff Gettler. "We were real unlucky not to win."

The wet field contributed to fouls and yellow cards. The fouls committed reflected the intensity of the game as UMass had 35 fouls, UConn had 32.

"We won all of our one-on-one battles," Gettler said of the team as a whole. He said backfielders senior Evan Buxner, sophomore Darren Stone and senior Gael Sullivan marked up and consistently won.

"They were brilliant," said Gettler of the backfield. "They dominated the forwards they covered and shut them down."

Gettler said the consistency of the backs reflected the miniscule number (2) of saves UMass freshman goalie Steve Armenti had to make. Senior Tom Skiba swept up the back field and kept the Huskies' offense deterred.

"They kept the pressure off Armenti by doing the work that needed to be done. Armenti was great in goal." UConn goalie Tom Foley finished the game with six saves.

"[Yesterday] was a fantastic performance," Gettler said. "We outplayed UConn."

At midfield, junior Pete McEvoy, sophomore Dan Lawrence and junior Carl Hanks played well against a demanding Huskie offense Gettler said. "They outplayed their men. Hanks had another great match."

In the first half, UMass was able to create numerous scoring chances. They held a greater amount of territory and were more possessive than UConn.

The second half of play was more even-handed. Within the last three minutes of regulation, the Minutemen dominated the field, their endurance bringing the game into overtime.

Overtime play was fairly even. Although UConn was more possessive, UMass looked more dangerous. UMass finished the game with 14 shots on goal, UConn had 16.

"It was very unjust we didn't get a goal," said Gettler. "I'm disappointed we didn't come up with better results but I'm very happy with the performance."

Prior to yesterday's game, UConn was ranked fourth in New England Division I men's soccer. They now hold a 7-4-3 record.

UMass is now ranked fourth in the Atlantic 10 East Division. Remaining matches in regular season include Colgate University (Oct. 21), and home games against Providence College (Oct. 25), Rutgers University (Oct. 28) and Fairfield University (Nov. 1).

UMass cannot take Springfield College lightly

Senior Bernie Martel and the rest of the UMass field hockey team travels to Springfield College today.

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

With all the nationally ranked teams that the University of Massachusetts field hockey team plays (10 teams on UMass' schedule currently hold a spot in the NCAA's Top Twenty), the Minutewomen need a break every once in a while.

The Minutewomen play at Springfield College tonight under the lights (7 p.m.) in a game which appears to be a break in the schedule with SC no where to be found in the NCAA's rankings. But sometimes these kinds of games with a weaker opponent can be tougher than the stronger opponents.

"They (Springfield) are dangerous. They have played very well against their strong opponents," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "Even though they have not been on the winning ends of things, they have played extremely well against difficult teams. And then they have played poorly against weaker teams so it ends up being the type of opponent you don't know what to expect from. And that's what is scary. It's very hard to predict what they are going to be like."

UMass can be categorized as a strong opponent for Springfield. There can be no letdown by UMass which at 9-4-1 is the NCAA's No. 9 team in its weekly poll.

"We have to go out and play just as if we are playing any of the top ten opponents on our schedule," Hixon said. "We have to execute against Springfield. We have to put things together on a consistent basis."

The Minutewomen have to execute almost like it did in the first half of their game with Iowa on Saturday. UMass had numerous scoring opportunities in that half (UM outshot Iowa 9-1 in the period) but could not cash in and were shutout 2-0.

"We have to become much more opportunistic to take advantage of our good scoring opportunities," Hixon said. "And it's nothing more than doing it every single day, playing balls that rebound off the goalies, playing deflections in the circle. It's just that last piece of the puzzle."

The defense also needs to rise to the occasion come crunch time.

"In pressure situations, we need to give up fewer penalty corners down the stretch," Hixon said. Against New Hampshire and Iowa both in the second half, we were under the gun. They really put the pressure on us and we just kind of held on. We didn't create anything. We just tried to negate what they were doing."

THE WATERBOYS

UPC will quench your thirst

By JODY GABIN
Collegian Staff

On Saturday, Oct. 21, Celtic-influenced band the Waterboys will be performing at the UMass Fine Arts Center.

Formed in London by Scottish singer/songwriter Mike Scott, the Waterboys released their debut album entitled The Waterboys in early 1983. On it, Scott played the majority of the instruments, accompanied in part by English saxaphonist, Anthony Thistlethwaite.

Scott said, "I had the intention of finding the other Waterboys, whoever and wherever they were."

He did find them, during the summer of that year, when Scott and Thistlethwaite met keyboard player Karl Wallinger, and began to work on what would become their second lp, A Pagan Place.

Augmented by bass and drums, the band played their first live dates in the United Kingdom in 1984 (coinciding with the release of A Pagan Place.), and began their first American tour at the end of the same year.

With the addition of trumpeter Roddy Lorimer and Irish fiddle player Steve Wickham, the Waterboys released their third lp, This is the Sea, in September of 1985. It entered the British top-40 a week later.

This was followed by the hit single "The Whole of the Moon," and a three month tour which included stops in Britain, Europe and America.

After Karl Wallinger left the band to form his own group, World Party, Anthony began to dedicate himself to playing mandolin, and the Waterboys became a string band.

The trio added drummer Dave Ruffy, and Belfast-born bassist, Trevor Hutchinson. They began writing and recording in Dublin, expanding their repertoire to include country, gospel, and folk.

The band remained in Dublin as Hutchinson became a full-time member, and the band spent the majority of 1987 recording at Windmill Lane Studios, and performing occasional benefits for organizations such as Greenpeace and the Irish Green Alliance.

In addition to this, Wickham and Thistlewaite began to compile the first side of the Waterboys most recent effort, Fisherman's Blues, through the duo's impromptu performances on various city stages and street corners in and around the Dublin area.

During 1987, the Waterboys became heavily influenced by traditional Irish music, and in January of 1988, Scott went to Galway, Ireland, to finish writing songs for the lp. In April of the same year, he and sound man John Dumford brought the rest of the band to Galway, where they completed the album. The music from this session is compiled on side two of Fisherman's Blues, and features the contributions of several renowned Galway-area musicians.

The Waterboys will be on the road throughout the remainder of 1989. Saturday evening's concert is sponsored by UPC, and doors open at 8 p.m. T.F. Much will open the show.

CAMPER VAN BEETHOVEN

By MICHAEL WESTER
Collegian Staff

If there's one thing you should learn before leaving college, it's that the weekend doesn't have to end on Sunday night.

And if there's one thing you should do before you grow old and join the ranks of so-called adults, it is experience Camper Van Beethoven live.

This opportunity exists for you Monday night at 8 p.m. at Pearl Street in Northampton.

Camper Van Beethoven, rising out of West Coast suburbia, has managed to release five albums and two EPs over the past five years or so, while avoiding any sort of classification whatsoever. They've suceeded in recording hardcore thrash, ska, Russian-influenced folk tunes, polka, waltzes, rock and roll and psychedelic Pink Floyd covers, literally without missing a beat.

What can you say about a band that features a violin as one of their more prominent instruments, yet still has both hippies and punks dancing side by side, in harmony, at their shows?

A lot of Camper's stuff is fast and furious, and only true wallflowers can attend a Camper performance without being absolutely infected by the rhythym. But Camper has some slow paced stuff, too. And although slam dancing often occurs during their frenzied sets, it's not too harsh - mostly in the spirit of fun, not pain. You will survive.

While you're downtown buying your ticket for Monday's show, you can pick up Camper's new release on Virgin Records, Key Lime Pie, the cassette version of which is in an eye-pleasing flourescent green. It is an album worth a good few thousand listens.

What is distinct about Camper is their use of the violin as a lead instrument. Unfortunately, the band has recently parted ways with their former violinist, Jonathan Segel. With his distinctive, whining style of fiddling - sort of like a Suzuki child gone awry - Segel gave the band its unique sound. His prescence is missed on Key Lime Pie.

On Camper's previous release, Our Beloved Revolutionary Sweetheart, Segel is also credited with playing the Casio organ, mandolin, citern, and piano. If you take these instruments away from the group, you are left with a basic guitar, bass and drums combo.

Consequently, I wasn't holding high hopes for Key Lime Pie. And, I must admit, I was dissapointed at first. Camper's new violinist, Morgan Fichter, is much more subdued than the zany, irreverent Segel. Fichter's violin takes less of a prominent role in Camper's overall sound. In addition, Segel's chintzy-but-distinctive Casio plinkings are almost completely absent from the new LP. Lead singer David Lowery takes up a little of the void created by Segel's departure.

The overall result of these changes is a somewhat more 'serious' or 'mature' sound for the band, a shame for a band that I've always admired for their inherent immaturity.

Camper's lyrics are outrageous, but not to the point of idiocy. Their subjects border on the political - as songs memorializing such people as Joe Stalin, Mao Zedong, Patty Hearst and Jack Ruby can attest to.

The new album has a few dissapointing cuts. "Jack Ruby," for instance, seems to get lost in its own heavy message and sounds a bit forced. The bright spots on the album - "Sweethearts," "When I Win the Lottery," "Borderline," and "All Her Favorite Fruit," are the slower, more melodic songs on the LP. They contain all the wit and creativity usually associated with older Camper Van Beethoven tracks. I would recomend the LP to any and all Camper fans, but to those of you new to the band, I'd reccommend one of their earlier releases as an intro, particularly Our Beloved Revolutionary Sweetheart- a masterpiece, to say the least.

The live show will be well worth seeing. For us diehards, it will be a true test of new violinist Morgan Fichter's ability to make the fiddle ROCK. As for those of you who are less familiar with the band, you'll get a chance to see the latest incarnation of an absolutely prismatic, orgasmic band.

Opening for Camper Van Beethoven will be Syd Straw, who some of you might remember as the lead vocalist for the group, The Golden Palominos. Straw is currently riding the crest of popularity with her new duet alongside Michael Stipe, "Future 40's (String of Pearls)," from her recently released LP, Surprise.

If by Monday you still haven't has enough of the weekend, be at Pearl Street at 8 p.m. If you can't afford the somewhat steep $11 ticket charge ($13 for those of you in the 18-21 range) sell your shoes and go barefoot. It will be worth it.

BOATS FLOAT ALONG IN AN OCEAN OF FUN

LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

Boston based Floating Boats, a band self explained through heavy use of analogy, will bring their free living ideas to the stage at Katina's tonight.

Lead singer Johnnie Christie, a Hampshire College graduate originally from the Bahamas along with bassist Chris Merullo described the band's music as a rock and roll steak seasoned with funk, swing and calypso for flavor.

"Floating Boats are a gift from the collective unconscious.
The name just came to us; it's what we're about. We all like the water and sea," said Christie. "It might make us seem laid back, but we're pretty aggressive and hard not to watch on stage,".

"A lot of people and ideas are forced. Boats just float. They go here, they go there. A boat doesn't have to follow a road," said Merullo.

Christie said these influences make the band unique and "really different."

"You can't compare us to anyone," he said.

Floating Boats are in the process of independently releasing a 10 song cassette and have recently completed a four song tape.

The four man band plays in clubs and bars from New York to Maine.

"Being on stage has been the key thing for us. The more time you spend on the road, the deeper the musical relationship becomes. It gets easier to work with each other," Merullo said.

> 'Boats just float. They go here, they go there. A boat doesn't have to follow a road.'
> – Chris Merullo.

The band has incorporated a Bahamian theme into a song titled "Reincarnation." The section is inspired by a New Year's celebration held in Nassau called Junkanoo, which is a nonstop musical parade and an "amazing party" with 200 member bands playing drums, horns, cow bells and other instruments, Christie said.

"Fans who know the song and its special sounds bring whistles to our shows and join in. People go crazy," he said.

"Crowds are turned on by a bold band. We like all kinds and we play all kinds of music. We try and transcend a lot of the barriers. You need a to include a lot of genres for a fresh new sound," Christie said.

"Floating Boats, in a positive and aggressive way, are about self growth and inner peace," Christie said.

The band is made up of broad people with differences experiences. "We've seen a lot of different perspectives while travelling. We write about what's relevant," Merullo said.

Merullo said that some of his friends who have jobs or go to school think he's nuts for not wanting to make a lot of money.

"We're not doing that because this is what we believe in. If you feel something in your heart, follow it," Christie said.

"Shack (With a Satelite)," a song from the forthcoming Floating Boats cassette is a reflection of society and describes shacks in the Bahamas which he said often are homes to drug runners and pushers. Many of them have satellite dishes, which often times have an equivalent value of the shacks themselves, just so they can watch television, Christie said.

So you have no social life?

GUESS WHAT, STATEHOUSE! — If you don't know what these people are doing and why, then you are a severe example of a person not benefiting from higher education.

UM-Amherst proud of rally

By KATHERINE T. LAMOTHE
Collegian Staff

Wednesday's Statehouse rally was hailed a success by student leaders and members of the University of Massachusetts administration.

However, many who attended the rally said they were disappointed by the media coverage of the arrests of four UMass students and the "negative" reaction given by state representatives after ralliers arrived.

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson said he was impressed by the large turnout from UMass-Amherst, as well as thousands from schools from across the state.

"I was really proud of how well the rally came off," he said.

Commuter Senator Brian-James Crawford said the day was successful because of the unity of different groups on campus.

Student Government Association President Traci Davis said the large amount of student participation, coupled with the unity among state colleges and universities in the protest, gave state representatives pause.

"The representatives saw 20,000 people," Davis said. "They knew at least one of them was a registered voter in their district."

During the rally, over 100 students participated in a sit-in protest in front of the representatives' gallery. Two UMass students, Crawford and fellow commuter senator Robb Smith, were injured in a struggle

WMUA tackles claim of homophobia

By JIM COHEN
Collegian Correspondent

A song played at WMUA, the student-run radio station broadcasted from Campus Center, on Oct. 1 prompted one concerned listener to charge the station is homophobic.

In a letter to WMUA, Declan O'Brien, Jamaica Plain, charged anti-gay songs had been played in which "all the gay stereotypes were used as well as were all the put-down (sic) words."

O'Brien said he called the station to complain to the deejay, Keith Campbell, that he was offended by the song Truly Yours by Kool G Rap and D.J. Polo.

O'Brien said he asked Campbell if he had played the song, after which Campbell said he had. O'Brien said he was then put on hold and eventually disconnected. Station officials asserted the disconnection was a result of the volume of calls WMUA receives.

O'Brien questioned how WMUA, as a student-supported organization, could "broadcast such hate-inspired material."

Kevin Mitchell, station manager for WMUA, said the song was a rare incident which was not inspired by homophobia.

Max Mitchell, president for the LBGA, believes the song being played was an "honest mistake." He wasn't aware of any previous allegations of homophobia being charged against WMUA and said they were "for the most part a very open-minded organization. It's one thing to accuse them of attacking the gay community and it's something else if the deejay wasn't aware of what the lyrics were."

Mitchell said he believed Campbell was unaware of the lyrical content of the song, adding if he felt the song was insulting he wouldn't have played it on the air.

Campbell could not be reached for comment.

Playing the song did violate WMUA station policy — as it was "considered offensive to certain groups or individuals," although it is felt the deejay is ultimately responsible for what he or she plays.

"The thing is with mainstream culture a lot of things can be taken out of context, like records or videos," Mitchell explained. He said it is not just the deejays or radio stations that should be checking for material which may offend certain races or cultures, "the whole industry has

Some students question arrests

By COSMO MACERO JR.
Collegian Staff

One day after about 15,000 students swarmed the Statehouse to protest budget cuts in higher education, some University of Massachusetts students were questioning the arrests of four protestors, as well as actions taken by Metropolitan District Commission police at the rally.

Commuter Area Sen. Robb Smith said that as students moved toward the House Assembly Floor, MDC police rushed the crowd, roughing up several protestors, including Smith.

"One of the officers stomped on my foot," Smith said. "I pushed his foot off mine, then he kicked me in the thigh."

Smith said the officer grabbed him by the hair, pulled his head back and said, "You wanna go, asshole?"

Forum brings history and issues of ACLU to the University

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

While many people's first history lesson on the American Civil Liberties Union came during last year's presidential election, the organization has a much longer history, discovered by University of Massachusetts students yesterday.

John Roberts, executive director of the Massachusetts affiliate of the American Civil Liberties Union, spoke in the Campus Center yesterday on topics ranging from abortion to the public's right to information.

"The ACLU addresses issues that are exploding around us," Roberts said of his organization, commonly called the nation's foremost advocate of individual rights.

Roberts began by explaining ACLU's origin.

He said that between 1917 and 1920, the United States realized its significance as a world power.

"The U.S. had just fought and won a world war. More people were demanding their rights. Women were fighting for their rights and immigrants were fighting for theirs," Roberts said. "The government was concerned about all the movements at the time. The U.S. Attorney General felt the best way to handle this was to sweep them off the streets."

"They were put in jail, did not receive a trial, and this caused more unrest," he said. "The ACLU came about from this."

The ACLU has many critics who accuse them of being extremist. But, "someone has to raise these questions, someone's got to fight these battles," Roberts said.

"We see ourselves as an arm of law enforcement in that we enforce the Bill of Rights," he said. "The government can't enforce the Bill of Rights because they limit them."

"Civil liberties are always in danger when the country is in crisis," he said, citing World War II. After Pearl Harbor was bombed, people wanted to put Japanese Americans in jail, he said.

Roberts gave the ACLU's stand on the public's right to information: "Jimmy Carter made a valiant effort to declassify public records. The [Reagan] administration has reversed that to a point where the White House menu is classify information."

Roberts said the ACLU's stand on abortion was that people should have control over their bodies. He also said over half of the federal judges were appointed by President Reagan.

"They [the appointments] were based on the political agenda of Reagan and not on their law work ability," he said.

Roberts said the ACLU is in the majority on the abortion issue, adding, "On this issue, the House of Representatives do not represent the electorate."

"Many state Reps. are suddenly seeing the light and are jumping to the side of pro-choice," he said, citing the example of Francis Belotti, a candidate for Massachusetts governor who suddenly declared himself pro-choice.

"When dealing with the power of the government to silence people based on what they say: We say, 'You can't do it.' We say, 'Take the risk of having to listen to what these people say, rather than have those rights taken away,' " Roberts said.

Knapp says despite rally, tuition will soar

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

Faculty senators shook their heads in disbelief yesterday upon hearing University of Massachusetts President David Knapp discuss the probability of future tuition and fee hikes, and the lack of support from Gov. Dukakis, his administration and state representatives.

"The past 2½ years have seen a gradual change in public higher education," Knapp said. "This is a very different system than the one many of you joined in the last two or three decades."

The senators, many already frustrated by articles regarding Wednesday's rally that gave greater attention to disrupted flower beds than the future of education, could not believe some statistics cited by Knapp, who spoke for about an hour.

He said that in light of the $25 million appropriated and later cut from public higher education institutions — between $6.5 million and $8 million from UMass-Amherst — the UMass system may be forced to raise tuition for out-of-state students.

"If that occurs, UMass may cost as much for out of state students as the University of Vermont or the University of New Hampshire," he said. The two schools cost upward of $13,000 a year for out-of-state students.

"That's not good education policy," he said.

Knapp said another reason the state should change its priorities is that public higher education — 6 percent of the state's budget — is paying "an undue share" of the latest budget cuts.

Public higher education is being expected to cut money enough to fund 23 percent to 25 percent of the latest budget cuts, Knapp said. An additional cut in benefits for student employment, proposed by Secretary of Administration and Finance L. Edward Lashman, would increase that to 38 percent, he said.

Knapp said there is an absence of state leadership, with state representatives and members of the Dukakis administration "privatizing education . . . by transferring [financial] responsibility from the state to students and their parents."

"It is a very short-sighted policy," he said.

"We are not simply in a fiscal crisis," he said. "There was a belief four years ago that this state benefited economically from a well-educated population. Because this state had no natural resources — only education — people believed we 'lived by our wits.' "

"That's still out there, but in our legislators' minds there is a sense of whether institutions are operating efficiently and productively . . . whether there is waste or fraud," Knapp said. "All the negatives are on the minds and lips of legislators."

Knapp also reiterated the belief that a $600 million tax package designed to relieve the state's fiscal woes is being ignored in the Statehouse.

"In the Statehouse, there is an absolute reluctance to think about taxation. I don't think I've ever seen a group of people less reluctant to address an issue," he said, adding that legislators are using "their perception of waste" as an excuse for not addressing the issue.

Knapp said this latest revenue shortfall won't be the last.

"In March [1990], many of us feel there will be another debt," he said. "If that comes, I have absolutely no idea how we will pay for that."

"Only through demonstrations like [Wednesday's] will things change," he said. "The next 18 months won't be easy; we cannot let the enthusiasm we have stop."

California quake affects relatives of UMass

By KEN MAGUIRE
Collegian Correspondent

While the San Francisco Bay area was being rocked by a major earthquake, a former UMass student and several UMass faculty had reason for major concern.

"We were driving when it hit," said 1987 UMass graduate Carolyn Rosenbaum, who works for MGA, a Boston-based expositions group. "At first we thought it was just a flat tire, but then we rolled down a hill and smashed into another car," she said.

"We saw a chimney that had fallen off a house onto a car and completely destroyed it," said Rosenbaum.

"Afterward, we had no idea what was going on because we had no power, which wasn't restored until 4:30 a.m. [yesterday]," said Rosenbaum. "I didn't see Peter Jennings, [on television], until last night. We were really lost."

The earthquake, which many have cited as the worst since 1906, killed close to 300 people and injured another 700. The earthquake measured 6.9 on the Richter Scale.

Murray Schwartz, dean of Humanities and Fine Arts here at UMass, has a twin brother living in Berkeley, Calif., a community also hit hard by the earthquake.

"There was no way to get a hold of him," said Schwartz. "I tried for 14 hours over the telephone and it was he who eventually contacted me," he said.

Judith Averill, wife of UMass Psychology Professor James Averill, was relieved to learn that none of their many relatives living in California were injured. Averill has a daughter currently moving to the San Francisco area.

"At the moment, we kind of wish that she had chosen a different city, but we're hoping for the best," said Averill.

While there are no formal exchange programs between UMass and any Bay area colleges, there are currently seventeen Bay area students attending UMass, said Nancy Fitzpatrick of the Registrar's Office.

Fortunately Rosenbaum and all the relatives of the UMass faculty living in the San Francisco area reported no injuries.

Speaker: Amnesty International fights for human rights

By WILLIAM FLEISHMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Members of the University of Massachusetts chapter of Amnesty International met Wednesday night in Brett House to discuss issues of human rights violations occurring around the world.

"We're a human rights group. We're here to inform as well as to educate students and faculty," said Kara Harrington, director of the organization.

Several "Urgent Action" letters received from Amnesty headquarters in London were read at the meeting. The letters contained individual accounts of international disappearances, tortures, and wrongful imprisonments.

"The main course of action is to send letters of our own," Harrington said. "When letters are written, the situation improves. When letters stop arriving, the condition worsens. About 1,000 people get released each year."

The meeting included a movie, You too Can Be Arrested, narrated by Kevin Bacon, which demonstrates "how much freedom we are actually afforded as citizens of the United States." The group also discussed what some of the 700,000 worldwide members of Amnesty are trying to accomplish.

The group is also planning social events with other Amnesty chapters in the five college area.

"We have several events coming up. We are urging students and faculty to come down and see what we're all about," said Secretary Kimberly Wolf, "We're also hoping to recruit new members for the cause."

UMass Amnesty is a Registered Student Organization and is located in room 423A of the Student Union.

Woman assaulted at bus stop

A woman reported a man approached her from behind and grabbed her by the throat while she was walking toward a bus stop on North Pleasant Street at about 1:45 a.m. yesterday, police said. The assailant fled the area after another man arrived to the scene, police said.

Police were furnished with a partial description of the man, but urge anyone who witnessed the incident to contact police.

In other police reports:

- Another spray painted "Day of Action" sign was reported outside Franklin and Worcester dining commons Wednesday, police said.
- Police assisted a women in the Southwest Residential Area who reported a former boyfriend was bothering her Wednesday.

BOG: Silver Bullet is back

By PAUL MORRIS

The Board of Governors voted unanimously last night to revoke the ban on Coors beer at the Hatch and Top of the Campus bars.

Gov. Bill Hewitt said the AFL-CIO boycott was lifted during August of 1987, and the company's striking workers are back on the job. "The ban is seriously outdated," he said. "Let's move on and let students decide if they want to drink Coors or not."

He said Coors was banned from the UMass campus by the BOG in 1985 after Coors workers went on strike. Coors management was accused of being unfair to minorities and women, he said.

Gov. Angela Paquin said it is important to let individuals have freedom of choice no matter what the issue is.

Larry Jeffers, the manager of the Hatch, said he is expecting six cases of both Coors and Coors Light to be delivered next Thursday.

He said he sold a moderate amount of Coors products before the beer was prohibited and did not agree with the ban.

"The market should dictate what gets sold," he said. "Why should 10 percent of the student population limit the decisions of the others?"

Mary Bourret, the bar manager at the Top of the Campus, said she rarely is asked for any Coors products, but may offer the beer on occasion as a "special."

She was working at the Bluewall, which until five years ago was a beerhall, when the ban was enacted.

"I said, 'What's this, Russia?' " she said. "Let the customer decide — I'm not going to carry a product that isn't moving."

Students in the Hatch were indifferent to the decision.

Pete Savageau said he does not like Coors, but probably would drink it if it was the cheapest beer in the house.

"People should have a choice," he said "I am sure there are some people that like drinking Silver Bullets."

Elayne Ott said she would not drink Coors because she believes the company is still unfair to women and minorities.

"They may be hiring more [minorities and women], but it's no good if they're stuck in middle management positions and can't move up," she said.

Darin Cote, a graduate student, said that although he does not agree with Coors management policies, he has bought Coors because it was a good value.

Cote said that most companies have some immoral policies and a case can be made to boycott virtually all of them.

Roy Eddington

Cont. Ed. grad a success story

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

Roy Eddington has come a long way.

As a convicted felon whose criminal activities and drug addiction led to a six-year sentence for larceny, he said he never imagined he would someday pursue a master's degree.

Now, as the first student to complete an undergraduate degree through the Continuing Education Prison Program at the University of Massachusetts, Eddington said he is not only pursuing a master's degree in education, but a doctorate degree looks good as well.

"It may be premature, but I'm entertaining the thought of being addressed as Dr. Eddington one day," he said.

Eddington is scheduled to be honored for his achievement on Sunday, as this year's recipient of the Outstanding Continuing Education Student Award.

MIT professor says UMass anthrax research is offensive

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

A Massachusetts Institute of Technology professor said Wednesday he believes anthrax research is being done at the University of Massachusetts for militarily-offensive purposes and the faculty should vote to end it.

Dr. Jonathan King, a microbiology professor, told about 60 students, professors and Amherst residents that scientists design experiments for which they believe contractors will pay top dollar.

"The military knows scientists don't want to develop weapons, but they know money talks," he said. "The faculty has to vote that the Biological Defense Research Project is against the mission of the University."

The Biological Defense Research Project, started in 1986, is a federally funded agency for germ warfare research, King said. UMass is one of the four centers in the United States contracted to research a vaccine for anthrax, he said.

King said it is irrational to use vaccines defensively in biological warfare because there are hundreds of germs a potential enemy could use. Vaccines can be used offensively by immunizing domestic troops, then attacking the enemy with a biological agent, he said.

"That's why you don't see any essay contests on 'How biological weapons will preserve world peace,' " he said.

At the 1972 Biological Weapons Convention, the United States and more than 100 other nations agreed never to develop, produce or stockpile biological weapons. However the agreement did not ban biological weapons research, King said.

Anthrax, if inhaled, usually kills 90 percent to 100 percent of its victims within 36 hours. To research an anthrax vaccine scientists must work with the anthrax agent, King said.

He said defensive and offensive research programs are indistinguishable in their early stages.

Ira Helfund, a member of the Physicians for Social Responsibility, said he thinks the University is in violation of its research policy.

University research policy states that any type of research can be carried out if the results are open to public scrutiny, Helfund said. The federal government reserves the right to classify research at anytime, and work previously done but not published can be classified retroactively, he said.

"They [BDRP's directors] can announce tonight that all anthrax research be classified," he said. "It is not open research if they can tell you the work you have been doing for the past year can not be published," he said.

Helfund said a question will be placed on the 1990 Amherst Annual Town Meeting warrant to make Amherst a biological weapons- free zone.

King said in 1987, the Cambridge City Council voted to stop the Arthur D. Little company from destroying nerve gas in that community.

"The people were concerned with public safety and formed a citizens committee," he said. "The council voted to stop the company and the court supported them."

struggle with the Metropolitan District Commission police. Davis said the intensity of the protests could have been avoided.

Madson said the violence, and the media's focus on it in covering the protest, did not help the rally's goal of calling the state government's attention to the plight of public higher education.

Carey Feldman, who helped lead the sit-in, said it actually enhanced the other forms of protest, including the phone call and letter-writing campaigns.

Feldman also said the negative reaction to the rally by the representatives, including complaints by Speaker George Keverian that protesters destroyed a flowerbed on the house lawn, was a sign they were nervous about the students' arrival.

Smith offered a sarcastic apology for the protests, which also included an attempt to sit in in the gallery of the House of Representatives.

"We're sorry we had to interrupt the government's business," he said, "but they've been interrupting our education."

to take a look" at the problem.

Glen Siegel, WMUA executive director, said, "the listener had every right to be upset" and that he was "glad Mr. O'Brien brought it to our attention."

Siegel said the album would be labeled as offensive and it would not be played on the air again. Siegel said, however, the album would not be removed from the record file at WMUA. He made the distinction between banning the record entirely and removing it from the stack, which he considered an oppressive act.

Siegel said labeling the album like was giving a film a rating. Its main design is to allow people to have access to the album without having it played on air.

O'Brien's phone call and subsequent letter, which were the only complaints registered with the station concerning the song, declared WMUA had to "take a firm and unambiguous stand against prejudice in all its forms and fire [Campbell]."

But Siegel gave no indication such an action would be taken, and Campbell, he said, made a "very sincere apology" on his next broadcast.

Spanish writer Cela wins Nobel Prize for Literature

STOCKHOLM, Sweden (AP) — Camilo Jose Cela, a Spanish writer whose violent, grotesque images sprang from the civil war that killed more than 1 million of his countrymen, won the Novel Prize for literature yesterday.

The Swedish Academy cited Cela, 73, for "rich and intensive prose, which with restrained compassion forms a challenging vision of man's vulnerability."

It said his novel "The Family of Pascual Duarte," published in 1942, was the most popular work of fiction in Spanish since Miguel Cervantes' masterpiece "Don Quixote" was published nearly 400 years ago.

"I understand that this is the culmination of my literary career after many years of work." Cela told Swedish radio from his home in Guadalajara, 30 miles northeast of Madrid.

"I offer it to all of literature in Spanish. I believe that other authors, Spanish and Latin American, who write in Spanish could also have won it for the same reasons as I."

Cela, a bon vivant known in Spain for his flamboyant lifestyle, told reporters over lunch in Madrid that "life is like a game of tennis, and this time I won."

He said he would use the $463,000 prize "to pay my debts, and believe me, I've got a lot of them."

In the 47 years since "Pascual Duarte," Cela said, "what I have gained in wisdom I've been losing in vigor and health, and what I have gained in experience I've lost in freshness."

As an epitaph, he said, he would like; "Here lies someone who tried to screw his fellow man as little as possible."

His 10 novels and 60 other works — short stories, essays, poetry and travel books — have made Cela "the leading figure in Spain's literary renewal during the postwar era" the Swedish Academy said. He is the fifth Spanish writer to receive the literature prize.

Sture Allen, the academy's secretary, said Cela also had wide influence on literature throughout Latin America.

"He is an experimental and provocative writer, both regarding form and contents," Allen said. "Furthermore, he broadened the range of the Spanish language."

Asked to compare Cela with another experimental Spanish writer, Mario Vargas Llosa of Peru, Allen described both as individualists who were "apparently acquainted with each others' works."

Allen suggested that readers unfamiliar with Cela begin with travel writings in which "he tried to capture the Spain he saw disappearing, and maybe some of the Spanish national spirit."

In "The Family of Pascual Duarte," his best-known work, Cela created a new style known as "tremendismo" that emphasized violence and grotesque imagery. The novel, a first-person account of a murderer awaiting execution, was banned in Spain but established Cela's reputation as a writer.

He is a native of Galicia, a Franco stronghold in northwestern Spain. After returning from studies in Madrid with tuberculosis, he was recruited by the fascists, suffered the horrors of war and was sent home with serious wounds.

Senate defeats proposed flag-burning amendment

Priority for Bush rebuffed despite majority

WASHINGTON (AP) – The Senate yesterday defeated a proposed constitutional amendment to ban burning and desecration of the American flag, delivering a sharp rebuff to President Bush on a high-profile issue.

The vote was 51-48 in favor, but constitutional amendments require approval by a two-thirds margin in both houses of Congress and the Senate vote thus fell far short.

> "We can support the American flag without changing the American Constitution."
> – Majority Leader George Mitchell

"We can support the American flag without changing the American Constitution," Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine, declared before the vote.

The measure would authorize the state and federal governments to ban burning and desecration of the flag.

Eighteen Democrats joined 33 Republicans in support of the amendment, while 38 Democrats and 10 Republicans voted against it.

Bush repeatedly called for approval of such a measure, saying a simple statute such as one approved by the Senate last week would be inadequate.

Critics of the amendment said it amounted to tampering the constitutional right of Americans to freedom of expression. But they also expressed concern that opposition could be turned against them at election time in view of the power of the flag as a political symbol as demonstrated in last year's campaign.

Those concerns appeared to ease a bit in recent days. Asked why that was, Mitchell told reporters yesterday morning: "I think the sound judgment of the American people." Other lawmakers said they thought most Americans are not very concerned about the amendment.

"We in America have chosen not to take the easy way out," Mitchell told the Senate. "We have chosen not to silence those who are wrong. We have chosen instead to challenge them with the truth."

Minority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., making a final appeal for the measure, declared that "the flag stands alone as a unique symbol of our hopes and our aspirations and our ideals as a nation."

"To say that the act of flag burning is somehow deeply enshrined in the First Amendment is preposterous," Dole said. He said it was wrong in view of law that "'makes it illegal to rip the warning label off your own mattress in some states."

To be approved, the proposed amendment needed 66 votes, equal to two-thirds of the senators present and voting. It thus fell 15 votes short.

Dole was glum in reacting to the vote, although it did not come as a surprise. "I think the flag should be flown at half-staff after this vote," he said.

Sen. Joseph R. Biden Jr., D-Del., chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, told colleagues that "we did good work."

"We saved the flag and preserved the Constitution." he said.

Russell-McCloud 'moves crowd'

By AUDREY DEANNA LLOYD
Collegian Correspondent

Patricia Russell-McCloud, Esq. delivered an explosive lecture in which she urged over 200 students and faculty members of color to invest in their education and future, at the Campus Center Auditorium.

The motivational lecture was part of the recent Black Collegian's series of workshops in the Campus Center. The Black Collegian is a career and self-development magazine for African-American students.

"Knowledge is power," Russell-McCloud said.

She challenged students to take difficult classes that would prepare them for the corporate America that awaits them in the near future. She talked about places, like the UMass Career Center, that help prepare students for the work force.

Russell-McCloud said students must take advantage of these opportunities. "There is no business like your own business and that is the bottom line," she said.

She said students should work hard in academics and keep in mind that 'Cs" are not acceptable. "A 'C' will not see you through, it takes more . . . make a deposit so you can expect a return."

Russell-McCloud inspired the audience with words of faith, "You are the ones that will lead this country," she said. But, she said, "There is limited room at the top."

She said students that the invitation to success is there, but it is up to the individual to "respond if you please."

She said, "There is room for those who are real live – and I don't mean Memorex!"

The road to success will be hard, but with hard work she assured the students that they would make it. "You will have to turn a few stumbling blocks into stepping stones. Survival is an art and survival takes an artist," she said.

"Remember students, it will not be easy. Sometimes you are going to run, sometimes you are going to walk and sometimes you are going to fall," she said. "If you fall, fall on your back because then you can look up and if you can look up, then you can get up."

She also delivered a few words of caution. "Intellectual passiveness is a dangerous game to play. Know who you are because being Black is seven a week and overtime . . . . You can try to run from it but, you cannot hide."

Russell-McCloud reminded the audience that it is not enough just for them to reach the top of the success ladder, but is important to help someone else reach the top.

Phillip Manuel, Coordinator of Going Places of the Black Collegian, opened the lecture by singing the black national anthem, Lift Every Voice And Sing. Several people in the audience held hands, and at the end of Manuel's performance, almost everyone gave him a standing ovation.

Traci Davis introduced the guest lecturer. Russell-McCloud is a graduate from Howard University School of Law, Kentucky State University and Harvard University where she completed an intensive study program for law. Russell-McCloud is certified to practice before the U.S. Supreme Court, District of Columbia and the Indiana Bar Association.

She has also received several honors and awards, among them the honorary Doctor of Law Degrees from North Carolina Central University and Bethune-Cookman College.

Davis and the sisters of Alpha Kappa Alpha sorority of which Russell-McCloud is also a member, presented flowers to the speaker at the close of her lecture.

Some of the colleges represented at the lecture were from the five college area, American International College, Western New England College, Westfield State College, Holyoke Community College and Springfield Technical Community College.

Lucy Nguyen: an asset to the Asian community

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

For many years, Lucy Nguyen has been a driving force behind the Asian community in the Pioneer Valley.

In 1975, Nguyen came to the United States from Vietnam with her four children, all of whom have since graduated college. Today Nguyen is the Assistant Director of the Bilingual Collegiate Program and an academic counselor. She was also recently appointed professor of Asian Languages and Literature.

Nguyen recently published her second book, The Far East Comes Near, about the tragic experiences of the Indo-Chinese people leaving their homeland.

In and out of her job, students know Nguyen as a person who is always helping Asian students.

Mengly Chea, a UMass student, regarded her as "a guardian for us Asian students. She is a positive figure which all students can look up to."

Chanthava Chanthavong, a UMass student, said, "I think Lucy is an excellent role model for Asian students. She wants to teach Asian students to preserve their culture. Most Asian students on campus are familiar with Nguyen for she is involved in many Asian activities."

Nguyen's latest effort has been to create an Asian cultural center. The result of that effort will become apparent to students on Oct. 24, when the United Asia House opens in the basement of Knowlton House.

"She is a wonderful woman," Chanthavong said.

United Asia House to open

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

On Oct. 24, the University of Massachusetts will experience an historic event – the opening of an official Asian cultural center.

The opening of the United Asia House is planned for 6:00 p.m. in the basement of Knowlton House, said Lucy Nguyen, professor of Asian languages and literature and advisor to the center.

Scheduled for the opening ceremonies are guest speakers, traditional Asian music, a traditional costume fashion show and traditional food from more than ten Asian countries, she said.

In the summer of 1988, the Tillis Commission recommended the creation of two additional cultural centers on campus, one for Hispanic and one for Asian students. A Hispanic cultural center is expected to open at the end of this month.

In the following months, Nguyen and other campus officials, including Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, worked to make the commission's report a reality.

"Cultural centers are an important part of creating a supportive climate for students of color," Madson said.

The United Asia House will be a home for all Asian and Asian-American students as well as a resource center for the entire community, Nguyen said. It will serve as a home for social and educational gatherings, she said.

The United Asia House will be a home where Asians and Asian-Americans can come together to learn and share each other's culture, heritage, and history, Nguyen said. It will also be a place where the community can learn about the 20 different Asian cultures represented on this campus, she said.

"In the past, the many Asian cultures on campus have not mixed. They all seem to do their own thing," said senior Tom Troung. With the United Asia House, all Asians may become part of one family, he said.

Access to work toward coalition of the oppressed

By SABRINA SUTHERLAND
Collegian Correspondent

Access, a new coalition composed of representatives of historically oppressed communities on campus, was recently formed to represent all oppressed communities in one Registered Student Organization, said the organization's founder.

Adam Stein, founder of Access, organized the group – the first of its kind at the University of Massachusetts – in part because of recent and continual harrassment and assaults against anyone perceived as a minority on campus.

"A type of person that would beat up on someone because of their skin color would beat someone up because of their sexual orientation or their religion" or anything else that is different, he said.

Stein said many historically-oppressed communities on campus are individually politically and socially active, fighting for individual issues, but that they need to work together to achieve common goals.

As issues arise in the future, Access hopes to be in a position to have 10 to 15 different communities backing a "victimized group" against their oppressors, Stein said. Realizing that conflicts may arise between the minority communities as well, Access hopes to serve as a forum where differences of opinion can be discussed and compromises or choices arrived, without individual groups putting each other at a disadvantage, he said.

The meaning of the coalition's name springs from Webster's Dictionary definition of access as ". . . freedom or ability to obtain or make use of; permission, liberty or ability to enter, approach, communicate with, or pass to and from . . ."

But the meaning is deeper than that, says Stein. It is the same idea but with the added strength of numerous small groups working together as a whole.

Access grew out of a discussion at the Multicultural Passover Seder Celebration last May, which was hosted by the Third World Caucus and the UMass Hillel Foundation. About 60 representatives from 20 minority groups came together at the event to celebrate their differences and learn a little about each others' history. The group has been meeting regularly since then and has identified some long and short term goals:

- A constitution for Access is on the drawing board as members plan to apply for full RSO status, Stein said. RSO status will make the group a permanent fixture after the founders are gone, he said.
- Access also wishes to compile an informational packet on all the existing historically-oppressed communities for administration and incoming students.

"The issue of multiculturalism is more than just White and non-White," Stein said. "There is individualism within the minority communities which should be celebrated."

The members of the coalition welcome representatives from other communities who have not yet become members of the coalition to do so as soon as possible. As Stein says, "segregation of our diverse groups on campus has been at the expense of our own empowerment."

East Germans may protest unless Krenz begins democratic reform

BERLIN (AP) — Protesters may fill East German streets again unless the new leader, Egon Krenz, belies his hard-line record and begins the kind of reforms under way elsewhere in the Soviet bloc, pro-democracy activities said yesterday.

Krenz made clear almost immediately after replacing Erich Honecker on Wednesday that the Communist Party would resist the democratic trends evident in Poland and Hungary.

"Krenz stands for the continuation of neo-Stalinst politics," said Reinhard Schult, a founder of New Forum, the largest pro-democracy group in East Germany.

Speaking on RIAS radio of West Berlin, he said Krenz "did not have one word to say about the causes of the current crisis and made no offer for talks with the opposition."

Author Rolf Schneider, a critic of the government, told RIAS: "The crisis will keep dragging on."

A Lutheran church leader said privately "the demonstrations will start again soon" unless the government changes its course. The church has been in the forefront of reform efforts in East Germany.

Foreign Minister Hans-Dietrich Genscher of West Germany, to which tens of thousand of East Germans have fled in search of freedom, urged Krenz to make "fundamental reforms." He said East Germans demand "their basic rights."

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev, a champion of reform, sent the new leader a telegram expressing confidence he would "respond to the demands of the time, following a course of renewal and continuity."

In Poland, the only Soviet bloc nation with a non-Communist government, both pro-Solidarity and Communist Party newspapers described Honecker's departure as a welcome change.

Newspapers in Hungary, which is moving rapidly from communism toward Western-style democracy, said Krenz was seen as a "transitional figure."

Reform activists in East Germany said 1,000 people held a peaceful protest in the northern city of Greifswald hours after Krenz, 52, was named Communist Party chief. He is a protege of Honecker, 77, who led the party for 18 years.

More than 120,000 pro-democracy protesters marched in Leipzig on Monday, demanding free elections and other reforms in the largest demonstration of East Germany's 40-year history.

Yesterday, many residents of East Berlin were skeptical about the leadership change.

"Krenz just wants to calm us down," said a worker in his mid-20s. "We'll have to see if there's going to be anything more than words this time."

Reform activists said yesterday the discontent was so great that employees had stopped work briefly in several factories. They said employees at a light bulb factory quit work recently and resumed only after meeting with management.

Federally financed abortions approved

WASHINGTON (AP) — The Senate yesterday approved a bill permitting federally financed abortions for poor women who are victims of rape or incest, sending the measure to the White House where President Bush has promised a veto.

The measure would broaden a nearly decade-old restriction on circumstances in which Medicaid will pay for a poor woman's abortion.

The Senate's 67-31 vote provided final congressional passage to a conference report on a spending bill including the key provision on abortion, which the House approved in a surprise vote last week. The Senate previously had approved broadening federal funding for abortions, and today's vote was the final step needed to send the bill to the White House.

The key provision of the appropriations measure would allow federal money to be spent on abortions for poor women who are victims of rape or incest, and who report it "promptly" to law enforcement or public health authorities.

The Senate took the vote with little debate on the abortion provisions. Sen. Brock Adams, D-Wash., said a veto would be "unconscionable" and would "cause enormous additional suffering" for poor victims of rape or incest.

Stealing one's confidence

Recently a friend of mine was forced into sex against her will. "Force" can be through violence and constraint or coercion and manipulation. "Sex" is by penetration. "Against her will" means "no."

Adam Stein

She knew him for a year. He lived in her dorm, he ate at her DC and they shared some friends. She knew he was interested in her because he always flirted with her. Conversations were often accompanied by hugs and perhaps a touching of an arm. All very innocent, but the added physical communication placed their verbal conversation on a different level. She liked the attention and reciprocated with her own flirtations.

A year later, he decides it's time to ask her on a date. She has no romantic interest for him. She doesn't want to hurt his feelings and so she does what many do, beats around the bush.

He calls her, hoping that he'll be able to hang out with her for a while. But let's not be naive. He's hoping that "hanging out" may become more than just that. Perhaps he'll be "hanging out" until the next morning.

So he calls her at 11 p.m. He insists and she gives in thinking, "Hey, we're only hanging out."

He comes over. They talk a lot. She thinks about the good conversation while he thinks about what will be coming after. At one point she is afraid that perhaps she is leading him on and explains that she likes him as a friend. They have never gone out together. He has never kissed her or held her. Thus friendship should not be such a hard concept to grasp.

Instead he looks away from her with disappointment, "So, what you're telling me is to get out of your room, huh?" That's not what she meant and he knows it. Again she tries to explain but he just doesn't seem to get it.

"No, I didn't mean it like that . . . look, you can stay here tonight, " she guiltily says, hoping he won't get so mad and that they will no longer be friends. She thinks, "Hey, I've had male friends hang out late and sleep over before. He can too."

So they go to sleep. But he gets in the same bed with her. She doesn't say anything, because he knows she just wants to be friends, so why not now? Furthermore, by this time she is too tired to deal with his defensiveness. He'll just think that she wants to kick him out of her room again.

But if they friends, why is he touching her breasts?

"Come on, stop it, I want to go to sleep," she says, hoping he'll stop touching her. But he doesn't and she repeats herself a couple more times and he asks, "Why?"

After a while she figures he'll stop if she ignores him. But he doesn't and she can't get any sleep, this has been going on for an hour.

One means of brainwashing is to deprive a person from sleep. A lack of sleep weakens a person's resistance. After being made so uncomfortable, a person will accept anything to normalize their life. Thus unconsciously, their brain accepts the indoctrination to allow the body to get some rest.

In her frustration she rolls on top of him, hoping that once he gets what he wants he'll leave her alone. They have sex. It's quick and unexciting. They do not kiss. He gets what he wants and leaves her to sleep.

Through coercion and manipulation she had sex against her will. Is this date rape? If it's not, then why does she act like she's been raped? She wants to forget about this night. She never wants to talk to him again. She woke up the next morning and washed her sheets because she felt compulsively dirty.

I hope you read this, "male friend," and think long and hard about that night, because you stole someone's confidence in people. You stole someone's confidence in trust. But, most importantly, you stole someone's confidence in themselves and their own judgment.

Stop oppressing the oppressed

Rumors are flying. The accusations are out. Guilt by association has been the verdict.

All over campus stickers are popping up that say; "Gay Rights Are Human Rights," and "We are Everywhere," and "Silence = Death." The UMass Lesbian, Bisexual, Gay Alliance has been blamed for these being plastered everywhere. They have been falsely accused, with no evidence at all.

Just because most of the members of the LBGA are gay, lesbian or bisexual does not mean that the stickers were put up by them. If stickers bearing the Star of David started appearing all over campus would Hillel be automatically blamed? If stickers with "Black Power" written on them were to appear, would African-American groups on campus be automatically found guilty of having put them up?

Over 2500 students on this campus are gay, lesbian or bisexual. There are four or five other gay, lesbian and bisexual groups on campus, why has the LBGA been singled out? How do people even know if it was gay, lesbian or bisexual students who did it in the first place? It sounds to me like what is going on here is Homophobia. The irrational fear and hatred of gays, lesbians or bisexuals or of the homosexual feelings in oneself.

The truth of the matter is that the stickers were not put up by the LBGA. I find that the Collegian has, once again, whether consciously or unconsciously, supported the homophobic feeling that occurs on campus. Throughout the semester, people have been scrutinizing the Collegian and how it reports and investigates stories which deal with minorities on campus. Once again, a minority population has found that it has been dragged through the mud because of the Collegian's irresponsibility.

I hope that in the future the Collegian will be more aware of its role as the information provider of campus events.

Bystander apathy hurts

On Saturday night of homecoming weekend, I witnessed two appalling crimes.

The first occurred when a gang of eight drunken muscleheads broke into my friend's house and started stealing her property. She tried to stop them and got punched out by their ringleader. When her boyfriend tried to help her, he was viciously beaten by this behemoth, while the rest of the muscleheads cheered and held back anyone else from helping.

Mart Boulerice

It ended as abruptly as it began. All the apes ran out of the house laughing, leaving my friend huddled semi-conscious in broken glass on the floor, his head bleeding profusely, his eyes and forehead purple and swollen to grotesque proportions and his girlfriend on the floor, sobbing and crawling towards him.

And it gets worse. I was one of the men being held back, watching helplessly as my roommate and his girlfriend were senselessly assaulted. I saw everything, and called the police as soon as the ape holding me tossed me into the wall and ran away.

It was immediately after my call that the second crime began, a crime that is still being perpetrated as you read this article.

One of the women who also witnessed the attack then told us she knew the names of two of the assailants, and that the car they drove belonged to one of them. She told us these names, and when I hastily wrote them down, she said she didn't want to get involved.

When the police arrived, she refused to come forward and admit that she could identify the criminals. I was shocked. You read about bystander apathy in big cities and it seems sad, but quite distant. But this is different. This is good friend refusal-to-help-for-no-reason. It is apathy.

The police tell us that without the person who can identify the assailants, they cannot do anything to help us.

We all stared at her, while she just sat there seemingly enjoying the attention, still refusing to speak. The police, frustrated, took the rest of our statements, and left shaking their heads in disgust. Several days later, I went to the police station and found there has been no progress on the case.

Now we stand at a crossroad.

Two of my friends were brutally and senselessly assaulted in front of a woman who claims to be their friend — yet will not help expediate the prosecution of their assailants. I will not stoop to mentioning her name in this public forum; as she is perfectly aware (hopefully painfully aware) while she reads this that I am speaking of her.

I hope this awareness will prove a sufficient catalyst to ignite a spark in her seemingly frozen conscience. By not coming forward she is condoning the actions of these criminals, and positively reinforcing them to repeat this disgusting violence.

Consider this: The next time this gang decides to go on a rampage, they may cripple, rape or even kill someone — while this one woman has the power to possibly prevent this with a simple phone call. She has an undeniable obligation, not only to her victimized friends, but to society as a whole, to identify these hoods.

This is an open appeal to her to come forward — to take a stand as a human being and to simply do the right thing.

Media perpetuates college myth

It is very disappointing to see, in the aftermath of Wednesday's protest of the budget cuts, that we could not control our urge to be stereotypical college students. It is admirable that so many of us made our way to Boston to show that we care about our education, but we slit our own throats.

A glimpse at Thursday's Boston Globe shows the headlines about the Bay Area earthquake, but also on page one is a story of the protest so many of us braved the cold and wet weather to attend. Unfortunately, the story did not focus on our efforts to turn back the budget cuts. Instead the article pointed out the estimated $20,000 of damage to windows, doors, flowerbeds, etc., the work of students storming the Statehouse.

Why did we have to undermine our efforts by showing such disregard for public property? When people pick up their newspapers and read about the rally they will not come away saying "Those students are right. I want my rep to know about it."

Instead they will be thinking "Look at those damned college students. Skipping class to go and make a mess of our state capitol. Probably upset that there's no underwater basket weaving this semester."

Wednesday's rally was our chance to show legislators and other Massachusetts citizens that we, the students of this state's colleges and universities, care about higher education. Instead we gave the media a chance to perpetuate the myth that public higher education is an ongoing party that will trash anything in its way.

See you in the unemployment line . . .

Let's get things into proportion

Let's get things in proportion here. The Dukakis administration is trampling more than flower beds. At the rally on Wednesday I saw 15,000 to 20,000 voters trying to tell their reps why they're angry. Four people were arrested — why was that given more airtime on two evening newscasts? Sound and video "bites" rule the airwaves, one guess as to what makes the better copy?

But, back to reality. Why was the Statehouse mobbed in the first place? Because of the political infighting going on in the chambers, that's why. Non-management has statewide consequences on students and faculty trying to get their jobs done. It's been eighteen months months — can you blame them for being a tiny bit upset? We've got ourselves noticed . . . now let's be coherent and influence that decision-making.

We have to believe that nearly all of those under the gold dome can act sanely. Face the future and raise the revenue, it's now or never.

And Michael, don't patronize us. We know you really weren't "proud but saddened" concerning the demonstration. Just annoyed that we spoiled your day. Hey, you're ruining more than our day.

Outraged by Allain's abrupt arrest

The guest on last Monday's WMUA radio talk show was Jay Allain.

He was an articulate, graceful and engaging speaker with an important message: military research is unethical and should not be conducted at the University of Massachusetts.

When I read in the Collegian that Allain had been arrested after the radio show, I was sickened with grief that someone as dedicated to the future of humanity as Allain could be arrested for trespassing after delivering an eloquent speech.

It is not a question of disorderly conduct or any other crime, but of a citizen speaking to the community. This violates the first amendment rights of freedom of speech. Jay is an alumnus to the University; he is committed to the freedom of ideas and should not be arrested like a common criminal.

It is an outrage that his arrest occurred. It makes one believe that our democratic values are in danger.

Kate Bush glides into The Sensual World

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Four years after the landmark Hounds of Love album, Kate Bush smiles on us all once again and releases The Sensual World. Bush, a musical genius and the inspiration for dozens of articles with insipid puns in the title ("Bush Fires," "Bush Ranger," "The Bush of Ghosts," etc., ad nauseum) is a painstaking artist, and has released only six albums in her 11- year career.

Despite the fact that she's been around all this time, America has been loathe to embrace her bizarre brand of music. Maybe it stems from the fact that she never follows the commercial trends and makes songs that please her. Maybe it stems from the fact that she has a gale force voice which occasionally gets so rough that your eardrums feel like they've been run over a cheese grater.

More pity for those who ignore her, because if they were to take a look in, they'd find music with originality and imagination.

The Sensual World should find favor in the states because Kate seems to be mellowing out a bit. The cheese grater voice is gone, replaced by a silky smooth one that caresses your ears lovingly, and then, when you least expect it, gives your nose a playful tweak. Featuring an all-star cast, including ex-Japan bassist Mick Karn, Pink Floyd supremo David Gilmour, and a batch of Bulgarian vocalists known as Trio Bulgarka, The Sensual World is at turns seductive, playful, mournful, preposterous, and celebratory.

DISC JUNKIE

Four years of waiting can push expectations high for an album. Couple this with the fact that Kate Bush has already released the best album ever in the history of music (1982's experimental opus The Dreaming), and you can see that we were all set to be disappointed.

While this album isn't as stunning overall as The Dreaming or Hounds of Love, it's still firmly head and shoulders above the rest.

Even on a record as polished as one bearing the word "sensual" in its title should be, there are standouts. Our current favorite track is "The Fog." It swirls, broods, glides and swoops like the water that Bush is singing about. It's a melancholy song about growing up, says Bush, and features her father providing some snippets of dialogue. You can feel the water and the fog washing out of the speakers at you.

There is one dud here, however. "Reaching Out" is a histrionic, woefully overdone ballad. Oddly, Bush's most powerful vocal performance on this album is drowned in a sea of syrupy strings and bad Bette Midler cliches. Worse yet, it's right in the middle of all the good stuff. When it comes on, our hand is often seen "reaching out" for the skip button.

We could drone on and on forever about the merits of this album.

The brilliant computer love song "Deeper Understanding," or the intense bombast of "Rocket's Tail" (which features Dave Gilmour again, wailing away in a stunning series of guitar solos) are reason enough to get this record.

While it isn't as ambitious as Kate's previous albums, it is still an ultimately satisfying collection. Just one word of warning: the powers that be decided to relegate one of the best tracks, "Walk Straight Down the Middle," to the status of cassette and CD-only bonus track. For this reason, you should avoid the vinyl unless you also want to pick up the British single, which features that bonus track as a B-side.

But, regardless of medium, this album is a winner. Step into Kate Bush's Sensual World and find out for yourself!

Education and fun offered for pro-lifers on Saturday

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

This Saturday is your day to speak out and be heard on the issue of abortion.

Various pro-life organizations will be sponsoring three big events that intertwine education and awareness with creativity and entertainment.

The day will begin at noon with visibility actions. Women will be performing street theater and activities.

The crowds that these performers draw will then attend the abortion speak out, which will be held at 2 p.m. in Johnson Chapel at Amherst College. Sponsored by the Hampshire College Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program, the event features speakers who have all had either legal or illegal abortions. They will talk about their experiences and views on the subject.

Marci Lew, co-founder of People For Choice at UMass, said, "This type of action is really important because it's bringing the worries of women back into this issue, because it is a women's issue and it's breaking the traditional silence around abortion and the past horrors of life without legal abortions.

"Women have to be heard, and so far the debate has primarily been by men to men about women. Women need to be heard. It's our bodies and our issue," Lew said.

That evening, people will be able to loosen up and relax at Hampshire College, who will be holding the It's Your Choice To Dance For a Woman's Right To Choose dance, in Saga Dining Commons, from 10 p.m. until 2 a.m.

The dance, which includes a live DJ, is a fund-raiser to subsidize buses to go to the pro-choice march in Washington, on Nov. 12. Tickets are $2 and $3, and beer will be served to those who show proper identification.

Andy Warhol's 2 hours of fame

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

Kynaston McShine, the senior curator of painting and sculpture at The Museum of Modern Art, New York, presented a slide show and lecture Thursday night on the exhibition he organized last spring, Warhol: A Retrospective.

"Warhol was not an artist in a vacuum, but very much a part of his time," McShine said. "He had vision and originality and left a great imprint on the history of modern art."

Before getting into the lecture, McShine opened on a humorous note. He said that in 1967, Warhol was scheduled to deliver lectures on a tour of colleges he was doing. Warhol felt very uncomfortable speaking publicly and often sent an impersonator and some back-up dancers with a band, he said.

"I have no back-up band, but to spare myself, I've sent somebody else," McShine said. It was this dry humor which kept the two hour lecture lively.

A slide early in the show was a portrait of Warhol painted by an art school friend at the time of their graduation. Warhol is shown as a "crew-neck sweatered college boy," McShine said.

McShine showed different examples and styles of the photographic work Warhol used to portray himself. Warhol was the son of poor Czechoslovakian immigrants and McShine said that Warhol was much involved in one level of the American dream — the great desire to rise above his background and go from the boy next door to glamour.

The self-portraits Warhol did in New York, beginning around 1969, show heavy use of the automatic camera, which McShine said is a major way of complete detachment.

In one eight mat print, Warhol is hiding behind dark sunglasses. McShine said this shows the movie star image and glamour Warhol was looking for. But the print can also imply shyness.

Other examples show a casual attitude with Andy wearing a t-shirt and showing a little arrogance, he said. In 1969, the self portraits present a reflective, red-toned face. McShine said Warhol was not as nervous, and was now a little bit more poised, though not very self assured. But since only one eye is visible and we can only see his face partially (because of shadowing) there is a mystery as to what he is thinking, but some acceptance of himself as a star.

During the late 1970s, Warhol presented himself in a more sinister light, placing a skull on his shoulder. McShine said, "This is an example of the art tradition remembering the idea of death and the skull becomes a metaphor for every man.

The final self portraits "with the freaky wig" from 1986 present a haunting image showing only the face on a background of black. "The artist is present, but still a little evasive and elusive under the skin of camouflage," McShine said.

He spoke at length about several other important Warhol themes. Warhol was preoccupied with the media, the news, and disasters. Slides showed the use of the front page of a newspaper. One piece, which had never been seen before and was discovered during research for the exhibit, was a crossword diagram. An art student discovered that all of the clues can be found in a John Cage poem.

"Even Warhol's first etching was so technically fantastic that it looks like it had just been cut out of a newspaper," McShine said.

Repetitious images of sheets of airmail stamps and a label reading "Glass — handle with care," represent the idea of covering the whole canvas. The multiple dollar bills, objects of desire, are an example of Warhol's all-over effect, he said.

McShine said that Warhol often would set something up, photograph it, then make the painting from a blown up copy of the photograph. This is how the Campbell's soup cans were painted.

Warhol's first show in 1962 at the Ferris Gallery in Los Angeles featured the 32 soup can series which lined the gallery walls almost like a pantry shelf, he said.

The images of Marilyn Monroe were a response to the tragedy of her death. They turned her face into a major icon. The idea was a sanctification of the star, McShine said. Marilyn and Jacquline Kennedy were both painted by Warhol inside golden circles, which McShine said look like commemorative medals.

Warhol also imaged comic strip characters known for transformation. "He painted Superman and identified with Clark Kent, an ordinary person," McShine said, citing Batman as another example of somebody who gets transformed into a superior being.

Greg Brown will bring his acoustic guitar to the Iron Horse on Sunday. Barb Schloff will open the show. Tickets are $10.

UNDERSTANDING GOES FURTHER THAN IGNORANCE

Music on wax won't melt in the heat

By JAY BRIDA
Collegian Correspondent

The Pioneer Valley is a bastion of all that is cool. Anything that is cool, was cool, or will be cool, is stocked and preserved here in the Amherst/Northampton area. We are either trendsetters, or the traditionalists who uphold the culture. Fortunately, the near relic that is the long-playing record album is still surviving in this enlightened area. The LP brings in more business here, than in most places around the country. This is not to say that the record album is thriving, but most independent record retailers tell us that it's not dead yet.

At For the Record in Amherst, manager Wiley E. Smith has maintained that, "We will continue to stock all new releases on CD, cassette, and LP."

For the Record has a large selection of newer records of all styles, and for those of us who cannot afford a compact disc player, we are thankful.

For the serious record collector, you may be able to find some real rarities at Yesterday and Today in Amherst, and at Dynamite Records in Thornes Marketplace in Northampton. At each store, the selection is varied. Yesterday and Today specializes in hard-to-find psychedelia and has a great Iggy Pop collection. Dynamite has more in the jazz and reggae section. They both have new and used albums and they encourage buying and trading records — but be careful, they are very selective and eclectic, so be able to barter.

Also in Amherst is Al-Bums, which is more of a cassette/CD oriented store but they do have a fairly large collection of used records. It can't hurt to browse, especially if you're looking for an old Police or Neil Young album. Manager Jay Barnard said that he is no longer receiving newly released LPs, and predicted that by Christmas, all major recording companies would no longer ship new releases on album.

The largest and most comprehensive record store in the Pioneer Valley is Main Street Records in Northampton. They have it all, from the harder-to-find independent records, to the release of the day. Recently, Main Street has pushed its CD business to the forefront, but the record album you want is more than likely there. They have said that until the companies stop making records, they will continue to stock them.

Let's face it, the LP is dying. The compact disc has better sound, lasts longer, can contain more recorded music, and it's cheaper for the company to produce (read: more profit).

But the record album is simply cooler. It has better cover art, if only because you can see it, it's cheaper to buy two classic albums, say The Clash, the band's self-titled debut, or This Year's Model, by Elvis Costello, than it is to buy either of those titles on disc, and it's more romantic. The record is American culture at its best (of course, that isn't saying much). Vinyl against plastic. Would Elvis and Chuck have made it without vinyl? Is it possible to produce a scratch beat from a disc? How will anyone put secret messages on a disc? Plus, kids everywhere will no longer be able to feel the guilty pleasure of playing Mom's Neil Diamond record on 45. Who are we to deprive anyone of that? Long live the pops, the scratches, the record sleeve, and the cool way that the cover fades after a while.

Mike Scott and the rest of the Waterboys will play the Fine Arts Center tomorrow night. The show is sponsored by UPC.

Preston Reed's magic fingers astonish all

By KAREN PLACZEK
Collegian Correspondent

Preston Reed
Iron Horse
Tuesday, Oct. 17

On the drizzly fall evening of Oct. 17, the warm candlelit atmosphere of the Iron Horse Cafe provided an inviting musical refuge, thanks to the acoustic talent of Preston Reed. Having played for 17 years, Reed is most notably known for his recent performances opening for the Cowboy Junkies, and has played in San Francisco as relief between sets for performers such as Robin Williams.

Fingers dancing skillfully over the strings, Reed's instrumental performance style was characterized by fast finger picking and an ingenuitive handling of the guitar. This rather unconventional use of the guitar released a sound reminiscent to that of a harpsichord.

REVIEW

Reed exposedhis inventiveness further through a technique he termed "hammer-ons and pull-offs." With his tall frame bent over the strings, Reed employed this method, which he created to fulfill his desire to play both drums and guitar simultaneously.

By hammering down, andquickly releasing the strings with one hand, he produced the effect of bongos, while continuously strumming with the other. Reed's varied usage of harmonics at times left the crowd feeling as though they should be waltzing to the early 60s-like dance songs.

"The Road Less Travelled," the title song from his last album, offered a feeling of a folk festival. Pieces such as "Flatonia," whose name was derived from Reed's seven-year stay in Texas, lent a lazy western ranch sound, while others possessed the ethereal "twang" of a Hawaiian luau rhythm.

Straying from his standard 4/4 time, Reed's experimentation with a 6/8 tempo resulted in a song entitled "Life of Reilley," which was flavored with a distinctive Irish quality.

Preston Reed's symphony of sounds, which ranged from drums to harpsichord, is sure to attract most musical creeds as he extends his tour throughout the Northeast.

The protestors were trying to get onto the House floor, but police formed a wall and began shoving them back, Smith said.

"The problems were created by the MDC," he said. "As far as I'm concerned, the metro police are responsible for any injuries."

Four UMass students were arrested at the Statehouse Wednesday. Richard L. Page, 24, Jonathan Leavitt, 22, and Geoffrey B. Feldman, 27, were arrested on charges of disorderly conduct. Michael Currier, 23, was charged with assault.

Andrew Sirulnik, a senior English major, said when students congregated in the area just in front of the House assembly room, the police appeared to be preparing for a confrontation. "There were 400 or 500 students inside on the steps. About 20 got through the doors in front of the assembly room, and then the police began filing in," Sirulnik said.

The students began to move back and shoving ensued between the crowd behind the doors and the police.

"We left because that wasn't our point, to get arrested," said Liz Rensenbrink, a UMass student.

Sirulnik said he felt the arrests were "politically motivated and completely unjustified."

"We've been begging for too long," he said.

Gov. Dukakis said Wednesday he was "not pleased" with the behavior of students at the rally. State officials say there was up to $15,000 in damages done to the Statehouse and its grounds.

"They're complaining about $15,000 worth of damage," Rensenbrink said, "they've done $25 million worth of damage."

■ Roy Eddington

"Even though this award is mine, and it has my name, it doesn't belong to me," he said. "It belongs to the person in the street, the drop-out — people who haven't realized they have the potential to pursue a degree in higher education."

He added, "If it hadn't been for a number of people encouraging me, I probably never would have pursued a degree in any kind of education."

One of these people is Mirriam Williford, associate provost of Continuing Education and Public Service, who nominated Eddington for the award.

In a letter to the award committee, Williford said, "The most gratifying part of our association with Roy is that he is proving through his life the power and strength of education."

One of the people who helped Eddington use this power is Walter J. Silva, coordinator of the Prison Education Program.

Silva said he met Eddington in 1987, when he was enrolled in an education program at a minimum security prison in Lancaster, and hired him last October to work in the office, after he was moved to Hampden County Release in Springfield.

Eddington helps him deal with the needs of students who are still behind the wall, Silva said.

"It's hard to study in a cell with yelling and screaming going on," he said. "[Roy] helps me to understand that, and he helps me deal with students on a daily basis."

Silva said his ultimate goal is to have a pre-release facility in the community.

"Three-quarters of the people who have gone to prison will go back in two years," he said. "We try to break that revolving door syndrome."

Eddington said he tries to break this pattern as well, by speaking to people of all ages about his drug addiction, and the importance of education.

"I want to be a crusader of what's right," he said.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Friends are willing to help you if you lay all your cards on the table. A lot of travel is indicated after the first of the year. A telephone call to a former employer brings good luck in February. Young people continue to play a major role in your happiness and financial success. Your productivity and income will rise if you keep your temper in check. Do not sound off when feeling pressured. Honesty helps you restore a family tie.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: humorist Art Buchwald, actress Arlene Francis, Yankee legend Mickey Mantle, actor Jerry Orbach.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Take action on an important matter only after consulting partners. Soften up a difficult member of the opposite sex with flattery, but back your statements with facts. Keep loved one's secrets.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Your personal plans will meet with little opposition. Think about rejuvenating your relationship, or better yet, start anew! Beware: romance is in the air, and now is the time to smell the roses.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Remember loved ones when buying small tokens of appreciation. Dinner is not out of the question, and don't forget dessert! Missing a meeting will cause tensions among some, but your romantic needs are more important. Kiss a Capricorn.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Humanitarian efforts will boost your standing in the community. Avoid speaking in a headstrong fashion. A change in diet will give you more energy. Complete all work assignments on time.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Stay with those who have proved reliable. A casual, indirect approach works wonders when discussing touchy subjects. You gain new confidence when you solve your own problems. Plan ahead.

LEO (July 23- Aug. 22): Guard against carelessness. Do not exaggerate when describing an agreement. Save funds for travel. A student receives good news regarding employment or a scholarship. Romance beckons.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Someone is more interested in what you are thinking than in what you are saying. Use your writing or public relations skills to promote a pet project. Guard against neglecting your loved ones.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Exciting people or events could distract you from important work. Postpone social engagements. You will gain nothing from bickering with an authority figure. Romance is fulfilling.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Investment income grows. Settling into a new environment or job is easier than you expected. Mate will be supportive if you are honest. The media influences some of your decisions.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Spend money for something that will bring you peace of mind. You need to protect your mate's feelings. Lost items resurface when least expected. A free-lancer gets a lucky break.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Partner's demands are important; you need to listen to be heard. A heart-to-heart talk is needed to go over potentially embarrassing desires. Kiss (and hug) a Taurus.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): A wonderful day for romantic interludes. First impressions are important; making the right one tonight is essential. Emphasize your special talents.

On the passing end of Vergantino's arm is split end John Gilman and tight end John Yergey.

"I don't even want to talk about the tight end," Reid said. "He's been All-Everything."

Another "All-Everything" is defensive tackle Mike Renna, an All-America selection last year and leader of the traditionally-strong Blue Hen defensive unit.

UMass hasn't had any trouble scoring since redshirt sophomore Gary Wilkos took over the job two weeks ago, ringing up consecutive 30-plus scoring outings. Defense is where the Minutemen have to tighten up.

"We're a struggling outfit right now, but we have a chance to play better down the stretch than we have the last three games," Reid said.

Reid noted that, with the exception of nose guard Joe Cullen, the defensive line hasn't had any consistent starters all year. Drew Comeau, a converted linebacker, and Rich Kane, a converted center, will draw the starts this week at tackle. John Creamer, who was injured in the first defensive play of the year, and Cesar Tejeda, a redshirt sophomore, wait in the wings.

Another bright spot has been the play of true freshman Mario Perry, who has picked off three passes in the last two games (one returned for a touchdown) and allowed Reid to move Comeau to the line to beef things up.

Last week, the defense was blown apart by Connecticut as tailback Kevin Wesley went nuts all day.

"We had a lot of confusion up front. We weren't aggressive enough at linebacker, and the defensive line was scattered all over," Reid said. "I gave a lot of credit to the offensive line of UConn, but we helped them out a little bit."

Reid will also be looking for a bigger contribution from tailback Jerome Bledsoe, who was shut down by UConn last week. That forced Wilkos into a passing mode, which was effective, but limited the options for the Minutemen.

"We need more consistency. We don't want to be a drop-back, throw-the-ball team," Reid said. "[Wilkos] was able to do it last week, but we have to stay in a good run-pass mode."

UMass will need a little of everything, a solid all-around output if it hopes to finally break the Delaware jinx.

West Virginia. The past four years have seen either Penn State or West Virginia win the title, while UMass has played the bridesmaid for the past two years as well third the two years previous to that.

Although the Minutemen started the season slowly, each meet has shown a jump up in their level of performance, highlighted by last weekend's ECC win.

If the Minutemen can take their level of running up yet another notch they could possibly give Penn State a run, or at least finish a strong second. This would set them up perfectly for the New England Championships the following weekend.

"We've worked our way up to decent level," said O'Brien. "Now, with some mistakes behind us, we can start the championship part of the season with a clean slate. A lot of people needed some more racing experience, and they got it last weekend. Hopefully last weekend's excitement will carry over to this Saturday."

said.

Rhode Island's top threat is Jen Eaton, a forward who has put 10 goals in the net and has collected one assist. Defensively, URI is led by Tressa Fiore, the goaltender, who has played every minute of the Lady Rams' games. Fiore has given up 33 goals and has put three shutouts into the books.

"As far as our region, as far as the NCAA and as far as the conference, it [the URI game] is important," Hixon said. "With only a few games left every game makes a difference now."

A win for UMass would clinch second place in the Atlantic 10 for UMass going into the conference tourney in early November by virtue of its would be 4-1 record. UM trails only Penn State who it lost to, 1-0, earlier in the season. Overall, the Minutewomen are 9-4-1 and ranked No. 9 by the NCAA in the country so this game will also have some ramifications on whether UMass gets into the NCAA post season tourney. A win for UMass probably would not change their place in the rankings. But a loss could be devastating because URI is a weak team.

Of course, it all depends on mother nature.

'D' is the key for UMass

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

Shutouts are impressive, but high scoring shutouts are even more so. Once an offense can rely upon their defense only then can the offense perform, and perform consistently.

Rolling off a shutout streak [the Minutemen have not given up a goal in its last two games], the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team will board the vans to travel to Hamilton, N.Y. as they face Colgate University in this Saturday at 1 p.m. The Minutemen are currently 4-8-2 for the season.

"Colgate presents problems for us in that they are a long ball team," said head coach Jeff Gettler. "They are very direct and attack early. It will be a test for our defense but I'm confident we'll solve these problems."

Colgate holds a 6-5-4 record. Their opponents have included Adelphi University (2-2, overtime) and Syracuse University (1-1, overtime). Cornell University (0-0) and Marist College (0-0) games have also extended beyond regulation, Army (1-0), being the only overtime game in which Colgate has lost.

"Our defense has been peaking at the right times," Gettler said. "They've been absolutely brilliant by denying offenses into the game. [Senior] Tom Skiba is at the top of his game."

Sophomore Dan Lawrence is currently the Minutemen's top scorer with five goals and three assists. Sophomore Ray Cunha is runner up with three goals and one assist for the season. Skiba and junior Pete McEvoy have three assists apiece.

"[Junior] Carl Hanks has been playing superbly. I've never seen him play with the intensity he's playing now. It's great," Gettler said. "Cunha has been much more effective lately. He really turned a corner at the Connecticut game."

UMass freshman goalie Steve Armenti has five shutouts for the 10 games he's started. He has a 1.0 goals against percentage.

Freshman Scott Coleman is the Red Raider leading scorer with six goals. Junior Rob Stone is runner up with three goals and four assists. Top assisters are sophomore Doug Reffue and sophomore Jeff Standish, with five assists apiece. Reffue has two goals this season and was Colgate's top scorer last season. Standish has one goal this year.

Senior goalie Kenny Reisman has completed seven shutouts within the 17 games he has started for the Red Raiders. Reisman has allowed only 17 goals in those games.

"I just hope Brett Anthony and Steve Cesnek can find the net," said Gettler. "Our ability to hold possession and get dangerous can be maintained as long as we continue to play at the level we're playing."

UM looks for another win

Hoping to continue their home-court winning streak, the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team faces a tough challenge this weekend, taking on Yale University, Friday at 7 p.m. and the University of Rhode Island on Saturday at 4 p.m., both at Totman Gymnasium.

"Both teams are strong defensively. We can play well enough to beat them, but if we don't block well, we'll lose early." UMass coach Carol Ford said. "We want to control the match."

Yale, 14-6, (3-2 in the Ivy League) coming to UMass on a two game winning streak with victories over Harvard and Dartmouth, will be looking to taste victory yet again. Yale also placed second in the Colgate Quad and the Connecticut State tournaments and third in the Central Conn. tournament earlier this season. Leading in kills, Kristina Kliszewski and Kathy Mejia are two players to watch on Yale.

"I'm worried that Yale beat Brown University because we lost to Brown. Yale beating Brown means something to me." Ford said.

Rhode Island, 13-7 overall, an Atlantic-10 rival, will want to improve their 5-1 conference record to hold on to their second place standing. URI's Tengy Gardner and Michelle Drerup lead the Rams in kills with 3.89 and 3.13 per game respectively.

"URI is one of the top teams in our conference." said Ford.

The Minutewomen's spirits are high after their thrashing of Central Connecticut Wednesday night. If UMass can continue playing well, their chances of victory are possible. "We're not afraid to take chances," said Ford. "The kids are happy the way that they are playing."

Ford added that both matches will be a lot tougher than Central Conn. but that the Minutewomen want to go out well against the stronger teams.

was just four seconds behind UMass leader Shana Smith last Saturday.

LaFreniere has seen some encouraging signs from her own team as well. "Becky [Johnson] and Precious [Hill] are both coming on — they're both talented and mentally tough," LaFreniere said. Precious has the training behind her now, and she has the competitive background to excell in big meets. Becky is really up for this meet. She's determined to beat the two Rhode Island runners who beat her Saturday (Ulicny and Deanna Germano)."

Football hopes history won't repeat itself

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

History has got to start working in favor of the University of Massachusetts football team sometime.

Since 1958, the Minutemen have gone face-to-face with the University of Delaware 13 times. In all 13, Delaware has come away with the win, including three-point efforts each of the last two seasons.

UMass coach Jim Reid isn't ready to believe that the Minutemen have been infected with some kind of triskaidekaphobia. In fact, Reid doesn't even want to talk about this particular streak.

"We've never beaten them, but we're not making a big deal of it," Reid said. "Every time we make a big deal of it, we end up getting blown out."

He cited 1986, when Delaware came to town on Homecoming and wrecked the Minutemen, 41-13. The last two years, a field goal by kicker Don O'Brien has been the difference as Delaware took three-point victories.

"Last year we said, 'Hey, let's just play hard and see what happens.' We played hard and it was a great football game," Reid said.

But O'Brien's boot was the deciding factor after UMass fumbled the ball away inside the 5-yard line in the last minute, and ended up on the short again for the 13th time, 10-7.

"We looked close at that play, and people say it was luck, luck, luck," Reid said. "But luck is when preparation meets opportunity. We could have closed down a lot harder on that drive play. They were jacked up and came after us, and we didn't seal them off."

The University of Massachusetts football team will play at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium tomorrow.

The Minutemen (2-3-1, 1-3 in YC) try again tomorrow at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium (1:30 p.m.).

"Everyone talks about 'we hate this and we hate that.' There's none of that," Reid said. "We have great respect for Delaware and the way they play."

"As always we're expecting another tough battle up there," said Blue Hen coach Harold "Tubby" Raymond. "UMass has had a season a little bit like ours. It seems that they move the ball consistently and move it well, but they've been very unlucky at times."

In a clash of the defending Yankee Conference co-champs, both come in struggling, against the opposition and against fate.

Delaware (3-3, 2-2 in the YC) was picked by sportswriters in preseason to reign the Beanpot again. But it has been pushing uphill against luck all year.

"The most incredible things have happened to them, that will not happen against us," Reid said. "They move the ball well. Delaware is a Yankee Conference champion team, they really are."

Leading the way is freshman quarterback Bill Vergantino. As someone who Reid recruited hard throughout high school, Vergantino is a familiar sight for the coaching staff.

"He's an option quarterback with a strong arm," Reid said. "Delaware's gone to a lot more option with him. We know he's fast and we know he can throw."

Anyone that knows the option understands it isn't worth anything without some capable backs to complete the package. Delaware has made a move toward the offensive with such backs as Darryl Brantley and Gil Knight.

"Brantley's a good fullback, and Gil Knight, he can lose you easily," Reid said.

URI comes to town

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

At this moment in time, the biggest opponent of the University of Massachusetts field hockey team is the weather. After a rainout at Springfield College yesterday, the Minutewomen are scheduled to play the University of Rhode Island tomorrow at Totman Field, weather permitting.

Last night, however, Totman Field was drenched with water from rain that fell in Amherst. If tomorrow's game is called because of rain, UMass will attempt to play it on Sunday at Totman or possibly Springfield.

A rainout of the weekend would not be to the Minutewomen's likings as they have not played since last Saturday. That would leave a 10-day layoff between its last game with Iowa last Saturday and its next game with Boston University on Wednesday. UMass cannot afford to be rusty against a BU team that is ranked No. 12 in the nation.

URI is not so hot as BU at the moment, not having cracked the NCAA Top Twenty. The Lady Rams are 6-8 and 1-3 in the Atlantic 10 Conference. They have a first year coach, Jan Gascoigne.

"It's hard to say on any given day what they are going to be like," Hixon

Reds to head to tourney

Two Top-Ten teams on tap

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

When the women's soccer team flies down to Williamsburg, Va. to participate in the William and Mary Tournament, this weekend will serve as a sort of homecoming for six members of the team.

For Mary Curtis, Becky Bonzano, Michele Woodside, Tracy Arwood, Holly Hellmuth and Skye Eddy, it'll actually be a pleasure to hit the road.

For coach Jim Rudy, the thought of playing two top-10 teams ranked ahead of the eighth-ranked Reds, might not be as enjoyable.

But he realizes that the tournament is going to be a key in determining UMass' post-season chances.

"The importance [of the tournament] is it'll indicate to us where we are in our evolution and where we are in relation to the teams that we assume will be in the NCAAs," Rudy said.

Besides fifth-ranked host William and Mary and seventh-ranked North Carolina State, UMass' performance will be watched over by Connecticut, which is actually the highest-ranked team in the tourney — third.

Thus, the opportunity presents itself that if UMass wins both its games and UConn loses both games or even splits, the Reds could vault ahead of the Lady Huskies nationally and regionally, where UMass has been season-long runners-up.

"We're moving toward a showdown in the NCAAs with Hartford and Connecticut," Rudy said. He also didn't forget about the darkhorse of the region — Brown. "If they win all their games before playing us [in the last game of the year on the Hill], they could compete for a berth."

As far as this weekend, UMass will be up against two teams that are similar and yet different. For starters, both NC State and William and Mary have big guns on offense — Charmaine Hooper (22-3-47) and Rebecca Wakefield (17-3-37), respectively.

Both have good team depth, stocked with talented and skilled supporting casts. Hooper has midfielders Alena Craft and Linda Kurtyka, and perhaps the best player on the team, Linda Hamilton.

"She is the best attacking defender in the country, bar none," Rudy said. "She's got a flamboyant personality on the field. She gets a ball and she's ready to go. They'll try to spring her forward on offense to start an attack."

Wakefield has Jenn Tepper, Robin Lotze, and Erin McGonegal to support her. "William and Mary will have a lot of combination play in the midfield, then try to play off to the wings, break the flanks, and they have Wakefield to finish off."

A-10 weekend for X-country

• Men look for 1st win

By JON REIDEL
Collegian Staff

The newly crowned Eastern Conference champion University of Massachusetts men's cross country team will be looking for another title this Saturday at historic Van Cortland Park in New York City when it runs in the 12th Atlantic 10 Championship meet.

The major obstacle in the Minutemen's path to their first ever Atlantic 10 Championship will be the same one that has prevented their winning for the past two years — the Penn State Nittany Lions.

Last year, the Minutemen came in second by only six points to a Penn State team that was ranked seventh nationally at the time.

This year, the Nittany Lions are ranked 13th and are led by a very strong trio of front runners. Steve Brown leads this threesome, followed by Doug Walter and Jay Novack.

The Minutemen will counter with Art Smith, who finished third last weekend at Easterns, Jon Corso, Joe Livorsi, Herb Heffner, and Pat Ryan, all of whom finished in the top 11 in that same race.

"I'd like to see a similar performance to last year," said coach Ken O'Brien. "We're not as strong as last year up front, but we are stronger in the middle. I would be happy if we put our first three runners in the top 10 and our second two within the top 15."

The only other possible problem for the Minutemen could be the Mountaineers of

The UMass women's cross country team will find itself in a familiar position as it heads into the Atlantic 10 Championships on Saturday at Van Cortland Park, NY.

Facing a tough schedule throughout the season, the Minutewomen have defeated every team they've competed against except Yale and Providence College. UMass has been foremost among the 'best of the rest' in New England.

Against pre-race favorite Penn State and the rest of the Atlantic 10 there is a difference, however. "Our top five can run with Penn State's top five," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said. "They still have an edge on us, but we're physically capable of running with them."

Although Penn State is undefeated this season, LaFreniere doesn't sell her team short. "Penn State doesn't go against as many top teams as we do," LaFreniere said. "We don't exactly have a schedule where we just roll over people as a given."

In addition to the Nittany Lions, UMass will face strong competition from West Virginia and surging Rhode Island.

"Overall, I think we're stronger than West Virginia," LaFreniere said. "But they have two outstanding runners who can run right up with Penn State's top runners."

Despite posting only five runners, URI lost only 25-35 against UMass in a quad-meet on Oct. 14. URI boasts an outstanding runner in freshman Stephanie Ulicny, who

Water Polo to dive into NE's at Harvard

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts water polo team will be logging some heavy duty time this weekend as it plays five games in a span of less than 48 hours. The Minutemen will play the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Yale, Boston College, Brown and Harvard in the New England League Tournament at Harvard.

After a brief absence, coach Russ Yarworth's men returned to the Top 20 this week. In Tuesday's poll the Minutemen (7-8) checked in at the No. 20 position. The voters obviously disregarded the sub-.500 record and focused on the fact that seven of the eight losses came against top 20 teams.

Yarworth fully expects his players to handle MIT, Yale and BC, while the Brown and Harvard games will be tougher.

"Coming home 4-1 would be great; 3-2 a success; anything less than 3-2 is unacceptable," he said.

The MIT game will be one of revenge for the Minutemen. They lost to them two weeks ago on what Yarworth considered to be absolutely pathetic officiating. The loss left a sour taste in the team's mouth.

"Yeah, there's definitely a revenge factor," said Yarworth. "The kids want to prove they're better."

UMass has dropped its two games against Brown this year. In the opener at the Eastern Varsity Tournament they fell 11-7. Last weekend at the Naval Academy the Minutemen lost 10-6.

In order to win, UMass will have to concentrate on stopping Andy Gramly and southpaw Chris Darcy.

"Gramly's a good one and Darcy scored two late goals against us last game that killed us," said Yarworth.

What do the Minutemen have to do to be successful this weekend?

"We need to stay focused and not look ahead to Harvard and Brown," said Yarworth. "This is a real important weekend for us."

Pro-choicers discuss abortion experiences

By CRISTINA BRUNELLESCHI
Collegian Correspondent

Amherst was the site of two pro-choice demonstrations over the weekend, including performances by the Hampshire College Theater Collective and an abortion speak out at Amherst College.

The Theater Group performed several skits around downtown Amherst Saturday afternoon, illustrating the sharp contrast of approach and attitude of pro-lifers and pro-choicers.

"While the pro-life supporters use violent tactics, we support the right to let the woman choose," said Andy Davis, a member of the Collective.

The Collective, a group of 12 women and one man, all dressed in black wore signs saying "keep your laws off our bodies," started their performance with a woman lying on the ground in agony, holding a coat hanger surrounded by a group of people yelling "murder" at her.

The group then moved to Johnson Chapel at Amherst College where women shared their personal experiences with the audience of some 20 women and men.

Speaker Jill Lewis, a professor at Hampshire College, said she was brought up with a strict, religious upbringing in England. In 1971, Lewis, still an anti-feminist, moved to live in Paris where she met a group of women giving out information on abortion, which was illegal in France.

Lewis said she became pro-choice when she discovered that the year she was born, between 6,000 and 8,000 women were killed in France for having an abortion.

Accidentally becoming pregnant in England in 1973, Lewis was told to wait for seven weeks before her abortion could be performed, even though abortion had been legal in England since 1969.

"But I did not want to wait seven weeks and feel those changes taking place in me," she said.

Lewis found an abortion clinic in London through her French friends, where women from Italy, Spain and France went to obtain legal abortions.

"There was this whole idea of secretness, of doing something underground, of nobody knowing where you were in case something happened," Lewis said.

'This experience galvanized me greatly," she said, adding that it led her to speak out about women's rights. Lewis explained if her abortion rights were taken away, she would feel pushed down and under and marginal to society.

"If your body isn't your own, then what rights do we have?" Lewis said.

"My anger is that after 17 years of legal abortion, a woman should still have to go through so much shame," said Sarah Buttenweiser, adding that society's attitude toward abortion was harder for her to deal with than the actual abortion.

"I'm happy to talk about it," she said, but is angry that society makes the issue so private.

Carla Halpern, from the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights, a UMass Registered Student Organization, spoke out when the forum was opened up to the public.

"I am a Jew, a woman, a former fetus, pro-choice and angry," she said.

She then told of being stopped in the street by a woman who compared Halpern's pro-choice views to the Holocaust, saying that Halpern supported the murder of innocent lives, much like what happened to the Jews during World War Two.

Halpern said she would have liked to tell this woman that she remembered her people every day of her life, and that this woman's comparison of Jews to fetuses was racist.

The Speak Out, sponsored by the Civil Liberties and Public Policy Program at Hampshire College, concluded with Cara Page's reading of the pro-choice poem, "Right to Life," by March Piercy.

2nd Civility Week begins

Programs to address racism, other issues

By MATT SANBORN
Collegian Correspondent

The second annual Civility Week begins this week at the University of Massachusetts. It is a week of seminars, speeches and shows put on by students, faculty and staff to combat racism and address other issues on campus.

The goals of Civility Week are twofold, according to the Civility Week Coordinating Committee: defining what a multicultural campus is, and establishing the steps needed to achieve it; and exploring human differences and commonality.

Civility Week was prompted by the Hurst Report, an investigation of racial incidents prompted by the racial attacks on campus in 1986.

Fredrick Hurst, the author of the report, made 16 recommendations, one being to set up an annual civility day. This day, the report stated, would help establish a positive racial climate on campus.

Civility Day became Civility Week, coordinated by a committee of students, faculty, staff and administration officials.

Over 100 events took place last year and approximately 80 will take place again this year, said committee member Britt Alschuler.

Last year's Civility Day was highlighted by Hands Across UMass, when over 4,000 students, faculty and staff joined hands and formed a human chain that stretched accross the campus.

Civility Week will this year be concluded by Hands Around UMass, Alschuler said, "so we will remember, so we will carry on."

"It's a bridge between remembering and recognizing our past," she said, "and moving forward with directive action."

"It is a powerful event. We challenge the community to use that power in a meaningful way," said Alschuler, a junior.

Student in 1986 fight sues UM

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

A former University of Massachusetts student beaten in an October 1986 campus brawl has reportedly filed lawsuits against officials at UMass and the six men involved in the incident.

The Daily Hampshire Gazette reported Friday Yancy Robinson filed companion suits in Hampshire Superior Court that morning.

He is suing for costs, interest and attorneys' fees from the state of Massachusetts and UMass officials, and unspecified damages and costs from the six men, who were students at the time.

The suits stem from the violence that began in the Southwest Residential Area after the Boston Red Sox lost the final game of the 1986 World Series to the New York Mets.

Ten students were injured during the brawl. Investigators determined the incident was racially motivated.

Robinson's suit said UMass Chancellor Duffey, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson and former Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neil acted negligently by failing to train and supervise its public safety force, the Gazette reported.

Robinson and Madson were unavailable

Civility Week opens with anti-bigotry rally

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN
Collegian Staff

Some 70 students attended a rally Friday to protest all forms of bigotry. The demonstration kicked off Civility Week, which is sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Hillel Foundation.

Several students held placards outside the Student Union Ballroom which read, "Bigot-free zone," "Educate without hate," and "I reject racism, anti-Semitism and all artificial barriers."

Recent anti-Semitic incidents in Wellesley, at Brooklyn College and UMass, including the recent beating of a Black student in Southwest, sparked the rally, according to Gary Kabler, religious chairman for Hillel.

"We felt the need to speak out," he said. "We're tired of hearing of these incidents over and over again."

Kabler outlined the incident in Wellesley that occurred on Yom Kippur where anti-Semitic graffiti was spraypainted in the downtown area.

"Many anti-Semitic incidents on campus go unreported," he said.

Two weeks ago, swastikas and anti-Semitic graffiti was discovered in an elevator in a Southwest dormitory and Jewish students were reportedly harassed by phone, he said.

Randi Dubno, chairperson of Hillel, said at Brooklyn College on the Eve of Yom Kippur, two Jewish students wearing kipats were attacked by some 20 White men after they had left a Jewish center at the college. One student suffered a lacerated spleen while the other had a fractured skull.

A third Jewish student came to their aid and was also beaten, she said.

Speakers criticized the administration at the University of Massachusetts for its handling of racism, anti-Semitism, sexism and homophobia on campus.

Jason Kofman, co-chair of Civility Week said, "The administration goes home, but we have to live with this evil every day."

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter

He suggested that the administration start being pro-active rather than reactive in its policy of dealing with racist incidents.

"UMass is a tragedy waiting to happen," he said.

Max Mitchell, president of the Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Alliance, explained a reportedly homophobic incident two weeks ago on the Socially Diverse corridor of Brett House.

Residents were allegedly verbally harassed and one student taken to Health Services for injuries, he said.

"Education programs [on racism, sexism, homophobia and anti-Semitism] should not be optional, he said. "If we can educate, we can make fear go away."

Rabbi Saul Perlmutter, director of Hillel, said the problems with anti-Semitism lie in stereotyped traditions and slanted media coverage.

"Jews [and other minorities] are made to feel invisible through subtle messages," he said. "Don't be too Jewish. Don't be too Black. Don't be too Hispanic."

Perlmutter said Jewish people do not want to confront anti-Semitism, but have an obligation to change negative stereotypes and self images.

For Your Information

Former Congressman Paul Cronin, currently a candidate for governor of Massachusetts, is scheduled to speak tonight at 7:30 p.m. in CC 911-915. The event is sponsored by the Republican Club.

The Bahai Club will be showing a video on racial incidences in U.S. colleges, "Racism 101," on Wednesday, Oct.25 at 7:30 p.m. in CC 903. It will feature UMass's 1986 racial brawl. A discussion will follow.

The Office of Human Relations is scheduled to hold a forum, "Networking for a Multicultural Campus," on Wednesday, Oct. 25 from 12 p.m. to 2 p.m. in CC 168-70. As part of Civility Week, the forum will highlight the councils, committees, organizations, and other groups which work to make UMass a multicultural campus.

Lambda Chi Alpha is scheduled to hold its third annual Haunted House on October 25 and 26, from 7 p.m. to 9 p.m., and on October 27, from 7 p.m. to 10 p.m. at 374 North Pleasant St. The price of admission is $2 for adults and students, and $1 for children under twelve. All proceeds will go to the Department of Public Safety, toward the purchase of a new vehicle.

Applications for the Christa McAuliffe Teacher Grant Program are now available in Room 125 Furcolo Hall and the Financial Aid Office, room 243, Whitmore. Juniors and seniors with good academic records who are residents of Massachusetts and plan to teach in a Massachusetts public school system are eligible to apply for these $1,000 grants. Completed applications and supporting documents must be submitted by Friday, Oct. 27 to Joyce Putnam, room 125, Furcolo Hall.

GET READY FOR MAY

Other companies talk about being a leader.... May Department Stores Company is the benchmark for that comparison. Sales exceed $11.5 billion annually and May has achieved 14 consecutive years of record sales and earnings. Our talented, innovative team achieved this record.

Others talk about promotion from within.... May does it. We are looking for achievers to join May and continue our record-setting style.

Other retailers are recruiting buyers.... We're looking for vice presidents. We'll provide the coaching, counseling and training to help you reach your potential. Our compensation levels are very aggressive.

We will hire bright, goal-oriented students with strong leadership skills and the proven ability to work with numbers and think analytically. You owe it to yourself to listen to what we can offer YOU.

Abortion support group formed in area

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

In the midst of the far reaching tentacles of the abortion debate, almost forgotten is the woman who has experienced abortion.

Stigmatized by society, many women who have had abortions become confused about their feelings, and the feelings that society has projected on them, said Stephanie Haskins, an organizer of a new conciousness-raising group for women who have had abortions.

"There is a whole spectrum of feelings that women experience," said Haskins, adding that no two women feel the same. "This group will give validity to all of those feelings."

The consciousness-raising group began because the Everywoman's Center is not offering an abortion support group this semester, Haskins said, adding that she felt that there was a need for this type of group.

"It will be less structured than the [EWC] support group," added Haskins, who also works at the Family Planning Services in Northampton as an exam room technician and lab assistant.

"Abortion is not just a procedure that's over and done with," she said. "We need to know how we feel, and understand how we feel about our personal abortion experience."

Haskins said that societal pressure and expectations have a lot to do with the support women receive, or do not receive, before and after an abortion.

"You can't just get support from your community," she said, because society attaches so much shame and guilt to the experience of abortion.

Some women also feel that they must lie about their experience to deal with their choice, which further isolates them from society, Haskins added.

"Society has disaknowledged women who have had abortions," she said, "even the women's movement has disaknowledged us because we cannot personalize this issue without being stigmatized by society."

The group will discuss not only the personal experiences of individual members, Haskins said, but also give women the support and understanding that their decision should not be affected by shame, guilt or other societal pressures.

"If [abortion] is legal, why do we have to lie about our experience?" Haskins asked.

The need for the consciousness raising group was obvious, because membership is already closed, yet Haskins said that many women will never join such a group because of the stigmatization attached.

"The point is, women are upset, women are hurting, and we need to do something about it," she said.

Students learn diplomacy at model UN conference

By ROB SIMPSON
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON – The United Nations delegate from France rose from his chair and addressed the committee, stating that the Security Council's discussion of the situation in Kampuchea was not getting any nearer to a resolution, and he asked the committee to move on to another topic.

The Soviet delegate scoffed, inviting a scornful look from the French delegate. The two entered into a heated argument, at which the speaker banged the gavel down on the table.

"Decorum, delegates! Decorum!" the speaker shouted.

These intense displays of passion resembled the real thing, as students acting as model delegates from actual world nations simulated the UN as part of the Smith College United Nations Conference 1989.

The conference, held at the Stoddard Annex on the Smith Campus, ran from Thursday to yesterday. The Smith World Affairs Committee sponsored the conference, which attracted 120 students from colleges and universities across the Northeast.

"By and far they've done an excellent job," said Todd Roberts, a junior from the University of Western Ontario and model delegate from the USSR.

"It seems to be going pretty well," said Christy Hardin, a Smith junior who helped organize the event. "So far its been a fairly accurate simulation."

Hardin said since there are no international laws governing the world's nations, the real UN is important because it gives countries an opportunity to air their differences diplomatically rather than through military action.

However, Hardin cited some difficulties in imitating the UN.

"Its kind of hard to simulate the UN in one way because the issues aren't so vehemently ingrained in your background," she said.

She said, for example, it is difficult for a person to represent the USSR if that person has never lived there.

But some students were very pleased with their roles.

Model delegate to the UN Security Council Fred Jacob, a junior from Brandeis University, said "I'm having a good time because I'm on this power trip as France," referring to France's power to veto a Security Council vote.

"It's fun to debate, argue and pretend you're someone important," he said.

The atmosphere at the conference was mostly serious, interspersed now and then with humorous news flashes thrown in by the organizers.

One news flash read that several 3-foot tall aliens were seen skiing down the slopes in Yugoslavia.

"Its not so tense but the delegates are doing a lot of work," said Hardin.

The model delegates were mostly happy with the experience they were receiving by participating in the conference.

"It builds your confidence talking about issues on a high level with people who are knowledgeable," said Brian Shuler, a sophomore from West Point and model delegate from the United States. "Its kind of interesting to work out solutions to real problems in the world."

"You really get to work with people," said Roberts, adding that after the conference finished for the day, the model delegates would attend an on-campus party in order to relax and become acquainted.

Roberts said the majority of the students who participated are interested in careers in politics, economics, business and law.

"Most of the students that are involved in [the conference] want to know about international relations," said Hardin.

Events misidentified

The Collegian on Friday incorrectly identified several pro-choice events in Amherst as pro-life events. At noon on Saturday, there was visibility action on Amherst Common, followed by a 2:00 p.m. abortion speakout at Amherst College's Johnson Chapel. The event was sponsored by the Hampshire College Civil Liberties and Public Policy program. Saturday night Hampshire College held a benefit dance, called "It's your Choice to Dance for a Woman's Right to Choose," to help fund buses to go to the pro-choice march in Washington, DC on November 12.

All three events were pro-choice and had no connection with any pro-life organiztions.

Marci Lew, co-founder of People for Choice, a pro-choice organization at the University of Massachusetts, who was quoted in the story, said, "I am not now, never have been, and never will be anti-abortion. I think it is an obscene stance that is anti-woman, anti-sexuality and anti-religious freedom. I am now and always will be emphatically pro-choice."

Students to plant new flowers at Statehouse

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

About 25 University of Massachusetts landscape architecture students plan to spend next Saturday afternoon in front of the Statehouse toting shovels and rakes.

The students have volunteered their trucks, tools and time to repair the Statehouse flower beds and lawn that were trampled Wednesday by some of the 15,000 students protesting budget cuts.

James E. Grace, a senior who helped organize the group, said the students are going to Boston because they want to do something positive for the landscape architecture department and the University.

"We are going back there to replace the plants that were crushed, but we are not taking full responsibility for the trampling," he said.

Grace said the landscape architecture program is not yet accredited and may be eliminated if the UMass budget is trimmed further.

He said five students have volunteered their pickup trucks and the University has donated the use of a bus.

Media ignoring global warming, scientist says

By DAVE FORRESTER
Collegian Correspondent

The greenhouse effect is causing global warming whether or not the media covers the issue, said Dr. Steven Schneider, of the National Center for Atmospheric Research.

Schneider, named by Science Digest as one of the 100 outstanding young scientists in America, spoke recently in Bowker Auditorium about "Media Hype and The Greenhouse Effect."

Citing the media's attention to global warming due to the Greenhouse Effect during the heat wave of 1988, Schneider said the media has confused many people with its coverage.

Referring to a Congressional hearing held that summer, Schneider joked, "Remember last summer when the Greenhouse Effect was alive? This summer, the Greenhouse Effect disappeared—it wasn't quite as hot."

Schneider said the Greenhouse Effect is the natural way in which the earth retains heat from the sun. Carbon dioxide in the atmosphere admits sunlight, yet absorbs the heat emitted by the earth and traps it, he said.

NOW prints sex equity book

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

A $20,000 grant from the Carnegie Corporation has enabled the National Organization of Women to reprint two handbooks on how to achieve sex equity in the classroom — anywhere from nursery school to graduate school.

"Handbook for Achieving Sex Equity through Education," is a reference book for educators to help them understand and break sex-stereotypes.

"Sex Equity Handbook for School," by David and Myra Sadker, is a practical guide to help guard against the natural stereotypes that follow students into their classrooms.

"According to statistics from research, female students are interrupted by teachers more, male students are called upon more often and there is the typical stereotype of males being smarter in math," said Kay Mathers, Associate Director of the Carnegie Project for Sex Equity.

Mathers said general stereotypes of women and minorities follow them into the classroom.

The guides will be distributed to 100 national organizations, including the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Legal Defense and Education Fund, the Council on Asian-American Women and the U.S. Commission of Civil Rights.

The organizations were selected on their ability to publish and distribute the handbooks most effectively, Mathers said.

"They are considered 'equity organizations,' " she said.

Mathers said although the books cannot presently be found at the Tower Library, they can be purchased through her at the School of Education.

Jane Sapp, a popular folk-blues singer, and Barwa and Amanala, groups that sing South African freedom songs will perform at the University during Civility Week, Alschuler said.

"There are an incredible number of opportunities for students to take advantage of, ranging from participatory workshops to lectures and presentations," she said.

Alschuler said the goals of this year's Civility Week are not only to combat racism, but also to address hot campus issues.

"We have broad goals," she said, "It's an all issue thing and everyone can be involved. It can include the DOD protestors, homophobia, anything."

Friedman and Nye admitted to charges of assault and battery and Hayman, Nelson and Johnson were convicted of riot. All five were put on probation for one year and ordered to undergo counseling, the Gazette reported.

The students were originally scheduled to repair the Statehouse grounds yesterday, but recent rain caused the postponement. Richard Carey, the superintendent of grounds at the Statehouse, suggested tulip bulbs be planted instead of mums, because mums are seasonal, Grace said.

Carey will tell Grace today how many of the 15-cent bulbs are needed. Grace, who will work out financial details with Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson today, is hoping to raise money through alumni contributions.

Schneider said the media's coverage led many people to believe that the extreme heat of the summer was caused by the increase in carbon dioxide in the atmosphere. When the heat returned to normal, global warming was no longer news, and people forgot about the problem, he said.

Schneider said the concentration of carbon dioxide in the atmosphere has risen 10 percent since the mid-1950s.

"People have to learn to distinguish between the extreme [hot summer] and the mean," Schneider said.

Schneider said although people need to make this distinction, they do need to be aware that the effect of increased carbon dioxide could range from a one to a five degree Celsius increase in temperature, he said.

He said once people become aware of the problem, solving it may be easier.

Schneider, who has appeared on 20/20, The Today Show, Planet Earth and Nova, said scientists are still unsure of what will happen with global warming.

"This ignorance is a two-edged coin," he said. "We may see little change, or the results could be catastrophic."

BLACK AFFAIRS

Spotlight: AKA Sorority

BY SCOTT C. HILL
Collegian Staff

Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Incorporated was the first predominantly Black sorority in the U.S., founded on January 15, 1908, at Howard University.

A K A

The purpose of AKA has been stated as, "To cultivate and encourage high scholastic and ethical standards, to promote unity and friendship among college women, to maintain a progressive interest in college life and to be of service to all mankind."

Over 110,000 women are members of Alpha Kappa Alpha, making it the nation's second largest predominantly Black sorority, with 725 graduate and undergraduate chapters.

The traditional colors of Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority are pink and green. Their call is a high-pitched Skee-wee, and their hand sign is a fist with pinky extended. Calls, colors and hand signs are a part of every Black fraternity and sorority, and have secret meanings for each individual organization.

The undergraduate chapter active in our area is Xi Nu, the Springfield city chapter founded in 1983. At present, Xi Nu chapter has fifteen members, including seven at UMass. Acting Basileus(president) of Xi Nu chapter is Sheryl Wright.

Alpha Kappa Alpha Sorority, Inc. is active politically and socially on a national level. Among its programs are the African Village Project, which provides economic and technological support for African villages, and the Cleveland Job Corps, which helps fight minority unemployment. In 1983, AKA sorority joined with other organizations to help ensure passage of the Martin Luther King Holiday Bill and launched a drive to increase voters.

Xi Nu chapter specifically has been involved in charitable food and clothing drives and most recently, the ABC Walk.

AKAs at UMass have distinguished themselves in many ways. Soror Jennifer Smith is the area president of the National Society of Black Engineers, the premier organization for Black students who have enrolled in that rigorous field. Soror Kimberly O'Shields is vice-president of communication of that organization. Soror Gabrielle Buford is co-president and founder of the Nuance program in Gorman Residence Hall, a program designed to increase cultural awareness through educational and social programs.

Some famous AKAs are: Maya Angelou, author; Coretta Scott King and Rosa Parks, civil rights activists and Mae Gemison, NASA.

Study says Blacks suffer

By DANA KENNEDY
Associated Press

BOSTON (AP) One of the first national studies on Blacks by Blacks produced findings similar to another recent report, but it also looked behind trends, discovering new patterns such as a diminishing life expectancy for Blacks.

"Race continues to matter," according to the report, titled Assessment of the Status of African Americans. "Discriminations persist, although its forms have altered."

The study, a summary volume of which was released on Thursday, was commissioned by the William Monroe Trotter Institute for the Study of Black Culture at the University of Massachusetts at Boston and cost about $100,000. It was conducted by academics around the country in response to another, controversial study of Blacks by the National Research Council released last summer that was conducted mostly by Whites at a cost of $2 million.

But at the time that the National research Council Study was called in 1984, some Black scholars were angered by their omission from the study and spoke out in protest for several years. They feared that the study would downplay racism, according to Wornie Reed, director of the Trotter Institute.

"Historicaly, Blacks have been treated as objects of study, rather than major participants in the study," Reed said. "Many studies say Black are unemployed, we looked at why they're unemployed."

Reed acknowledged Thursday that the basic findings of the Trotter study did not differ greatly from the previous report. He said that some of the protests by the Black scholars may have contributed to the "fairness" of the National Research Council Study. But he said the Trotter report questioned how society contributes to the status of Blacks today.

"They talk about cultural poverty but we go even further to explain why there is such a problem and make policy recommendations," said Reed.

The Trotter report calls for more federal assistance to Black students, strengthening black families, stimulating economic growth, expanding child care and other federal programs and cultural sensitivity training for judges and others in the criminal justice system.

Vital statistics

- During 1985 and 1986, life expectantcy for Blacks dropped, the first consecutive decline this century. The average life expectantcy for Blacks dropped to 69.4 years in 1986, while Whites increased to an all-time high of 75 years.
- In 1984, the average Black family had a net worth of $3,400, compared with $39,000 for a White family.
- Minority youths are imprisoned three to four times more than White youths and receive stiffer sentences.

Editorial: Campaign for democracy in South Africa

The release of our leaders and comrades from prison, the imprisonment which was in the first place uncalled for,has been welcomed both in South Africa, Africa and the rest of the world. This release indeed marks a turning point in South African political arena and it also impresses upon the minds of the those who are doubtful about equality of all human beings to doubt instead their own ingenuity. The release of Baba Walter Sisulu and the seven other long-term prisoners of South African minority regime's unjust laws has marked another triumph achieved by the South African people led by their vanguard, the African National Congress of South Africa. I must mention that the A.N.C. is not absolutely alone in this triumph. So, the Pan Africanist Congress of Azania, and the black Consciousness Movement are part of this heroic defeat by the people.

We have witnessed since Malan to de Klerk that the South African regime, with all military power afforded to it by international forces of oppression and imperialism, is unable to break the unity of our people and in particular the focal point around which their political activism has been attached. Malan-to-de Klerk regimes have tried all things, from imprisonment of people's leaders, banning people's organizations, appointing puppets among black people to lead the creation of the bogus homelands, imposing municipal elections in the townships with the hope that the Natives would assume such elections as democracy and many other jives imaginable. Last week de Klerk met with our moral leaders, their excellencies bishop Desmond Tutu, Rev. Chikane and Rev. A. Boesake. These men, together with Rev. Beyers Naude, whom the regime did not invite, are strong and highly valuable in our struggle for freedom and social justice. But de Klerk's invitation though meant to deceive the world about reform (of apartheid, which is not possible), has a hidden agenda. He thought that these men of the church of Our Lord are looking for political positions. Instead they informed him point-blank that there will be no possible negotiations without Nelson Mandela and the African National Congress.

In his first speech in freedom (only from internal prison while the rest of South Africa is a prison in itself), Walter Sisulu did not hesitate to reiterate his firm support for the Congress. He told them that without the release of Mandela and the unbanning of the A.N.C. there is no significant change in South Africa's repressive legislature. You might think that Sisulu had planned his answer with the four religious leaders mentioned above. Sisulu told those who gathered to welcome him that "the African National Congress and the people of South Africa do not judge people in terms of their color and that the prime purpose of the struggle is to create a democratic atmosphere whereby either a black man or woman, or a white man or woman can become a president of our beautiful motherland". He went on to reaffirm that the A.N.C. will negotiate only after the regime has lifted bans on people's organization, lifted the state of emergency, allowed the exiles to return and lifted restrictions on political activism. This is a clear message that de Klerk's tactics of infiltrating the Congress with the aim of breaking it apart have failed and will always fail.

Our P.A.C. comrade and friend, the most valuable freedom fighter, Masemola also steadfastly told de Klerk that they are not paper dolls and that his release meant increased lobbying and mobilizing the people for total liberation. We welcome him.

Now, to my American friends and members of the international community, this is time to step up pressure on the South African regime to abandon their costly (money, resources and lives) policy of aparatheid and afford the people of South Africa what they deserve, democracy (one person one vote, that's all). It is time for college students all over America to give us support by boycotting the companies that do business with the apartheid regime and thus pour huge amount of dollars in taxes to sustain apartheid. Such a company, which is within students' reach on college campuses is COCA-COLA. Do not allow yourselves to be derailed by the friends of apartheid who have gone out to purport that our diamond, the tireless pro-sanctions bishop Desmond Tutu, has softened up.

Let me inform you about the truth in this unwarranted painting of our bishop. "The Bishop urged sanctions on 2 April 1986 (p. 19; J. Hanlon & R. Omond) but did not specify what kind of sanctions he would welcome". The bishop was saying this as the moral leader of South African people and leader of the Anglican Church of South Africa. Bishop Tutu is not the leader of the WHOLE anti-apartheid movement as some people want you to believe. The South African anti-apartheid movement comprises the African National Congress, the Pan Africanist Congress, The Black Consciousness Movement, United Democratic Front, South African Indian Congress, Congress of South African Trade Unions, National Union of Mine Workers and whole Mass Democratic Movement. Our bishop is not a leader of a single one of these organizations, but he a leader in his own right and he support sanctions until the regime is willing to negotiate with the rightful representatives of our people.

I also want to inform you about the dirty tricks of Coca-Cola Company and express my outrage at the University of Massachusetts Administration's continued engagement with a company that funds the killing of black people of Southern Africa. I don't understand what civility means while, during its observance, the UMass community keeps on giving money to a company that discredits and perpetuates the myth of racial inferiority in South Africa. Just think about that. Isn't this an insult to the Civility Week that we are told to be enthusiastic about? Coca-Cola meagerly supports Bishop Tutu's endeavors to educate the BLACK CHILD who is neglected by what is supposed to be her government. This fund that Coke gives to the Bishop is approximately 8 to 9 percent of what it gives to the South African regime in taxes. Thus the regime is able to destroy the lives of black children, hence destroy the education that Coke claims to fund. With the money the regime collects from Coca-Cola Company, it is able to pay the Bantustan leaders such as Gatsha buthelezi, Holomisa, Sebe, Mopeli, Skosana and others to subjugate the blacks to inferior education in the homelands and thus create a cheap labor-pool that will included expoited unskilled workers in Coke businesses across South Africa regardless of whether they are run by black or white shareholders. The Black children in the homelands and townships are dying of hunger while white children are dying of overeating. These are the works of Coca-Cola that we drink even during Civility Week. How civil are we?

It is our prime hope that Americans will not be deceived by sugar-coated reforms that de Klerk thinks he is bringing. I reaffirm that apartheid cannot be reformed, it must be destroyed, and with your help we can force de Klerk to release our leader Nelson Mandela and all other political prisoners and unban our organizations so that we can build a democracy that will benefit not only people of South Africa and Africa at large, but also the people of the United States and the world in general.

Long live Albertina and Walter Sisulu, the mother and father of our people.

Rally in Boston: Not the reincarnation of Kent State

Last Wednesday, I left UMass by bus to protest the budget and the future of public education. The crisp air and brisk wind promised for a typical New England autumn day. But this day was anything but typical.

The ride to Boston was a quiet one, and as I exited from the bus, I saw the multitude of people milling on Boston Common, heading in a giant mass to that pinnacle of bureaucracy in Massachusetts, the Statehouse. When I arrived there, I was astounded by the thousands standing the Capitol's steps, all chanting "No more cuts," and carrying signs like "We will remember in November" and "Cut the crap—not the budget." They unified for one cause: our future.

It was an overwhelming experience. We all cheered for the men who made it to the roof and threw leaflets, as well as their shirts, as a sign of their cause, and what they were willing to give up for it.

Then the band arrived, and even those who hate marching bands were roused, hyper and ready for action. The crowd followed them back to the Common to hear people speak about what we were fighting for. The crowds were receptive and enthusiastic, and amazingly enough, they WERE orderly.

This is where my mass experience ends and my personal nightmare begins.

I left the speeches early, hoping to beat the crowd and maybe get a few words in at my representative's office. The plan was to meet in the place we separated when we were through. Easy enough, right? I wish.

Gayle Long

I went to my representative's office and spoke with his aide, who took my name and I voiced my concern. The staff in the office was cordial and pleasant, and I left reassured that something would be done.

Returning before my friend to the designated "meeting spot", I was accosted by three officers in full riot gear. They asked me my business, and I explained that I had been to rep's office and was meeting someone. They informed me that I was not. They called me a few choice words which I refuse to utter, let alone write, and by the back of my neck, one forced me out a back door, nowhere near where I was supposed to be.

Now, I am born and bred Western Massachusetts stock, and Boston is not exactly my neck of the woods. Also, I am not exactly a terrorist, nor do I look like Rambo. Yet, I was tossed from the Statehouse, alone, scared and definately shocked. Am I not a taxpayer? A voter? I help pay for these policemen's salary. I wasn't murdering anyone, stealing anything or selling drugs.

I stood dumbfounded in the rain, not sure what to do next. Little did I know that some of my fellow students were staging a sit-in on the Senate floor. VERY effective. These demonstration "professionals" forgot the rest of the protestors, amateurs like myself, who are not used to police harassment, name calling and force. All I was trying to do was save my education. I did not expect to be bullied.

Because of this rash, ineffective statement that accomplished nothing but four arrests, these politicans and the older generation is going to think one thing: The students in public universities across the state care only about being loud and destructive.

We were not there to be a reincarnated Kent State. We were there to be seen by our representatives so others would know that we care about our future. I went in hopes of insuring my future and the future of others in public education. Instead, the public sees trampled flower beds and radical students being arrested. They don't see the students that care.

In the guise of compassion

If someone you are close to suffers some loss or ill-fortune, you may go to comfort them, bearing flowers, or better, an open ear and set of arms. You are support.

A drought occurs and causes a famine in a country other than your own. If you have some sort of talent, for example musical abilities, you may gather with your cohorts and raise money to help the sufferers by creating and selling your songs. You are doing what you can to help.

Alise Harfield

If you see an elderly person having difficulty crossing a busy street, you instinctively lend them an arm.

Little thought goes into such deeds of kindness; as a human being, the instinct to help others usually comes naturally.

Unfortunately, if you're a politician, other driving forces interrupt instinct. In your efforts to help sufferers, your plan of aid (most likely devised by one of your "aides"), originates from an outright effort to flaunt leadership via what you want people to think is "compassion."

In lieu of flowers or words of encouragement, President Bush's instinct led him to San Francisco Friday with open arms — full of unspecific monetary promises to sufferers.

As he watched with gaping eyes and disbelief the workers knee deep in rubble excavate bodies, he could give them something.

Yes, he would help the losers of family, the broken bridges and destroyed land, but they'd have to wait and see just what. He couldn't decide just yet.

He brought with him from Washington not relief, but the undecided argument in Congress about how much monetary relief they deserved. In other words, he came empty handed. And empty headed.

Along for the ride was his ripe-for-the-occasion cohort in crime, the vice president, who brought his own support system — by arguing with the mayor of San Francisco. Seems the mayor couldn't see the point to their visit. The VP tried to tell him, by shouting why he was there — to help. Wasn't it obvious?

An act of true succor should never have to be questioned. An act of sincere support should not lead to argument.

Bad enough he had to, as president, feign compassion and interest on this protocol tarry.

But worse, he created more bad feelings in his five hours there than needed.

None of it was asked for.

But as long as he did go, here was his chance to be a good guy and lend a human hand. He certainly had the means.

Here was his chance to be a supporter. He blew it.

The survivors of the earthquake in San Francisco have plenty to be upset about already. There is no room for a limelight under which their president may stand and watch over them, spouting platitudes and incomplete support systems.

He might have waited for his Congress to make up their minds about a figure, then called San Francisco on the phone and quoted it.

Such an act would have been a lot more supportive.

Last Wednesday, about 20,000 people participated in a rally in Boston to show that further cuts in public higher education will not be tolerated.

Were you one of the 3,000 students from UMass who rallied? Did you feel the rally was a success or did you feel it failed in its purpose to show students as respectable and concerned individuals? Or was there anything that else that provoked feeling in you?

Send your opinion to the Editorial desk by Thursday, October 26, by 4p.m. No late submissions will be accepted.

Hearing the wrong message

The front pages of the newspapers gave us a raw deal last Thursday.

Here's the lead to the Springfield Union News' article about Wednesday's rally in Boston:

"Four men from Western Massachusetts were arrested yesterday as more than 15,000 students from state colleges and universities around the Commonwealth staged a tumultuous rally at the Statehouse to demand an end to public higher education budget cuts."

Bob Bobala

Four men were arrested while 15,000 hooligan students tried to destroy the Statehouse — that's what your average person in Western Massachusetts read about last week's rally.

The Boston Globe was no better. The lead to its story told about the arrests and the $20,000 in property damage (I'd like to know who gave them that figure) that the students caused. Both articles went in depth enough to say that we trampled the flower bed in front of the Statehouse.

All of New England thinks we're a bunch of rowdies who went to Boston just so we could release some violent frustration. Thank God the people from our landscape architecture department are going to patch up the Statehouse lawn. But we're still getting the shaft because the important story wasn't told: Over 15,000 students went to Boston because they care. They're worried about their education and their future. And they were angry that Massachusetts hadn't even been listening to them. But once the state's ears were opened, it began hearing the wrong things.

"They didn't help their cause," said Rep. Thomas W. McGee (D-Lynn) of the protesters.

Well, since you think I didn't help my cause, I've got a few things to say to you, Mr. McGee.

I was one of over thousands of people unable to get on one of the 43 buses that left UMass for Boston because they were filled. I crammed into a car with six others and got a stiff neck and a sore back on my way to the Statehouse. But, I didn't have it so bad. Cars from UMass passed us on the turnpike that were packed more than ours.

I'm sorry the flowers got crushed. Personally, I stepped over them. But it's difficult for 15,000 people (actually, that's a conservative estimate; the real number was probably closer to 20,000) to play hopscotch through a flower bed.

Why were you cutting through a flower bed? you want to know. Because the police locked the front door of the Statehouse, blocking our right to enter it. We had to go around to the side of the building to find another entrance so we could lobby our state representatives. And even that proved difficult as the rest of the of the building's doors were continually locked, then unlocked, at random.

There were four arrests and there was some shouting. I'll give you that, Rep. McGee. But your day could have been much worse. I wasn't arrested and I said probably three words all afternoon: "No more cuts." Out of 20,000, there were a few bad apples. And because of them we didn't help our cause?

If we didn't help our cause, then it's because people like you, Mr. McGee, are too narrow and negative-minded to see what happened before your very eyes.

Twenty thousand people came together to try and save the one thing they have in common: public higher education. Twenty thousand people realized that they are the future of this state. Twenty thousand people were in Boston to say that the future is in jeopardy. And you missed it, Rep. McGee. With the way the media reported the event last Thursday, you and too many other people in Massachusetts missed the point.

Ignorance from a lack of research

In response to Peter Sakura's editorial "What is Academic Freedom?" (Oct. 11), he really should do some research of his own before tearing apart this university's decision to accept military funding.

He stated that "It is immoral that 70 percent of all federal dollars allocated for research and development is eaten up by the Department of Defense." Last year the DOD gave $13 million to the university for research, only 6 million of that went to military research and 7 million went to the university to be used at its discretion. .

Also, the budget cuts to organizations, like the "libraries, University without Walls, Everywoman's center . . ." and more directly to the university, are due to the financial incompetence of our beloved governor, Michael Dukakis. If he didn't borrow $10 million/month to pay off his debts, there would be no budget cuts.

To his comment, "Does it make sense for UMass to plan a biological warfare attack, while 20 million Americans . . .are too poor to buy food," UMass is not planning a biological warfare attack! Last year, UMass laboratories were used to do research on a vaccine for the biological agent called anthrax. That's a vaccine, not further development of biological warfare.

In the same paragraph, he talks about doing "peace" research instead of "war" research — I'm sorry, but if he had looked at history from the first written records, there have always been conflicts and wars. If there was no conflict, we would be perfect human beings in a perfect society, and that would be utopia. We all know that a utopia can not exist.

Once again, he should do research before voicing his opinion on something he obviously knows nothing about. He might just make the wrong person angry.

ARTS & LIVING

The Irish fishermen deliver no blues at FAC

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Waterboys
Fine Arts Center
Saturday, Oct. 21

It took a while, but on a chilly autumn evening, the Waterboys turned on the heat and warmed a near capacity crowd with their Celtic-influenced sound.

After a truly bland and horrible set by the Irish band T.F. Much, the Waterboys opened with a strange choice, the ballad entitled "In Search of the Rose."

Lead singer Mike Scott, wearing his ever-present leather cap, seemed to be in one of his cold, artistic moods. And, although many of the songs were technically perfect, and contained beautiful flute or mandolin parts, the band showed nothing in the way of stage presence. It looked like it was going to be a very long night.

But when Scott got behind the piano for the anti-British "Old England," his fire and fury began to show through. The song took off and contained an explosive sax solo from Anthony Thistlethwaite.

The normally distant Scott began to warm to the crowd. By wisely keeping with mostly new material off of the their most spirited album, Fisherman's Blues, the seven-member band brought the crowd to their feet.

REVIEW

"And a Bang On the Ear" showed some good improvisation, and Thistlethwaite showed that he can do more than play sax and mandolin when he sang lead on the angry rocker "Good Morning Mr. Customs Man."

But it was "Whole of the Moon," the hit from the otherwise melancholy album This is the Sea, that whipped the crowd into a frenzy. The song was played at a much faster pace than on record, and Sharon Shannon performed one humdinger of an accordion solo.

After that, there was no stopping the Boys. They whipped off rocker after rocker each with that special Waterboy stamp of Steve Wickham's fiddle, Thistlethwaite's mandolin or Shannon's accordion. Many songs ended with Irish jigs or country hoedowns.

Gentle ballads were also sprinkled into the set, including Rodney Crowell's "The Song for the Life" and Van Morrison's "Sweet Thing."

"Fisherman's Blues," the title track and hit single from their current album, closed the set. Unfortunately, there was nothing left for the encore. "A Pagan Place," the title cut from their second album, is just not in the same league as their new material.

"A Room to Roam" ended the evening. The carnival-sounding tune kept the crowd swaying and demanding more. But they weren't going to get it. They had already received the best the Waterboys had to offer, and the only thing left to do was to return outside to the bitter autumn air.

Check out cheap chow and chugs at Charlie's

By JENNIFER DELANEY
Collegian Correspondent

Charlie's, located at 1 Pray St., in Amherst has some incredibly good, cheap food. From 9 p.m.-12 a.m. every Tuesday night students pour into Charlie's to enjoy a buffalo-wing feeding frenzy. The wings tend to vary from week to week, but they've become increasingly improved since the beginning of the semester. The wings are, of course, very spicy and nice and crispy. The best part is that they're only a dime a piece every Tuesday night.

Cheap Eats

I have been fortunate enough to visit Charlie's almost every night of the week. I have sampled the ten-cent potato skins on Sunday night, which are full of melted cheese and sour cream. The ten cent mozzarella sticks are yummy. They come with marinara sauce and are served on Monday night.

On Wednesday night, there's pizza for 25 cents a slice. The slices are large, thick-crust pizza. It's not the best you'll ever have, but it's passable. Nacho platters are the Wednesday night bargain. It's basic melted cheese with chips, salsa and sour cream. It comes in a large portion, so it's definitely worth it.

Charlie's also has a weekly drink special, and a monthly beer special. The atmosphere is comfortable and fun. It has two pool tables, a compact disc juke box and a few video games. The service is good, but can be slow on a Tuesday night due to the volume of business. Charlie's also has take-out for those of you who are under 21. Charlie's has wheelchair access, and is a great place to hang-out with your friends, have a few beers and eat some way cheap food.

Willis and Lloyd touch nerves in In Country

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Correspondent

In Country
Tower Theaters

In Country is a story of recovery. Bruce Willis plays Emmett, a country boy who was stripped of any livelihood by his experiences in Vietnam. In Kentucky, he leads a zombified existence, as his niece, Samantha, (Emily Lloyd) cares for him.

FILM REVIEW

Samantha's naivete in the backwards town shines through, and her boisterous personality instigates terror in her uncle's life. Her pleas to learn of the war that killed her daddy penetrate Emmett's memory of the terror he has been trying to forget.

Samantha's soul searching stirs up the town, but everyone tries to discourage her efforts, afraid of their own pain. Her determination wins out, but her glimpse of what the war was really like through the diary of her daddy, leaves her terrified and hating her father, who she had desperately wanted to know.

Emmett faces the pain he has suppressed since the war in an effort to make Sam realize that her father was a good person and not deserving of her hatred. He yells, "Who are you to sit there and say that about him?" He then spits out the terror he faced, and says, "After a while you feel afraid to care about anyone anymore, because if you do they'll just wind up dead." Emmett comes to life as he gives his fiery explanation for his dead soul, and lets Sam in on the mystery that everyone in the town had tried so hard to forget. Willis' portrayal is surprisingly restrained, and at no point slips into melodramatic.

This was a very different role for Willis, who formally played the shallow, yet hilarious, good time guy, David Addison in the hit series Moonlighting, and a macho hero in Die Hard.

Although Emmett is passive and rather lifeless, except when overcome by flashbacks of the war, Willis' comic personality occasionally shines through. The withdrawn Emmett is very sarcastic, a little bit off the wall, and as a result very funny. But in this role, Willis reaches down for something more, and comes up doing a very respectable job portraying his first major serious, realistic character.

Emily Lloyd, also does a great job in her portrayal of a rather innocent, yet inquisitive teenager. In fact, she pulls off her Kentucky accent better than anyone else in the film. Her body language was unconvincing, however, as her hand gestures, so common to the South, seemed unnatural.

The movie is very powerful, even heart wrenching. It's the perfect movie for a good cry.

Orton gets justice with Loot production

By ALISA HABIB
Collegian Correspondent

Loot
Rand Theater
Sat. Oct.21

In a Victorian bedroom, set with a coffin center stage, six members of the UMass Theater Department performed a fantastic version of Joe Orton's play Loot. Orton's comic, yet bitter social commentary, revolves around the funeral of a supposedly "respectable" woman, which coincides with the bank robbery carried out by her not-so-respectable son. The performers had the audience laughing constantly, as they skillfully attacked society's most sacred institutions with humor, and a definite edge of sarcasm.

Orton's first production of the play Loot was in 1965. Unfortunately, it was a complete flop, because the director failed to see the reality in which the characters were created. Loot is an indirect biography of Orton's life, and all of his bitter attitudes come out in his characters, as they assault the church, law enforcement and the various taboos associated with death. Orton was also living the forbidden life of a gay man in the 1950s and '60s. This world of hypocrisy is brought alive in Loot. The play shocked audiences, and it wasn't until its production in 1986 that it was finally appreciated and became a success.

In the UMass production, Kimberly Maloney, who played a fanatically religious nurse/whore, gave an incredibly witty performance. Her revealing expressions and vitality carried the plot.

Tony Maestrone was excellent in his portrayal of the son, Hal. He makes his entrance into the Victorian setting wearing purple socks and gyrating to his Walkman. His exaggerated actions, and not-so-subtle homosexual antics, had the audience laughing with him throughout the show. He gave the comedy a bizarre sense of reality, and jolted the story into the present.

Jeffrey Donovan played Dennis, Hal's mate and partner in crime, who aspires to marry the hypocritical nurse. He portrayed a lost, troubled, mischievous boy extremely well. Maestrone and Donovan worked well together, and gave a hilarious view of their predicament.

The detective Truscott was played by Scott Davidson. His jovial manner and forceful interrogations were the carrying forces of the play. He exerted his role with strength and vigor.

Charles Smith played the docile, God-loving husband of the deceased. He gave an extremely commendable supporting role.

The performers did a fabulous job integrating a complicated plot into a smooth performance. They worked well together, and built the audience up through tension and laughter.

Loot will be playing at the Rand Theater Oct. 25-28.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Changes in the economy will be helpful to you personally. Business success depends on your ability to break with tradition. Modernize everyday procedures. The return of an old love could complicate things in December. Make certain you know what you really want from romance and marriage. A questioning family member only wants you to be happy. A change of residence will increase your family's comfort next summer.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: country star Dwight Yoakum, TV host Johnny Carson, director Michael Crichton, soccer great Pele, golfer Chi Chi Rodriguez.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Novices find they are the secret of a senior employee's success. Teamwork is the key to future profits. Travel results in a career or romantic change. Watch your expenses.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A new companion brightens your outlook. You finally settle in at college or work. Family ties grow stronger. Pay more attention to details. Business and financial trends shift in your favor.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Have the courage of your convictions and this will be one of the best weeks ever. A health matter should not be neglected. Phone your doctor. Make Thanksgiving reservations now to avoid disappointment.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Keep your wits about you today and you will emerge on top. Revive an old plan, but apply new techniques. You have an important friend in your corner. Stick to your diet.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22): Close friends may be under strain, too. Do not ask them for special favors. Homemakers find new ways to supplement family income. If your ambition get in the way of progress, pull back.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22): An unforgettable adventure is under way. Do not miss one exciting moment! New business ties will require adjustment before you can declare them successful. Be conservative.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22): Go out of your way to do things efficiently. Passing a test will seal your good fortune. Even your love life gets a boost today. You may have finally found the right person!

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov.21): You will have to work hard for what you want. Others may try to show you up or undermine your position. Stick to facts and figures. Plan a relaxed, romantic evening.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21): A financial setback could put you under a strain. Try not to worry. A pet project goes smoothly. Communicate with someone who has seemed aloof in the past. Emphasize shared interests.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19): Watch what you do and say today. Careless behavior could provoke someone to lash out at you. Maintain a low profile. A letter brings welcome financial news.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18): New people and interests add glamour to your life. Make certain you are properly remunerated for your creative and artistic efforts. Get in touch with someone who has been on your mind.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20): Business travel brings satisfaction. Be willing to meet someone more than halfway to clinch a deal. Something that was lost resurfaces. A good day to sign contracts and agreements.

Budget cuts: how they hurt sports

• Varsity teams survive despite fiscal crunch

First in a series on the state budget cuts and how they are affecting athletics at the University of Massachusetts and other state schools.

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

The first round of cuts to the budget of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts have had an immediate and obvious impact on the University of Massachusetts.

Classes have been dropped, the number of faculty and staff has been reduced and enrollment is decreasing. But the hardest hit area of the University may be in the athletic department.

According to Dr. David C. Bischoff, dean of the School of Physical Education, all of the cutbacks in other areas of the University may contribute to a severe problem with sports programs.

"The major problem I see for athletics is that the response of the institution to the state budget cuts is to cut back the size of the student body," Bischoff said.

Currently, each undergraduate student is charged a $134 athletic fee per semester which helps fund the athletic program. "If they cut back the student body by 1,000, that's $134,000," Bischoff said.

Because of this, Bischoff feels that the athletic department is feeling the crunch more than other areas of the University.

"My sense is that it is totally unfair that the athletic department has been hit disproportionately hard," he said. "The way it looks now, in our worst case scenario, we'll be down $250,000."

Bischoff said that he made a presentation to the Board of Trustees, which agreed to form a sub-committee to discuss the cuts and their relevance to the athletic department.

"I presented them with the facts of what would happen if there was not a way to restore the money," Bischoff said. The board unanimously recommended to go to a sub-committee and recommended an increase in student fees to offset the drawn-down of funds from the state."

He said a presentation was then made to the Budgets and Finance Committee three weeks ago.

Despite all the problems with funding the department has faced, no sport has really felt the crunch. All 26 Division I varsity sports are still active and Bischoff doesn't foresee having to cut any of them.

"I don't want to back the hearse up to any particular sport, because once the word gets out, you have a self-fulfilling prophecy," Bischoff said. "We're caught in a dilemma if we're going to keep up with other [schools] that are economically good. It's a serious difficulty, but we have to put our best face on."

Mostly what has been cut are the extras such as supplies, and Bischoff and Athletic Director Frank McInerney, in deciding where the cuts would be, put most of the emphasis on support staff rather than throwing the burden on the teams.

"It would be short-sighted to let any program falter, because then it would be irrecoverable," Bischoff said.

So instead they went right to the administrative level. After Associate Athletic Director Dan Ghormley resigned during the summer to take a job with the ECAC, the decision was made to not replace him, thus saving some money there.

"Rather than cut sports, we decided to cut wherever possible. It's getting more complicated every day," Bischoff said. "But our fundamental purpose is to provide as many activities as possible."

That's not to say that all sports will be safe forever. With more cuts rumored to be on the way, there is always be the possibility that something will have to give.

"With the state draw-down, we can handle it without eliminating anything," Bischoff said. "But if a coach leaves, we may examine where that particular sport stands. But we won't make any severe inroads."

The athletic department has been fielding questions about how it can afford to fund the soon-to-be-built Mullins Convocation Center while other areas of the University are struggling to get by. But Bischoff says that money is reserved for use only by the University Building Authority on that particular project, and can't be used for anything else here (see related story, this page).

But that raises another subject, the possibility of bringing back ice hockey. The University hasn't had a varsity ice hockey program since 1979, primarily because the team had no place to play.

While playing in Division II, the Minutemen won the national championship in 1972, and several students have protested the fact that Massachusetts, one of the largest hockey-playing states in the country, doesn't have a hockey program at the state school.

But would bringing back hockey only add to the fiscal problems the department now faces?

"I don't think so," Bischoff said. "We have an arrangement with the alumni that we're not going to rob the scholarship level of any sport. The alumni agreed to fund the scholarship level until the program is self-funding. That takes a majority of the monkey of our backs."

But that takes care of just the scholarships. There still remains the question of a coach, uniforms and various other equipment and expenses.

"That's a problem, but I think by then we'll be able to find the money," Bischoff said.

Until then, the existing programs will struggle to stay above water, especially if more cuts are on the way.

"I think we can reasonably expect that if anyone asks for specific things, the answer will be 'no,'" Bischoff said. "But we made a lot of administrative decisions that no team would feel any specific impact. The cuts were made elsewhere and we've drawn on some reserve.

"We've made it through this year, but the real question is next year," he said. "We're still committed to showcasing our national caliber teams, and allocating our scholarship money for next year."

As for whether there is life after this season for some sports remains to be seen.

"I would really hate to see something like that happen," Bischoff said.

Next part: How the University of Massachusetts, a Division I school in all sports, feels the cuts as opposed to the University of Lowell (Division II) or Southeastern Massachusetts University (Division III), the other state universities in the Commonwealth.

> "My sense is that it is totally unfair that the athletic department has been hit disproportionately hard."
> – Dr. David Bischoff, dean of the School of Physical Education

• Arena not taking funds from rest of University

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

One of the common arguments when budget cuts are discussed is that the school is able to afford a new convocation center and arena at the expense of faculty, classes, etc.

Students see that the barns on Commonwealth Ave. on the south side of campus, where the Mullins Convocation Center is scheduled to be built, are still standing and assume that the building process hasn't started yet.

But according to Dr. David C. Bischoff, dean of the School of Physical Education, money has already been committed to the project although ground-breaking has yet to begin.

Bischoff added there is no alternative to the arena as far as the University of Massachusetts is concerned. If UMass doesn't get the arena, it gets nothing.

"It's not a matter of we're going to get something else," Bischoff said. "It's either [the arena] or nothing. The money wouldn't come to the University, it would go back to the state."

According to Bischoff, the money from the state has already been committed in the form of a check to the University Building Authority, which is overseeing the entire project. The Building Authority in turn has sold bonds to individuals, which in effect makes the money untouchable.

"The scenario was that this would be a Building Authority building. But in order to build it and save students the fee aspect of it, we made the following arrangement," Bischoff said. "The state gave us half the money [$25 million], would write a check and we would cash it. The Building Authority would sell bonds and they would use the money the state appropriated to pay the bond holders.

"The money is committed, the whole thing is a done deal," he added. "I don't think it's possible to get out, and even if we did, the University wouldn't get the money."

Part of the debate has been over what role yearly student fees will play in the funding of the arena. Fees will help to fund the building, but will not kick in until the building is actually complete, so that current students will not be paying for a building they may never use.

The decision to build the arena was made before the current budget crisis hit, Bischoff said. Therefore, the University would have been foolish to not accept the money.

"It's not a matter of misplaced priorities," Bischoff said. "Clearly we need polymer centers and classroom buildings, but this was put together at a time when the situation was right."

Bischoff stressed that the building would not merely be an athletic facility, but one that the entire University could use and enjoy, and also use to bring in added revenue.

"I think this is a long-term boon for the institution," he said. "It would be a comprehensive facility for the campus, with stage productions, conferences and graduation."

The building, which will include a 10,000-seat arena, 1,200-seat ice rink, offices, locker rooms and handball and squash courts, is scheduled to be completed in 1993.

When finished, it will be the home of the University of Massachusetts basketball teams, which currently play in the 4,024-seat Curry Hicks Cage, and possibly a men's ice hockey team.

Directions: For the following question, select the best answer choice provided.

1. Only if we know human nature can we know the nature of the true good for human beings. And only if we know the nature of the true good for human beings can we arrive at an idea of the truly just society. Thus, if we know human nature and the nature of the good for human beings, we can arrive at an idea of the truly just society.

Which of the following points out a potential flaw in the reasoning above?

(A) What one human being thinks is good might well be something that another human being thinks is not good.
(B) Many people have arrived at ideas of the just society, and all of them have been slightly different.
(C) It is quite possible to know human nature without in any way being able to know what is the good for human beings.
(D) Philosophers have argued for centuries over what specifically defines human nature, without coming to a general agreement.
(E) Arriving at an idea of the just society may require more than knowledge of human nature and knowledge of the good for human beings.

Delaware took a 14-0 lead at the half after Vergantino hit split end John Gilman from 33 yards out for a score. The Blue Hens were getting a majority of their offense from fullback Darryl Brantley, who took advantage of the defensive line and some missed tackles to run up 151 yards on the ground.

"He's the guy that broke our backs," Reid said. "He broke some tackles and made some nice runs."

UMass looked poised to finally strike in the third quarter. After pinning Delaware deep and forcing a punt, the Minutemen took over at the Hen 47 and went on the move. A 20-yard pass from Wilkos to Chip Mitchell (10 catches, 155 yards) brought them to the 16, but turned out to be a more significant play. Wilkos was hit after releasing the ball and had to come out of the game with his shoulder injury.

Sophomore Tom Fasano took over behind center and continued the drive, but it stalled when he missed open tailback Steve Olson (making his first appearance of the year after a stomach injury) on fourth down from the 10.

Things could have been different in a couple of ways had UMass scored there. On the next drive, junior Paul Tornatore took over at QB and, shifting the offensive gears to his drop-back style, steadily moved UMass to its first score of the day, a 4-yard roll-out toss to Mike Tobin six seconds into the final quarter.

The missed conversion on a fake kick loomed large until Vergantino found Darrin Ferrell four plays later from 51 yards out to jack the lead up to 21-6.

Behind Tornatore, the Minutemen moved as well as they had all day. The strategy wasn't a secret, it was strictly pass in trying to make up the deficit, and Tornatore was successful. His 25-yard strike to Mitchell with 5:34 remaining and subsequent two-point toss to Tobin moved UMass into position, down 21-14.

But Delaware got a pair of big third-down conversions on Vergantino passes and ran out the remaining clock.

In his collegiate debut, Tornatore connected on 13 of 17 passes for 187 yards and two touchdowns in little over a quarter's worth of work. Which leaves quite the dilemma for Reid to mull over, choosing Wilkos or Tornatore for next Saturday's game at Northeastern.

The beginning of the second half saw UMass escaping a bullet as the Tribe's leading scorer, Rebecca Wakefield, found an open Jenn Tepper streaking down the right side. Fortunately, senior keeper Mary Curtis won the one-on-one encounter, as Tepper's kick was not only over Curtis' dive, but also wide left of the net.

Then in a matter of minutes, Eynard, the team's third-leading point-getter, went down with an ankle injury after pursuing a stray ball. She was removed for the rest of the game, and Rudy felt it impacted his offense.

"We were definitely hurt by the absence of Eynard and [Lisa] Mickelson," Rudy said. "That took a lot from us."

Mickelson has been hampered by a hip injury all year, and Rudy rested her for before the tournament in hopes that she would be healthy enough to perform at full strength. But after playing State, the talented midfielder was in no shape to play.

Rudy was forced to go with a lineup that was hurting in terms of speed after losing Eynard, but her replacement, Margie Jaede did quite admirably. The junior, listed as a defender, hustled in the Tribe end and pressured the backs.

She was looking like the hero in the NC State game, scoring two goals to propel UMass to a 2-0 lead but the Reds turned flatter than a warm beer, giving up two goals after the Pack lost their best player on the field — Linda Hamilton.

So, here's the situation: State is down 2-0 in the second half without Hamilton and Charmaine Hooper, their goal-scoring maniac who had to sit out because of an earlier red card violation.

So, what else does State do but score two goals out of the blue.

UMass perhaps had grown complacent, laxing off on defense, and State was there to catch the sleeping giant offguard.

Both goals were against a defense that lacked the intensity shown in the first half. First, Kelly Keranan scored right after Hamilton went down. Okay, there's still a 2-1 lead right?

Wrong, not for long. The Pack scrapped in their attack end, stole the ball and got it back out in the middle. There Hamilton, who returned after a great deal of pain, found Meghan Owings cutting to the net. The freshman halfback gained control of the pass, aimed and fired a rocket that was still rising when it swooshed past keeper Skye Eddy.

Colgate's sophomore Jeff Standish assisted sophomore Doug Reffue with 16 minutes left in regulation. Four minutes later both UMass' sophomore Darren Stone and Reffue were ejected from the game during a scramble for possession. The 1-1 tie brought the teams into overtime.

"In overtime, they were able to break our defense in the midfield," Martin said. McEvoy fed a long cross to sophomore Ray Cunha, who was unmarked and thus scored with 10 minutes left in the second half of overtime.

"Obviously we're very satified with the win because it was a team win," said Martin. "I'm optimistic because the last four games we've gone 3-0-1. You never know what can happen in the Atlantic 10 — it's strange that way."

In the first game it looked like Yale would walk away with the match easily as it jumped out to a quick 9-3 lead, taking advantage of numerous UMass errors. As their defense awoke with superb digs by Santiago and Richardson, the Minutewomen fought back with seven unanswered points to take the lead, 10-9.

UMass led, 14-12, but Yale tied it at 14-14. A critical block by UM's middle hitter Rachel Bredemeier kept the Minutewomen alive. Yale got the serve back though, allowing junior outside hitter Kathy Mejia to end the game with a kill.

The second game was all Yale as the Minutewomen fell apart, committing several errors and some rookie mistakes. Yale's Mejia and Kristina Kliszewski, as they have all season, led their team in kills with 11 and eight, respectively, for the match.

"Kliszewski did some damage, but I thought she would do a lot more. The second game was typical of our season," Ford said.

In the third game of the match, UMass played their best, staying close until the end, but again came up short.

The jinx continues: Delaware wins, 21-14

UMass drops 14th straight to Blue Hens; injury bug bites Wilkos and Bledsoe

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Folks around New England have been asking for 71 years, "Will the Red Sox ever win the World Series again?"

Around campus, the question is, "Will the University of Massachusetts football team ever beat Delaware?"

The Minutemen met Delaware for the 14th time Saturday at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium. And, for the 14th time, the Blue Hens came away with the win, 21-14, in a game that was as sloppy as the rain-soaked field it was played on.

Though not done with the dramatics of recent heartbreaks (read: last year's 10-7 loss on a goal-line fumble in the last minute), the Minutemen coughed up more than their share of chances to finally end what has been termed "The Delaware Jinx."

Injuries, turnovers, mud . . . you name it, and it played a factor in dropping the Minutemen to 2-4-1 overall and 1-4 in the YanCon. Delaware snapped a three-game losing streak to improve to 4-3 and 3-2.

"We weren't sharp," said UMass coach Jim Reid. "We didn't do a real good job. We've got to execute and we can't fumble."

For the record, the Minutemen fumbled the ball four times and lost them all. One, on their own 1-yard line, set up Delaware's first score, a 1-yard sneak by freshman quarterback Bill Vergantino early in the second quarter.

UMass had just stopped Delaware on fourth-and-inches to take over possession, but proceeded to give it right back.

"We fumbled on the 1-yard line, and there's absolutely no excuse for that," Reid said. "It was the same play as the fumble last year [against Delaware]."

Even when they could hold on, the Minutemen were having trouble penetrating Blue Hen territory. Not until the last play of the first half did UMass get inside the Delaware 30.

Part of the reasoning was the loss of tailback Jerome Bledsoe on the first drive of the game. Bledsoe was pulled down from behind and fumbled the ball away to Delaware. In the process, he injured his quadricep (thigh) muscle and was on crutches after the game.

With Bledsoe missing, the UMass offense sputtered on the ground, gaining only 38 yards for the game. That forced a lot of pressure on the passing game, which responded despite having quarterback Gary Wilkos go down in the third quarter with a bruised shoulder.

Men's soccer squeezes Colgate in overtime, 2-1

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

It seems the cloud of losses on the road have been cleared up and the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team couldn't be more pleased. The game this weekend has been just one of three consecutive victories, Saturday's being against Colgate University, 2-1 in overtime.

"We didn't play our best, but it's good to know that even when we didn't play our best we still could win," said assistant coach John Martin. "Due in part the relaxed referees, the game became a foul war.

"We were in better shape, a physically stronger team," Martin said. "We absolutely dominated play during the game. It was a physical game and that's why we won." The shots on goal comprised of 24 for UMass and 12 for Colgate.

Twenty minutes into the first half, junior Peter McEvoy beat his man and ran down the left flank, passing to junior Carl Hanks who scrambled in the box. McEvoy tapped the ball to sophomore Brett Anthony, who scored the goal. Senior Louis Hollmeyer broke his nose during the first half play — the third member to break his nose this season. The score remained 1-0 at the half.

"We had a lot of chances to win early, but we weren't able to capitalize," said Martin. "Colgate was lucky we didn't score more goals."

Volleyball team spiked by Yale, Rhode Island

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team's home winning streak came to an end this weekend, as it was swept by Yale University on Friday and the University of Rhode Island Saturday at Totman Gym.

A complete turnaround from Friday's match against Yale, the Minutewomen (2-16) couldn't do anything against URI (now in second place in the Atlantic 10 Conference) in losing 15-2, 15-4, 15-5. Even with great games from captain Nancy Sullivan and senior outside hitter Julieta Santiago, the Minutewomen didn't have enough to beat the WRams.

"We didn't pass or hit well at all," said UMass coach Carol Ford. "Rhode Island didn't play as well as they could and we had a perfect opportunity because of that. They still deserve to be in second place."

URI's Michelle Drerup was a main reason for some of UM's difficulties. With her deadly jump serve, Drerup had a total of five service aces for the match.

"We had a lot of trouble with that jump serve," Ford said.

Even though they lost (16-14, 15-2, 15-11), UMass' play was much better against Yale. After being dominated in the second game, the Minutewomen, down 5-2 in the third, rallied to tie the game 8-8 with intense play by Sullivan and freshman outside hitter Susan Richardson. UMass pulled into the lead, 10-8, but that's the best it could do as Yale came back with six unanswered points to virtually put away the match.

"I knew Yale would be strong coming in," Ford said. "We played up to our potential though, and I'm happy with our overall performance."

Field hockey canceled again

Because of last week's heavy rains which left Totman Field in poor condition, the University of Massachusetts field hockey game against Rhode Island Saturday was postponed.

The Minutewomen will attempt to make up this crucial Atlantic 10 game, as well as last Thursday's rainout at Springfield College, at a later date.

Women's soccer trip a "tying" experience

By RICK SETO

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Talk about two very different games with the same outcome.

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team played its hearts out yesterday, fighting all kinds of adversity, but couldn't stick one in to come out of the William and Mary Tournament with at least one win. And the day before, the Reds (10-2-4) uncharacteristically blew a two-goal lead.

In any case, the Reds didn't hurt their position nationally or regionally with a 2-2 tie against seventh-ranked North Carolina State Saturday, followed by another double-overtime deadlock against fifth-ranked William and Mary.

"Against teams rated ahead of us, I think we had the better of both days, but we couldn't win," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "We outplayed them on their own field, so I'm pretty pleased."

Both the Reds and the Indians used a swarming defense to turn aside all of the other teams' shots, and both had terrific battles in the midfield for possession of the ball.

In the two 15-minute overtime sessions, it was UMass which applied most of the pressure, with William and Mary limited to counter-attacking.

The Reds could not, however, convert on some of their better chances — corner kicks and direct kicks.

In the first half, the Tribe's strategy to pressure the UMass backs worked for a while, but UMass soon adjusted, snapping into a hip-hop rhythm.

Balls were now being run through the defense, instead of being passed for. W & M's defense stifled any combination plays in the midfield, but players like Becky Bonzano anq Kim Eynard pushed forward and created their own offense.

Prof says: Racism is a violent act

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

An economics professor urged students to notice racism and to act on it, not because they feel guilty, but because racism is an act of violence.

"I think guilt is the worst reason to do anything [about racism,]" Samuel Bowles, an economics professor at the University of Massachusetts said yesterday during his lecture, "Political Economy of Racism." "If there is something evil and there is something that can be done about it and isn't, that is evil too," he said.

Bowles lectured to his Political Economy class in an effort to reach students on the problems of racism, in addition to Civility Week activities.

Focusing on similarities between past and present racist acts in the United States, Bowles said he hopes to alert all students to the problems of racism.

"In order to decide what to do about racism, we have to figure out what it is and why it continues," he said.

Bowles said racial prejudice consists of one racial group's unfavorable or stereotypical opinions about another.

He said this has translated historically as Whites' negative attitudes toward people of color.

Faculty recruitment limited by state budget

From The Associated Press

BOSTON — Recruiting faculty members has become more difficult for public colleges and universities in Massachusetts because of budget cuts and the state's fiscal crunch, according to college officials.

The state could see educational standards drop if top faculty members are lost to other states while federal funds and research contracts could be sacrificed if researchers and grant-writers choose to work elsewhere.

And, making matters worse, a shortage of faculty is expected throughout the country in the 1990s.

"The word is out that Massachusetts is not a good place to come to," Sherry Penney, chancellor of the University of Massachusetts at Boston, told The Boston Globe.

She said several people who had accepted jobs earlier this year backed out after hearing of budget cuts.

The state's higher education budget this year is $691.3 million, compared with $735 million two years ago.

The latest cuts have led to staff being laid off, classes canceled and enrollments curtailed.

"Once you have layoffs, it's almost impossible to attract qualified candidates," said Roger Van Winkle, president of Massachusetts Bay Community College and head of the Council of Community College Presidents.

Penney said some senior faculty members don't want to recruit because they don't think they can praise the system when they are thinking of looking for other jobs.

"There's no question it's a dynamic that will work against the Massachusetts system," said Adrian Tinsley, president of Bridgewater State College.

Word of financial problems spread quickly, he said, through such publications as The Chronicle of Higher Education, which had a story this month on the Massachusetts budget crisis.

Tinsley, who has held education posts in Maryland, Michigan, Minnesota and New Jersey, recently was recruited by Massachusetts.

"I have never seen such a precipitous loss of public funds for higher education, even in the late '70s in Michigan when there was downturn in the auto industry," he said.

Education officials also are concerned that if overall faculty recruitment is slow, minority faculty recruitment will be off, raising the possibility of a primarily White faculty teaching an increasingly diverse student body.

Paul E. Tsongas, chairman of the Board of Regents of Higher Education, sees hope. Massachusetts attracts faculty because of leading private colleges and universities and its quality of life, he said.

"There's going to be a one- or two-year rut, but the fact is, people still want to live in Massachusetts," he said.

"The vulnerability of our best faculty and presidents is my greatest fear."

Attorney: Police irresponsible at 1986 Southwest incident

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The attorney for a former Black student beaten in 1986 said yesterday that University of Massachusetts officials should have been prepared for a violent atmosphere and provided adequate security after the last game of the 1986 World Series.

Meade G. Burrows, a Northampton attorney representing Yancy Robinson, said large crowds of intoxicated students gathered in the Southwest Residential Area after previous World Series games.

"The situation was reasonably foreseeable and they [public safety officials] failed to prevent the escalation of violence which resulted in the beating of the plaintiff," he said.

Court documents stated Robinson filed a claim of state negligence in Sept. 1987, but the the state failed to deliver an adequate settlement with Robinson during the time allotted. Robinson asked for at least $25,000 for legal fees and a $500,000 settlement for relief and damages.

Friday, Burrows filed companion suits in Hampshire Superior Court against the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and the six White men who allegedly beat Robinson.

The suit stems from violence that began in Southwest after the final game of the 1986 World Series. Ten students were injured during the brawl investigators said was racially motivated.

In the suit against Massachusetts Burrows said, the "defendant is liable for the negligence of its agents and employees in failing to provide reasonably adequate security."

Bay area gets moving

Commuters begin a return to normalcy

By ROBERT DVORCHAK

SAN FRANCISCO — A flotilla of ferries and extra trains helped keep rain-soaked traffic moving today, but only at bumper-to-bumper pace. Rescuers halted the search for survivors at an earthquake-flattened freeway when the rubble became too unstable.

And hospital officials said today survivor Buck Helm's condition had improved. Doctors said he was no longer in pain, and they were hopeful the longshoreman pulled from the freeway rubble wouldn't have permanent kidney disfunction.

"In the next 24 to 48 hours, if he continues the way he is now, he will be out of the woods," Dr. Floyd Huen said.

At the Interstate 880 disaster in Oakland, officials said today crews were going to dismantle one off-ramp that was near collapsing.

"It is a dangerous operation," said Kyle Nelson, a spokesman for the California Department of Transportation.

Gale warnings were posted early today, rain was heavy in some areas and one ferry was turned back because of rough waters on the San Francisco Bay, authorities said. The Union Ferry Building, the terminus of all ferries when they reach San Francisco, was closed because of high waves and the boats were diverted to a pier about a mile away.

But most made it to work without major problems, despite predictions of commuter gridlock on the first full workday since the earthquake closed crucial freeways and broke a section of the vital Bay Bridge linking San Francisco and Oakland.

Highway 101 was a sea of lights starting shortly after 5 a.m. and the Golden Gate Bridge was bumper-to bumper but moving.

UMass students to march against apartheid

By DAN BERTHIAUME
Collegian Correspondent

University of Massachusetts students will be marching against apartheid today in a show of protest against the political, economic and social opprression of Black South Africans by the White minority government.

Apartheid, meaning apartness or separation, is the cornerstone of the South African government's policies that allow the country's six million Whites to dominate the 24 million Blacks who live there.

The marchers will begin at the New Africa House at 11:30 a.m. and proceed to the Student Union steps, where there will be several speeches by students, said Kim Davis, a member of the Black Mass Communications Project, which is co-sponsoring the rally with the Iota Theta Phi fraternity.

"We thought it would be a good idea to do something to show that some students do not support what's going on in South Africa," Davis said.

There is presently a group on campus devoted to informing the community about the South African situation — the Free South Africa Coalition, which was formed last spring.

FreeSAC members said the recent media hype concerning the release of some political prisoners by new South African president F.W. de Klerk was unwarranted, because it only symbolizes cosmetic change in South Africa.

"It means nothing because they shouldn't have been there in the first place," said FreeSAC member Menzi Methwecu, a South African.

"De Klerk must release all political prisoners, unbend the A.N.C. [African National Congress] and other Black action groups, and allow everyone to vote as soon as possible. De Klerk right now is just playing tricks, buying time," said Sekhulumi Ntsoaole, another member.

Member Jeremy Levinson said that most of South Africa's international loans are due for renewal this fall, and he feels the prisoner releases are to look good for the lenders.

"De Klerk picked a funny time to start releasing prisoners," Levinson said.

One of FreeSAC's major goals is to boycott Coca-Cola products on campus.

"Coca-Cola deals with the South African government despite calls for sanctions," said Ntsoaole. "Although Coca-Cola gives money to the educational efforts of (South African Archbishop) Desmond Tutu, it only amounts to 8-9 percent of the tax money they give to the South African government. The government uses this money to continue oppressing Blacks."

Ntsoaole also said the group would like Coke machines closed on campus at least during Civility Week because "there is nothing very civil about apartheid."

FreeSAC's long-term goal is to join with other anti-apartheid groups on campus and form a unified campus coalition.

Dredging cleans Puffer's

Four-year project removes silt from pond

By JOEL SOLOMON
Collegian Staff

If you're thinking of taking advantage of this week's mild weather by taking a dip in Puffer's Pond in Amherst, think again.

A dredging process has been going on since mid-September, said Mary Donnahue-Klein, assistant conservation director of Amherst.

The project, started four years ago, had been undertaken to remove years of accumulated silt from the bottom of the pond, she said.

The increased sediment has resulted in increased plant growth which can eventually take over the pond. Further plant growth results in eutrophication and growth of pond lilies, which decreases the amount of oxygen.

Such things have occurred at Leverett Pond, Leverett.

Increased upstream development has caused increased runoff through Cushman Brook and other various brooks and streams, Donnahue-Klein said. The pond has been drained in order to keep the environmental impact to a minimum and to "prevent extreme damage to the quality of the pond," she said.

Cushman Brook has been channeled around the dredging area to maintain the stream's balance. In addition, repairs to the dam on the west end of the pond are underway.

The Clean Lakes Program, a state program funded through the Department of Environmental Protection to provide financial assistance to cities and towns throughout Massachusetts, is providing assistance. The dredging process is expected to be completed by early November and the pond will be filled to its normal level.

'Students' University' rally tomorrow

By SARAH DEMASTER
and NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

The message has been spray-painted on walkways across the University of Massachusetts for weeks: "October 25, Day of Action."

The UMass organization, People for a Socially Responsible University, has set aside this date to rally for a "Students' University," said Jonathon Leavitt, a PSRU member.

"The fundamental issue is the control of the University," he said. "The control now is not in the hands of people who the University is set up to educate."

He added, "The University is structurally and economically in the hands of corporations and the military."

Randy Viscio, also a member of PSRU, said a Students' University would be one in which students, not administration, would make decisions about tuition, financial aid, faculty hiring, and research policies.

He said the Day of Action is part of a nationwide effort which includes student organizations at Rutgers University, the State Universities of New York at Stoneybrook and Buffalo, UMass-Boston, and Harvard University, among others.

Viscio said the PSRU is looking for a military-economic conversion, in which the University would seek funding from civilian-based resources, then phase out some amount of Department of Defense funding.

"We don't want people to lose their jobs, or not do research, he said. "We want them to be able to do a broader base of research."

However, Viscio said the rally will also address racism, budget cuts, and sexism.

"PSRU just happens to be the group that's organizing it," he said.

Leavitt said issues such as racism and sexism are directly linked to the issue of control at the University.

"All problems on campus, whether it's racism, lack of funding, or lack of control over funding, could all be effectively dealt with if [students] had control over the University," he said.

He said because students pay for their education, the University is supposed to serve the needs of the students, and to some degree, the needs of the faculty.

"There are presently no effective channels for change stemming from student initiatives on campus," he said. "We are in the position where the only way we can initiate change is take direct action."

He added, "[PSRU] is an offensive group, not a defensive group."

The rally will take place at 11:30 a.m. on the Student Union Steps.

Owen Broadhurst, a PSRU member as well, said the organization hopes the administration will engage in civil discussion on Wednesday, as opposed to arresting students, as they did in last semester's takeover of the Graduate Research Center.

Broadhurst said PSRU is not ruling out a building takeover Wednesday, because "the University hasn't been willing to talk to us in the past."

The second count claims UMass officials failed to train and adequately supervise the safety force. Chancellor Joseph Duffey, Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson, and former Director of Public Safety Gerald O'Neil are listed as defendants.

The third count charges that the three UMass officials denined Robinson equal rights. He is asking for interest, costs and attorneys fees from the state and UMass officials. By law, lawyers cannot ask for specific monetary damages in civil suits.

The second suit claims Kirk Friedman, Chesley Hayman, Christopher Johnson and Timothy Nye violated Robinson's civil rights. The suit also charges them with assault and battery and intentional infliction of emotional distress. Joseph Nelson and Michael Kowalski were also charged with violating Robinson's civil rights and assault and battery. The suit demands damages and cost of litigation, resonable attorneys fees and interest.

Burrows said Robinson's medical treatment costs amounted to $515 and he has received no mental health treatment, Burrows said.

Madson said he has asked Sidney Myers, a University lawyer, to examine the suit. Myers was unavailable for comment.

Burrows said a criminal court can order restitution for medical bills or lost wages, but has no authority to award compensatory damages.

"If a jury finds a significant violation of civil rights it can award substantial damages — even in absence of a severe physical injury," he said.

Club offers real prizes for mock investments

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Has Tim DeMello got a deal for you.

DeMello is the creator of the AT&T Collegiate Investment Challenge, and for $49.95, you could win $25,000 and a trip for two to the Bahamas. All you need to know is how to play the stock market.

In the game, entrants are given $500,000 in play money. People then use that money to buy and sell any of the more than 5,000 publicly traded stocks. At the end of four months, the person with the most money wins.

"The Challenge opens the world of financial markets to students, and the knowledge they gain can open new opportunities for them when they graduate and begin careers," DeMello said.

At UMass, the event is sponsored by the Finance Investment Club. Last year, UMass came in eighth out of the almost 900 schools that entered DeMello's Wall Street game.

The Finance Investment Club does more than play games. For a small membership fee of $5, and a minimum investment fee of $10, students can buy real stocks.

Ned Draper, president of the club and an operations management senior, explained how the club works. "We, as a club, present and vote on investments we make with our own money," he said.

Draper said the club has lost money in the past, but is currently beginning to thrive. "In the past, they got into stuff that was kind of obscure. Now we're into stocks that you can read in the paper."

The club currently boasts an active membership of over 60 people, and investments that total more than $3,000.

Research officer Stephen Keene is responsible for looking into stocks and advising the club which stocks to invest in. Draper credits him and the other officers for the recent successes of the club. "All our officers are really into it. We've got a good crew this year," he said.

Draper stressed that the club is open to all students, not just finance majors. "We run more of an educational thing," he said. "We have a lot of people in the club who can't even read the Wall Street Journal. But it's important, because at some point in your life you will have to make investments."

■ racism

UMass has earned a reputation on the East Coast for being a hotbed of such attitudes, because of incidents such as the beating of UMass student Yancy Robinson after the 1986 World Series, he said.

"A reputation like this has not been seen since 'Old Miss,' the University of Mississippi," he said.

Bowles said that acts of racial violence are not the only evidence of racism.

He said the recent effort to make English the only approved language in the United States can be considered racist, because it leads people to ignore the diversity of the United States, and view it as a homogeneous nation.

Bowles said while late 19th century reconstruction and the Civil Rights Movement of the 1960s spelled an "American Enlightenment" in civil liberties, the 1980s have shown signs of a downslide in economic and employment equality for groups who have traditionally experienced discrimination.

"If you think progress is just slow, and you're waiting, things are only getting worse," he said.

He said the forces of capitalism may effect racial economic equality.

He created a scenario in which factory owners hired Black workers because they would work for cheaper wages. This in turn would force other factory owners to hire Black workers to reduce their costs. As more Blacks were hired, the demand for cheaper labor would increase, and eventually their wages would rise, as workers became scarce, he said.

He said however that this theory is unrealistic, because racism is social, not just economical.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Maligning our cause

We are appalled at the lack of consideration given to the 15,000 students at last week's rally by the newspapers, wire services and state representatives. Public higher education is 6 percent of the state's budget. Yet 38 percent of the latest cut — the fifth in two years — is from higher education.

That's not fair.

Paul Tsongas, chairman of the Board of Regents, said he didn't realize until the rally that students cared about higher education. We are surprised that Tsongas failed to remember the dozens of rallies at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, and the scores of other protests at the 28 other public colleges and universities. Unfortunately, the newspapers and the Associated Press published that statement without drawing a similar conclusion.

The average reader may have been unaware of those rallies, and the legislators don't seem to care, but now all will remember Tsongas' remark.

That's not fair.

The Boston Globe ran an excellent article in September that outlined the problems the budget cuts, but last Friday, took an unfortunate, and uninformed anti-public higher education stance.

Students were criticized for shouting "no more cuts" while not asking for tax increases or tuition hikes. How did the newspapers draw this conclusion? Is it possible they spoke to one or two students, then said that opinion reflected the views of all 15,000? If that's what they did, it's irresponsible journalism. Yet no one from the newspapers seems upset.

That's not fair.

We believe everyone should write to representatives, newspapers and the wire services. Include this editorial and a note of your own, and hopefully someone will understand this is for real. We've been treated unfairly for too long.

But where is George now?

. . . but where was George?

This was the popular line used by the democrats after their 1988 convention, maligning George Bush for his virtual invisibility during the Iran-Contra scandal of the Reagan administration. They said that he was not there during any crisis, or if he was, he was incognito and voiceless.

Meredith O'Brien

The democrats certainly got their faces smeared when Michael Dukakis suffered a crushing defeat in the presidential election. You didn't hear them asking "Where's George?" after that.

But now there is an echo in those halls of the White House and Capital Hill . . .

Where IS George . . .

Well, after nearly eight months of being the top American executive, George has been many places. He's been to China, to Poland, to South Carolina, to San Francisco and Kennebunkport too.

. . . but where is George now?

George is mighty busy these days. He is serving his role as the representative of the American people.

Actually, George has spent a great quantity of his time as president crusading to save Old Glory, that marvelous symbol of Americana, that sacred banner, that piece of inanimate cloth.

George certainly hasn't been an advocate for Civil Rights — allowing the Supreme Court decisions to gradually erode the already crumbling foundations of the movement.

He certainly hasn't been an advocate for the women of this country — pushing for abortion rights to be nullified. Meanwhile, his other republican cronies are clamoring for a change in the party platform so they won't be voted out of office by the angry constituents who vehemently support the right to an abortion.

George certainly hasn't been there for the poor women of this country who are victims of rape or incest. He says that if they get pregnant — tough. They get to carry the baby to term, every day of those long nine months toting a constant reminder of their pain and suffering.

He certainly hasn't been there for those Chinese students who live in fear in this country because their homeland is under an intellectual siege. While they are here, they supposedly enjoy the same freedoms as everybody else — including the freedom of speech. How many U.S. citizens do you know who don't speak out against our government for fear of having their families murdered?

George claimed he (his official executive and military power), wasn't there for the Panamanians during the attempted coup to overthrow the military strongman Manuel Noriega. But then he was . . . well, kind of, saying only "This was a collective screw-up." Most recently, he elaborated on this "screw-up" by pointing toward Congress claiming that their micromanagement in defense strategy was to blame. I'll bet Congress was glad he was there for them!

He was partially there for the victims of Hurricane Hugo and the massive Bay Area earthquake. He said he was sorry and helped them further the system of red tape. Indeed, federal monetary aide will be coming to these sites of natural disaster, but in the form of bureaucracy not the immediate help that the suddenly homeless and foodless victims need.

But, I must admit, George has been there for at least some of our citizens: the bankrupt bank owners, the rich (with the rejection of the capital gains tax), pro-lifers and proud flag waving veterans.

George has been nowhere. The people are waiting to read his lips, but those lips aren't saying anything, at least anything worth hearing. He doesn't have the panache that Reagan had to gloss over his inadequacies with flowing rhetoric. It just doesn't work for George.

So now what? Do we start asking, "Where's Danny?" God, I hope not!

Read Meredith O'Brien every Tuesday.

In other news . . .

Barney Frank's hometown popularity is crumbling in the wake of his affair with male prostitute Stephen Gobie.

A recent poll by The Tab, a suburban Massachusetts newspaper that circulates in Frank's district indicates that his hometown support has eroded significantly. The poll revealed that while 74 percent of Newton, Mass. residents say that they would have voted to re-elect Frank before the affair, only 56 percent say they would now.

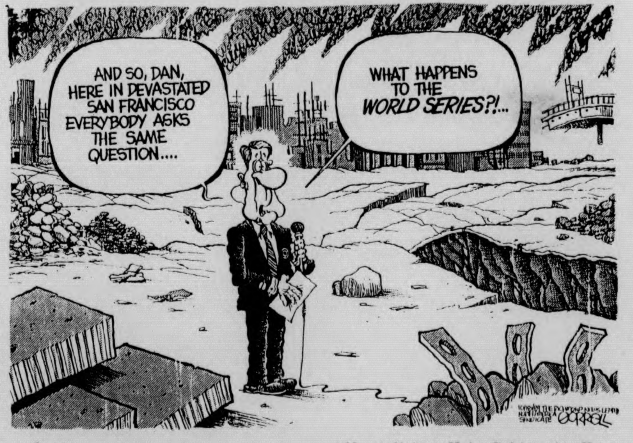
Newsweek
Oct. 23, 1989

Last Wednesday, about 20,000 people participated in a rally in Boston to protest further cuts in public higher education.

Were you one of the 3,000 students from UMass who rallied? Or were you one of the hundreds left behind? Did you feel the rally was a success? How do you think the media portrayed the event? Or did you feel it failed in its purpose to show students as respectable and concerned individuals?

Send your opinion to the Editorial desk by Thursday, October 26, by 4p.m. for the Point/Counterpoint page. No late submissions will be accepted.



AND SO, DAN, HERE IN DEVASTATED SAN FRANCISCO EVERYBODY ASKS THE SAME QUESTION....
WHAT HAPPENS TO THE WORLD SERIES?!...
OZERELL

Living in a world gone mad

I'm sick of politics.

I'm tired of power.

Why are people trying to ruin this country?

David R. Mark

A quick check of the world around us — whether us means students, public higher education in Massachusetts or the United States — is a look at walls caving in, crushing us as badly as the poor people trapped under I-880 in California.

Which brings us to San Francisco. . .

If you were a martian coming to our planet in the past week, would you think a rational person decided to allow the World Series to continue after a devastating earthquake?

Fay, baby, it's only a game. Call it a draw and devote some of Major League Baseball's funds toward reconstructing Candlestick Park and the rest of the area. The only people who care if the series continues are ABC and its advertisers.

Heading cross-country to the Big Apple, there's a mayoral race between Republican Rudy Guiliani and Democrat David Dinkins.

The race is only a few weeks old, but already its been hampered by racism, hyperbole and a lack of interest in the issues — homelessness, underdevelopment, drugs — plaguing the city.

You would almost think Guiliani was running the type of campaign George Bush ran last year.

Wait a second, is that Roger Ailes?

Whaddaya know? The campaign manager for George Bush in 1988 is the campaign manager for Rudy Guiliani. Hmmn, lack of issues, diverting voters to look at the irrelevant — seems like a lock for Rudy in November.

Except this time the democrat isn't a shlump.

Which takes us to Boston. . .

House Speaker George Keverian, the Assocated Press and The Boston Globe are all right. Those flowers are important — far more important than educating students in Massachusetts.

Yep, those flowers will change society in the next generation (look at the effect they've had so far), probably spurring a whole generation of environmentalists. Of course, the environmentalists will all be from out of state, our programs having been cut before we can graduate anyone from those 29 public colleges and universities.

Er, 28. Um, 27. Hmmn, maybe 26.

Dukakis should have won. Evelyn Murphy wouldn't have screwed the state so bad.

Which takes us to Washington. . .

The man who did win the White House, George Bush, has done exactly what many people thought he would do — absolutely nothing.

In case you were skipping over the world pages to see if we still had a University (maybe that's what George did), here's what's happened in the last few months that Bush was unable to do anything about.

Eastern European nations becoming democracies, China imposing martial law, South Africa releasing political dissidents (but not really changing their government), Western European nations closing free trade on products from television shows to meats and cheeses, and the Soviet Union hoping for improved trade relations to save Perestroika.

Bush has no apparent policy for any of the above, or tense political relations in Central America, the Middle East or Southeast Asia.

No policies. He's fishing in Kennebunkport, or maybe just his ability to think has gone fishin'.

Maybe I'm the one who's got it all wrong, but an earthquake is more important than baseball, political issues are more important than non-issues, an education is more important than flowers, and creating a foreign policy is more important than doing nothing.

Do you ever get the feeling the world's gone completely bonkers?

Employee blunder labels pizza box with swastika

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

A Greenough Residence Hall woman reported she found a drawing of a swastika on her pizza delivery tag Friday night, police said.

After an investigation, police discovered that an employee of the pizza shop asked another employee to show what a swastika looks like. The employee forgot to discard the tag, police said.

Also this weekend, a man in Thoreau Residence Hall reported his stereo and receiver, 40 compact discs, a football helmet and a pair of sunglasses were stolen from his room Sunday, police said.

The losses were estimated at $1,000.

In other police reports:

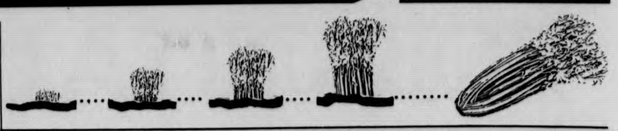
ARRESTS

- Eric Rothberg, 18, of Amherst, was arrested Friday in Washington Residence Hall on charges of being a minor in possession of alcohol and using false information to obtain a Massachusetts license and liquor identification card, police said.
- Jessica Richard, 17, of Lunenburg, was arrested in Lot 33 Friday on charges of being a minor transporting alcohol, police said.
- Cory Santerra, 18, of Swansea; Cory Motta, 18, of Swansea; and Richard Medeiros, 19, of Rehoboth, N.J.; were arrested in the Southwest Area Saturday on charges of being minors in possession of alcohol, police said.
- Shawn Brennan, 19, of Stoughton, was arrested Saturday on Massachusetts Ave. on charges of being a minor in possession of alcohol, police said.
- Colleen McGuire, 18, of Lowell, was arrested Saturday in John Adams Residence Hall on charges of being a disorderly person, police said.
- Daniel Cheney, 21, of Amherst, was arrested Sunday on Stockbridge Road on charges of operating under the influence of alcohol and motor vehicle charges, police said.
- Brian McClelland, 22, of Quincy, was arrested Sunday on Massachusetts Ave. on charges of operating after his license was suspended, police said.
- Douglas Vishaway, 24, was arrested Monday in the Campus Center on charges of trespassing after notice.

LARCENY

- Parts of a mountain bike were reported stolen Friday from a mountain bike parked outside of Johnson Residence Hall, police said.
- A raincoat was reported stolen Friday from the Fine Arts Center Gallery, police said. The coat was valued at $27.
- Police were called to the Campus Center parking garage Friday for the possible larceny of a parking ticket, which did not reflect the true time the vehicle was parked in the garage, police said.
- A vehicle backing up near Goodell Hall hit another vehcile Friday, causing less than $500 in damage, police said.
- Police were called to Brooks Residence Hall Friday for a reported drug overdose, police said. The man was transported to the UMass infirmary by ambulance, police said.
- Police confiscated a quarter keg of beer and cases of beer from Cance Residence Hall Friday, police said.

- A man reported his vehicle that was parked on Thatcher Way was hit in the left quarter panel, police said. Damage was estimated between $500 and $700.
- Police received a report that a golf ball was thrown through a window of Patterson Residence Hall Satruday.
- A man reported annoying calls were made to his office in Marston Hall Saturday, police said.
- A Northeast Area resident reported obscene calls, police said.



Directions: For the following question, select the best answer choice provided.

1. Only if we know human nature can we know the nature of the true good for human beings. And only if we know the nature of the true good for human beings can we arrive at an idea of the truly just society. Thus, if we know human nature and the nature of the good for human beings, we can arrive at an idea of the truly just society.

Which of the following points out a potential flaw in the reasoning above?

(A) What one human being thinks is good might well be something that another human being thinks is not good.
(B) Many people have arrived at ideas of the just society, and all of them have been slightly different.
(C) It is quite possible to know human nature without in any way being able to know what is the good for human beings.
(D) Philosophers have argued for centuries over what specifically defines human nature, without coming to a general agreement.
(E) Arriving at an idea of the just society may require more than knowledge of human nature and knowledge of the good for human beings.

ARTS & LIVING

The winner of the best movie of the decade is. . .

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Raging Bull, a Martin Scorsese film starring Robert DeNiro, has been named movie of the decade in the Premiere magazine poll.

Polls are automatically controversial things because no two people think alike. It is highly doubtful that much of the general public feels the life story of boxer Jake LaMotta was the best thing put out on celluloid during the 1980s, even though it really wasn't that bad a pick.

Martin Scorsese is easily one of the best directors of our era. The man behind such artistic classics as Taxi Driver, After Hours, King of Comedy and the Last Temptation of Christ is nothing short of a magician behind the camera. He was just having fun in The Color of Money, but his shots of the pool tables and his furious editing is fabulous. The camera itself elicits emotions.

It would also not be an overstatement to name Robert DeNiro one of the finest thespians of our time. The man throws all of himself into every role he plays. The end result is that you don't see Robert DeNiro acting out a character, you just see the character. Whether it be a psychopath in Taxi Driver, a Mafioso in The Godfather, a comedic small-time thug in Midnight Run or the Devil in Angel Heart, DeNiro can do it all, and he does it all well.

In Raging Bull, these two forces join together, and the end result is a magnificent, accurate and graphically violent portrayal of a total jerk who only wanted one thing in life — to become middleweight boxing champion. Anything that got in his way, he just pushed aside.

Overlooking Scorsese's extrordinary camerawork and DeNiro's flawless acting, the movie should be recognized just for the manner in which it parallels our society. Jake LaMotta was an asshole, but had a will to succeed. He personifies today's capitalistic, yuppie attitude to the extreme. Sure it's graphic and ugly, and may even repulse a few people, but it's the truth.

ART ATTACK

But best movie of the decade? That would mean shunning Amadeus, the movie that turned so many people on to the strange and sometimes hilarious world of Mozart.

It would mean shunning the cult classics, like Repo Man and This Is Spinal Tap.

It would mean shunning David Cronenberg's wonderfully artistic Dead Ringers, although I can understand how women may not like a story about gynecologists gone mad.

It would mean shunning Stranger Than Paradise and Down By Law, Jim Jarmusch's black and white deadpan comedy classics.

It would mean shunning Wim Wender's beautiful Wings of Desire. It would mean shunning coming-of-age classics My Life as a Dog and Hope and Glory.

It would mean shunning David Lynch's masterfully weird Blue Velvet. This is Woody Allen's choice, by the way. It would mean shunning Spike Lee's powerful Do the Right Thing, and Oliver Stone's equally powerful Platoon.

It would mean shunning Spielberg's sickeningly cute E.T., and James L. Brooks' schlocky Terms of Endearment, but I've got no problem with that.

Rainman, a glorified horribly done road film, isn't even close.

That brings me to The Big Chill. Lawrence Kasden's direction is nothing that special, but this film shaped our entire decade. This is the movie that coined the term "classic rock." This is the movie that brought back the sixties. This is the movie that showed us today's people, who realize today's world sucks, and want to return to yesterday. Whether you like all this or not, (I don't) it was The Big Chill that served it up to us. For that, and because it was a great movie to watch, with fantastic performances by William Hurt, Meg Tilly, Tom Berenger, Kevin Kline, Jeff Goldblum, and even the usually overdramatic Glenn Close, The Big Chill gets my vote for movie of the decade.

Now it's your turn, kids. What do you think? Send your votes for best movie of the 1980s to Collegian Arts Dept., 113 Campus Center, Amherst, MA 01003. One lucky person will win some prize we haven't quite figured out yet. Please have submissions in by Dec. 1.

Poi Dog doesn't sacrifice sound for success

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

College music, like every other aspect of rock and roll, has been commercialized. Record companies have realized that there is a market for "alternative music," which means more money for them. They invented the college market.

What's scary about this, is that the big record companies are trying to make alternative music more mainstream, or uncreative. Corporate mongrels want bands that sell. Mainstream sells. It makes the corporate giants happy. But it doesn't take music to any places it hasn't been before.

One band that's seemed to avoid all this is Poi Dog Pondering. Even though they've signed with Columbia, and are currently in the top-10 of the College Music Journal, PDP has managed to maintain their unique, and ultimately indescribable pop sound.

The seven-member band, who will play Pearl Street tonight, is the brain child of Hawaii native Frank Orrall. He got together a group of people that at times numbered as many as 15, and played any place possible. Nine of these people flew to the United States without food, money or a plan. The band travelled the country playing for food and gas money. They eventually settled in Austin, Texas, where they garnered a good following. After releasing two independent LPs, they were signed by Columbia records.

Poi Dog Pondering's original sound comes from their wide range of instruments. Orall, who besides singing, plays tin whistle, mandolin, tenor banjo, jews harp, and ukulele. Susan Velz, who has worked with John Cougar Mellencamp, plays various violins. Dave Crawford plays trumpet, trombone, sousaphone, accordian, melodica, recorder, percussion and "anything else nobody wants to play." Drummer and cowbeller Dick Ross, and guitarist Adam Sultan round out the group.

The band's self-titled debut album for Columbia is all over the place. PDP has so many different styles that they're impossible to catagorize. But for some unknown cosmic reason, it all works beautifully.

The album opens with the bouncy, surreal "Living with the Dreaming Body." Orrall's tin whistle dominates the song which begins with the wonderfully obscure line, "Robin's in the metaphysical section."

Other songs are just as strange. "Postcard from a Dream" is as infectious as anything the Housemartins ever did, but with a twist. Crawford's horns add a whole new dimension. The second part of the song, the "toast and jelly" part, sounds like it was lifted from Sesame Street, especially with lyrics like "Wash wash, you gotta wash the dishes/If you eat off um, you gotta wash um." It's all light fun.

"Fall On Me" sounds like an old cowboy song, with Velz singing fine harmonies. "Fact of Life" has a Latin beat. "Aloha Hawaii" would fit in in any '30s movie with a tropical setting. The best way to describe "Sound of Water," is to say it is a Gaelic Dirty Harry song. This band is everywhere.

The lyrics are often inane, and Velz fails miserably when she tries to sound like Kate Bush in "Flying," but at least these people are taking chances. They are a true, uncomprimising, alternative rock band, and a hell of a lot of fun to boot.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Students for Life tackle new agenda addressing morality issues as well

By DANIELLE BIONDA
Collegian Staff

This article is second in a two part series student involvement in the abortion issue

The voices of anti-abortion activists at the University of Massachusetts have not yet been heard this semester as an organized group, but Students for Life is revving up to speak out not only against abortion, but to address moral issues as well, said club President Ted Maravelias.

Maravelias, the former Republican Club president, feels the Republican Club is not as conservative as it has been in past semesters, and as president of Students for Life, he has added moral issues to its agenda, including issues of pre-marital sex, homosexuality, traditional values, and AIDS.

"There is an importance of understanding our Judeo-Christian heritage and to emphasis that the separation of the church and state has gone too far," Maravelias said.

The club hopes to sponsor Dr. Paul Cameron, chairman of the Family Research Institute, this Thursday in the Campus Center, to speak about homosexuality.

But Maravelias said there has been some question about whether the Student Activities Office will allow Cameron to speak in the Campus Center. Cameron has been widely criticized on his controversial opinions about homosexuals in the past.

"We've been a relatively quiet [Registered Student Organization]," Maravelias said, adding that Students for Life is hoping to stir up some controversy this semester.

Students for Life will be working in close contact with Massachusetts Citizens for Life and Operation Rescue, to focus on the abortion issue.

Last semester, Students for Life sponsored a "Rally for Life" with speakers Robert Cooley, from a Conneticut chapter of Operation Rescue, and Dr. Mildred Fay Jefferson, who Maravelias said also works closely with Operation Rescue.

"We are indeed planning a rescue with Operation Rescue in the Amherst area," he said, although the date and clinic have not been set.

Maravelias said that when considering the abortion issue, the moral consequences of abortion must be taken into account.

He attributes society's downfall to people's loss of morality and traditional values, adding that "we need to have an infusion and awakening of religious values."

"I believe abortion is murder," Maravelias said. "The right to life is supreme under our Constitution, and I believe an unborn baby does constitute a life."

Along with moral values, Maravelias believes that abortion contributes to "sexual promiscuity."

Applauding President Bush's proposed veto of legislation that would give federal funding for abortions to women who have been victims of rape and incest, Maravelias commented that it was the first time Bush, "displayed something resembling a backbone."

But the Congress has not addressed the issue of sexual education recently, which Maravelias said also promotes sexual promiscuity.

"I know that pro-lifers are against sex education in schools, and I know the pro-choice side sees this as a barrier against understanding how to avoid getting pregnant," he said.

"However, we are not too sure that sex education at the high school and junior high level would not be counter productive," he added.

Maravelias said Students for Life and other pro-life groups believe sex education promotes pre-marital sex and that it does not promote traditional family values.

Although Students for Life have had a slow start this semester, Maravelias invites all interested members to attend Thursday's meeting in the Campus Center to learn about the group and the political and social platforms it is taking on abortion and moral issues.

Counseling offered for men who batter

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Correspondent

There is probably at least one case of domestic violence in every hall at the University of Massachusetts, according to Kevin Ryan, founder of Men Overcoming Violence, a counseling organization for men who batter.

"Men batter because they are hurt, they feel unsafe and need to feel they're in control of the situation," Ryan said.

Ryan, who has been working with abusive men for two and half years in the San Francisco area, started MOVE to combat violence against women.

At the first group meeting men are asked to take responsibility for their violent behavior, and they discuss any violent incidents that have occurred.

The men then learn to identify their personal warning signals, such as pacing or overeating, that may precede a violent situation. When the warning signals surface, the men are taught to take "time out" of an hour as a cooling off period. They also learn the underlying causes of their anger, how they have been socialized to express that anger, and find nonviolent ways of venting it.

The men are also required to keep "anger journals," and participate in role-plays which enable them to better understand the fear that they incite in their spouses or girlfriends, and to gain insight into their own behavior.

"It is important for men to work in a group because of the extreme amount of isolation they encounter," Ryan said, adding that men who are in abusive relationships usually have no supportive family or friends.

A number of men in the MOVE program have alcohol or drug related problems, Ryan said.

They must be enrolled in a treatment program before they can participate in MOVE sessions, he added.

Ryan disputes the common myth that domestic violence is prevalent only in the lower classes, and says that the cycle has no class boundaries. Although Ryan sees mainly middle class men, he does have a sliding scale fee that is adjusted to income.

Gail Kielson, of Necessities/Necesidades, a battered women's center in Northampton, said that Ryan is concerned with the safety of the woman, and added that he " works by working with the batterer and not the relationship."

Pat Barrows of the Everywoman's Center at UMass said that every 30 seconds, a woman is being battered in the United States, that one in five college relationships involves violence, and that forty percent of all homicides involving the death of a woman are due to domestic violence.

Ryan has delivered speeches at various churches in the area on the subject of men overcoming violence, and is interested in doing more community education on the subject.

Support group helps women kick addiction

KATERI WALSH

Collegian Correspondent

Taking that "first step" in getting help for a substance abuse problem can be a frightening, confusing experience and one that is too often postponed because a person does not know what to expect, said Adair Mackay, creator of an innovative women's early sobriety group in Northampton.

"The group offers a therapeutic resource to women who are really struggling with beginning the process of recovery," Mackay said.

"The group is a source of support for women who may not be ready to take all of the suggestions [offered to substance abusers]," Mackay said, adding, "It is for those women who want to do something but are not quite sure what."

Caroline, who asked that her real name not be used, is in her mid-forties and is an alcoholic. She said that she was attracted to Mackay's group because of it's size, and is comprised of all females.

"I had found it very difficult to get up in front of 70 or 80 people, especially men and women, and speak about such personal issues," she said, "I knew Adair's group would be small and I would be forced to open up and learn to speak up, which is what I needed."

Caroline said that the group focused on what is normal in early sobriety.

"There was a lot of talk about where you are and what's happening to you physically and mentally after just having given up an addiction," she said.

Caroline, who joined Mackay's group when it began in January, just celebrated her first anniversary of sobriety, she said. She now attends Alcoholics Anonymous.

Mackay, herself a recovering alcoholic, has a master's degree in counseling and has had a private practice in Northampton for one year. Prior to that she was the program director for the Hampshire Alcohol and Addiction Recovery Team, where she worked for four years.

She started the group in 1989 because of a belief that people at the beginning stages of recovery tend to benefit more from group therapy than from individual therapy. She said she knew of only one women's group in the area that offered the sort of therapeutic resources that she saw as central to the recovery process.

"The group is very supportive," she said, "It provides and increases consciousness around the addictive process and recovery."

Mackay said that the multicultural group of women share other issues such as eating disorders, sexual abuse, relationship problems, and being adult children of alcoholics.

The group is comprised of women with a variety of substance abuse problems and at every level of recovery. Some participants are also active in Alcoholics Anonymous or similar twelve-step programs, she said.

Mackay, saying she recognizes the importance of many different types of therapy, added, "I strongly endorse and encourage people to engage in 12-step programs."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

ARIES (March 21-April19): Look before you leap where business or romance is concerned. An argument will erupt if you insist on having your own way. Secret agreements can help advance your career or financial goals.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Taking a chance with your affections can be as risky as gambling with hard cash. Keep a watchful eye on your property and possessions. You may need to choose your friends by different standards.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): An unexpected check or tax refund lets you buy a luxury item on sale. Changes come more easily than you anticipated. Have dinner with someone who can supply information you need.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): A setback could be part of the picture. Adopt a philosophical point of view. A teen-ager will delight you with some joyful news. Trust your intuition when dealing with newcomers.

LEO (July 23-Aug.22): Attend to your financial responsibilities. Your determination will be admired. Do your window-shopping by thumbing through magazines. Luxury purchases should be postponed while you build up savings.

VIRGO (Aug.23-Sept.22): Ask important questions instead of jumping to conclusions. Old ideas can be successfully recycled to boost profits. Be gracious in difficult situations. Avoid engaging in petty squabbles.

LIBRA (Sept.23-Oct.22): Expect good luck when it comes to a moneymaking project. Competition is less keen now. Strive to develop a better relationship with a different relative or neighbor. Your secret weapon is diplomacy.

SCORPIO (Oct.23-Nov.21): Happily, your co-workers are excited about as new project. Pool your talents and share the profits. Romance is on the upswing. A fine day for a heart-to-heart chat with your mate.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov.22-Dec.21): Romance is dazzling. Someone may ask you to make a commitment. Personal ties mean greater financial responsibilities. A project that is launched today will prove highly profitable. Work hard.

CAPRICORN (Dec.22-Jan.19): Although the past may be recalled, it will not touch you. Being a pro-company employee pays off handsomely A promotion or raise is in the offing. Look your best at all times. Romance beckons.

AQUARIUS (Jan.20-Feb.18): An excellent day for all types of meetings and communications. Your spirits are bound to be high. Unusual people have a special fascination for you. Be careful not to go overboard.

PISCES (Feb.19-March 20): Talking can produce surprising results when it bears the stamp of sincerity as well as truth. The way things are said makes a real difference. Greater tact can help you avert a family quarrel.

A first . . . and then another first: Fasano and Tornatore got their first-ever completions on back-to-back plays. Fasano had been in two previous games, but hadn't thrown a pass.

A couple of records . . . almost: Mitchell came close to topping two previous UMass highs in Saturday's loss.

His 10 catches were just one shy of the record of 11 by Tim Berra (Yogi's son) in 1973. His 155 yards is second-highest, bested only by Milt Morin with 181 in 1965.

"If Chip Mitchell doesn't make the Yankee Conference All-Star team, I will never vote again," Reid praised. "I hope opponents appreciate his ability."

Update from the local M*A*S*H unit: Things are getting tight at tight end. With starter Ron Villone (ankle) already hurting, the picture got murky when freshman Bill Durkin also sprained an ankle Saturday. Fullback Jim Pastorick is listed on the depth chart for Saturday's game at tight end behind Villone.

Tailback Jerome Bledsoe is out of the NU game with a pulled quadricep. Sophomore Lawrence Hicks will replace him.

Around the YanCon: Two questions — will Maine ever lose, and how can there be three better teams in the country?

The YC race is for second place, 'cuz the Black Bears wrapped it up after shredding Connecticut, 30-8 on Saturday. Buck has yet to throw an interception. Elsewhere, Boston University (what's with this team?) barely beat Rhode Island in overtime, 34-31. New Hampshire beat lowly Richmond (Nov. 4 can't come fast enough — get these guys in here), 21-7 and Villanova stunned nationally-ranked William and Mary, 20-17.

ing past Yale to Harvard and Brown."

UMass led only 5-4 entering the final quarter and needed two late goals by Alex Yelensky to put the game out of reach.

Later that afternoon the Minutemen squared off against 19th ranked Harvard.

"It was a battle," said Yarworth. "They came out fired up as hell."

Havard came out and scored twice in the first two minutes before Yarworth called time out to sooth his shell-shocked players. Scott Deluca got UMass on the board to cut the lead to 2-1.

"Deluca's goal was key. That was the one that got us going," said Yarworth.

At the end of the third quarter UMass found itself on the short end of a 10-9 game. After tying the game the Minutemen took the lead for good on a goal by Yelensky with 40 seconds remaining in the contest. All that was left was a fine save by Todd Larson after a set play by Harvard.

UMass had to endure one final game this day, going up against the 15th ranked Bruins of Brown. After the Harvard game, a letdown was inevitable. It happened and UMass payed the price, getting trounced 15-4.

"We were worn out mentally and physically," said Yarworth.

"They got some counter attack goals and it was over."

After a well earned night of sleep, UMass came out and upended the Eagles of Boston College 13-5. The Minutemen pulled away in the last quarter, outscoring BC 5-0, to chalk up the 'W'.

"Scott Reed was the key in this game with his counter attack play," said Yarworth. "He showed great reaction."

It was fitting UMass capped off their fine weekend by getting a chance to trounce MIT after the Engineers stole one from UMass three weeks ago.

W and M wins tourney

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

Due to deadline constraints, the Collegian was unable to report the complete results of the William and Mary Tournament, which began Saturday and finished Sunday.

The University of Massachusetts came out of another tournament without a loss, but for the third time this year, they finished as bridesmaids.

In their prior weekend outings, the Reds were second in the Cornell Invitational and their own tourney, the UMass Classic, by virtue of goals scored. Colorado College and Central Florida, respectively, both outgunned UMass.

This weekend, the Reds had two double-overtime ties against No. 7 North Carolina State (2-2) and No. 5 William and Mary (0-0). However, their 0-0-2 record was not enough to win the whole thing.

William and Mary, the host school, won their own tournament with a 1-0-1 record, defeating Connecticut 2-0 and tying Mass.

The Reds finished second, followed by UConn and N.C. State.

Follow this if you can: W & M's win over UConn helps UMass because UMass tied the team (W & M) that beat the team that UMass tied.

As far as the ISAA poll, UMass should move up from the number eight position because it didn't lose to two teams that were ranked higher than it. Instead, the Minutewomen tied and that's precisely why ties screw almost everything up — they don't indicate whether you're better or worse than the other guys on paper.

Yes, reporters are prone to mistakes: Don't mean to take away from Margie Jaede, who had a pretty good game Sunday, but it was really April Kater who scored the two N.C. State goals.

UMass' Tornatore passes the nation

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

Q: Who is the top-rated quarterback in the country, in any division? A: Paul Tornatore, University of Massachusetts.

His passing efficiency (whatever that means) stands at 207.2, which is 35 points higher than the next closest competitor. The University of Maine's own AK-47, Mike Buck, has a rating of 172.

OK, maybe that's a little misleading. After all, he has only played little more than one quarter this year. But you can't take away what Tornatore was able to accomplish in that short time.

In this season where the Minutemen have played musical quarterbacks more often than the New England Patriots and Boston College combined, Tornatore — a redshirt junior from Ridgewood, N.J. — had been the odd man out until Saturday afternoon against the University of Delaware at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium.

Then, in the third quarter, starting quarterback Gary Wilkos was driven to the muddy turf by defensive tackle Mike Renna. Minutes later, Tornatore finally got the call.

According to UMass coach Jim Reid, Wilkos had gotten hit in the first half, and would have to come out of the game if he took another heavy shot.

"The decision was made at halftime that Tom [Fasano] would go with the wind in the third quarter, and stay with the option, and Paul would go against the wind in the fourth," Reid said.

"At halftime they said they were going to go with Gary and see how his shoulder is," Tornatore said. "They told both Tommy and me to be ready."

Tornatore's collegiate debut came with five minutes left in the third. Fasano threw the first pass of the drive, and then Tornatore took over.

His first drive led to a 4-yard touchdown pass to Mike Tobin, and then after fumbling on the next series, Tornatore drove the Minutemen downfield and capped the drive with a 25-yard TD pass to Chip Mitchell. All this led to his being named Yankee Conference co-Rookie-of-the-Week.

"Paul did a fine job, and there was a lot of pressure on him," Mitchell said. "It's not like he's a new face. In practice we do a thorough job of getting every quarterback in."

Practice is a little different than an actual game situation, but Tornatore made the adjustment.

"I was a little nervous at first, but after that, the plays just started rolling," Tornatore said.

For the record, Tornatore rolled up 13 completions on 17 attempts for 186 yards and two touchdowns. His effort came at a time when UMass, scrambling to rally from a 14-0 deficit, had to go mainly with the passing game.

"I'm tremendously pleased as to the incredible poise he had," Reid said. "What I like is that he threw the ball well and took the sack when he had to."

Wilkos' status is listed as day-to-day for Saturday's game at Northeastern, which leaves Reid with an interesting problem in deciding who will line up behind center and take the snaps.

"Right now, I just don't know," Reid said.

Water polo takes four out of five

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Staff

Last week when he thought ahead to this past weekend about the New England League Tournament at Harvard, University of Massachusetts water polo coach Russ Yarworth said if his troops could come out of the weekend 4-1, than they would be in great shape.

That's exactly what happened. 20th-ranked UMass defeated Yale 8-6, Harvard 11-10, Boston College 13-5 and old friend MIT 21-9, to bring its season record to 11-8.

Despite the outstanding weekend things did not get off on the right foot for the Minutemen. Even though they upended Yale, Yarworth was not a happy man.

"We didn't do anything well against them," he said. "I think they were look-

Minutewomen spring past SC, Rhody

DeAngelis nets four goals, Scott records 2 shutouts

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Springfield College is getting to be a very likable vacation house for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team. With the rain soaking Totman Field on Saturday, the Minutewomen switched its game with the University of Rhode Island to Springfield's artificial turf surface and surfed right over the the Lady Rams, 6-0.

UMass returned to Springfield the following day during dinner time (the game started at 5:30 p.m.) and disposed of host Springfield College, 2-0 in a game that was a make-up for last Thursday's rainout.

After the two wins, the Minutewomen are now 10-4-1, 3-1 in the Atlantic 10 Conference and the NCAA's No. 9 team in the country. UMass is 3-0 in Springfield this year.

"We played very strong," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "We like to get on turf. We play well on turf."

Senior forward Kathy DeAngelis certainly does not mind the fake stuff. For the weekend, DeAngelis finished with four goals and one assist.

On Saturday, a 7 p.m. game under the lights, DeAngelis lit the fire that ravaged the Lady Rams' defense, slapping home a Beth Thornton pass to put the Minutewomen up 1-0 just 50 seconds into the game.

With freshman goaltender Phillipa Scott enjoying a cozy afternoon between the posts (Scott was forced to make just two saves, both in the first half), UMass took target practice on URI goalie Tressa Fiore.

The Minutewomen had a pretty good percentage in hitting the bull's eye, as after DeAngelis, senior forward Mara Frattasio (25:50), DeAngelis (21:06), beat Fiore in the first half off of 13 shots.

In the second, it was more of the same with Thornton (26:13 and 17:55) and Nancy Philbrick with an assist from DeAngelis with 10:52 left in the game making sure there was no way, that URI was going to come back. UMass again got 13 shots in the half.

With the win, UMass clinched second place in the Atlantic 10 behind Penn State which also assures the Minutewomen of a spot in the A-10 tourney at the beginning of November. The game will be against the No. 3 seed in the A-10 which will end up being either Temple or Rutgers.

The offense didn't come as easy on Sunday but again the offense only needed one to win with Scott (six saves) picking up her second shutout in two days.

"Our goal was to try and create a lot more scoring opportunities around the net, just trying to take advantage of the balls that we do put in there," Hixon said.

UMass was able to get off 17 shots with DeAngelis coming to the rescue when the Minutewomen needed the production. DeAngelis scored with 22:18 left in the first half, assisted on by senior Bernie Martel and Frattasio.

In the second half, UMass was hanging on to slim lead before DeAngelis lifted the Minutewomen to a 2-0 lead with 23:37 left in the game, this time, unassisted.

Harriers stumble at A-10 Championships

• Minutemen finish third

By JON REIDEL
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's cross country team found themselves in a discouragingly familiar position at the Atlantic- 10 Championships on Saturday at New York city's imfamous Van Cortland Park.

The Minutemen, who have never won the A-10's in it's twelve year history, have finished second or third for the past four years to either Penn State or West Virginia.

On Saturday that streak went to five.

With Jay Novak and Scott Walter of Penn St. tying for first place in a time of 25:18 and teamate Steve Brown finishing not far behind in 25:28, the nationally ranked Nittany Lions easily won it's third straight A-10 Championship by outscoring the runner-up Mountaineers by a score of 19 to 64.

The Minutemen finished just behind W.V.U with a score of 71.

The reason for the seven point Mountaineer victory was most attributable to the Minutemen's poor showing of it's middle few runners.

"We had our first two runners finish ahead of West Virginia's number one man," said coach Ken O'Brien. "But they ended up with their first four across the finish line before we had our top three in."

The Minutemen started things off right as Art Smith and Jon Corso cruised to fourth and eighth place finishes in times of 25:42 and 25:56 respectively. Unfortunately, the Minutemen had to wait 11 places and 33 seconds later until their third man, Joe Livorsi, came in. By that time, the West Virginia damage was done.

Following Livorsi in 22nd and 24th places were Herb Heffner in 26:35 and James Chute in 25:36.

Livorsi and Heffner, who have both proven in the past that they can race with almost any team's top guns, undoubtedly just had bad days.

"Everyone ran well at Easterns," said O'Brien. "Only 60 percent of the team happened to run well on Saturday, but we're a young team so inconsistency can happen."

Finishing behind the Minutemen were St. Josephs with 101 points, Rutgers and Rhode Island in fifth with 144 each, St.

• Women lag behind Penn, WV

By JASON GEORGE

If you're an optimist, the UMass women's cross country team got its bad race out of its system in the Atlantic-10 Championships on Saturday at Van Cortland Park, N.Y. Although the Minutewomen finished a respectable third, they were unable to challenge winner Penn State. The Nittany Lions finished first overall with 32 points, followed by West Virginia with 60, and UMass with 71.

After Penn State's Wendy Nelson grabbed first overall in a time of 18:15, UMass senior captain Shana Smith finished second in 18:31. The Minutewomen also received a strong performance from junior Laura LaVallee, who took 13th in 18:59.

"Laura and Shana really ran to their abilities," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said. "We've been able to count on strong performances from them all year."

Sophomore Precious Hill (19:12) and freshman Becky Johnson (19:15) finished 17th and 18th respectively. Freshman Maureen Meldrim rounded out UMass' top five, coming in 21st (19:22).

The most discouraging aspect of the race was the 51-second differential between UMass' top five runners. When the Minutewomen won their quad-meet over Vermont, Rhode Island, and New Hampshire Oct. 14, they had only 21 seconds between their top five runners.

"In a big race like this, almost every second could mean another runner coming in ahead of you," LaFreniere said.

Another alarming aspect is the similarity to last season when the Minutewomen had trouble running back-to-back strong races. Last year, the Minutewomen beat Vermont in one of their best races of the season, then lost to them in the New England Championships soon afterward."Some of our younger people have a difficult time putting forth great efforts back-to-back," LaFreniere said.

LaFreniere did praise Johnson and Meldrim, who have made consistent contributions in their first collegiate seasons. 'They both ran hard and were exhausted at the end of the race," LaFreniere said. "I think perhaps they were trying too hard."

Rounding out UM's top eight were sophomore Michelle St. Laurent (34th, 19:57), junior Kathy Holt (35th, 20:11), and junior Kathy Krocker (48th, 21:03).

Students march, rally to condemn apartheid

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

Some 35 students and community members gathered yesterday at the New Africa House to march and rally against apartheid.

With energetic chants of 'Freedom, Yes! Apartheid, No!', the marchers proceeded down North Pleasant Street, through Haigis Mall, and gathered at the steps of the Student Union.

Several marchers carried banners that said: "Fight the Power, Join the March to End Apartheid (by any means necessary);" "Coca-Cola Funds Apartheid — Get Coke out of UMass. Make UMass a Coke-Free Zone!;" and "Freeing South Africa is Freeing Ourselves!" Several onlookers showed their support with thumbs-up gestures.

At the Student Union, six University of Massachusetts students addressed a group of about 175 people.

Trent Watson, a member of the Black Mass Communications Project, said there is tension and lack of communication between Blacks and Whites.

"The only way to get rid of this [tension] is to try to understand each other, not say we understand one another," Watson said. He added that Civility Week does not go far enough to address racism.

"Civility Week is a bit of nonsense," he said. Civility should not be concentrated on for only a week, but should be integrated into every day of a student's life, he said.

James Roberts, vice polaris [vice president] of Iota Phi Theta, said the situation in South Africa "amounts to nothing more than slavery," because of the number of senseless deaths and people falsely accused and imprisoned.

"Most of the people in this country are aware of what apartheid is but choose to be apathetic about it," he said. "We have to be aware of the whole as opposed to the one. You have to say 'I am responsible.'"

Sekhulumi Ntsoaole leads the chant of "Freedom, Yes! Apartheid, No!" during an anti-apartheid march yesterday. Some 35 students marched from the New Africa House to the Student Union Building for a noon rally.

Nelson Acosta, a UMass graduate student, said, "since the South African government accepts apartheid, it justifies that oppression is acceptable."

He added, "The force of power and military are simply bad. The people are dying. There is no reason to stand on the sidelines, because a day may come when we will be oppressed."

Acosta said there was virtually no [administrative] reaction to the recent racial incident that occurred at UMass, in which a Black freshman was beaten outside of the John Quincy Adams dormitory in the Southwest Residential Area. He explained that by becoming involved, boycotting and protesting, individuals can change the situation.

"As a fist we can feel united," Acosta said.

Rudy Kreiger, a UMass Pan-American student, said, "We're looking at a situation in which the most vicious form of slavery that we've ever seen on this earth is happening right now in 1989."

Kreiger said that South Africa will play a pivotal role in the future of this country.

"When South Africa will become free, will the United States face a friendly or hostile base?" Kreiger asked.

Sekhulumi Ntsoaole, a member of the Free South Africa Student Alliance, said the fight to win back his country will not be a fight based on the color of skin, but rather it will be a battle fought together.

The majority of the speakers agreed that Civility Week is a farce, designed to ease consciences and make it appear that racism is being combatted to those outside of campus life.

Pete Riberio, a BMCP member, said, "We propose a change from the inappropriate and elusive term Civility Week to a Reality Week, in which these problems are truly addressed."

The march and rally were conceived by Kimberly Davis, of the BMCP, and Ina Perez, an Iota Phi Theta Fraternity Sweetheart. They were sponsered by the BMCP and Iota Phi Theta.

Perez said she was pleased with the outcome of yesterday's rally, and she hopes there will be a positive reaction from the students.

Adam Stein, a student representing the Thirld World Caucus, told the audience, "Don't just stand here and clap. Go out and organize your own rally for others to clap."

Anthrax suit dismissed

A doctor took issue with Hampshire Superior Court Judge John Murphy's decision yesterday to dismiss a suit aimed at the University of Massachusetts' current Department of Defense funded research on anthrax, a disease which afflicts cattle.

Murphy said, "There is no genuine issue raised by the suit."

Dr. Ira Helfand, a member of the Pioneer Valley Chapter of the Physicians for Social Responsibility, which filed the suit with the American Friends Service Committee, said it is unfortunate that Murphy decided not to hold a public hearing, which would have informed people about the research at the University.

"We believe the research is inappropriate in a university setting and should be stopped. We believe the DOD is trying to develop an enhanced anthrax weapon," said Helfand, adding that he encourages students at UMass to pursue the issue.

Diana Stein, a member of the Amherst Town Health Board, said she was not surprised by Murphy's decision because she considered the suit to be groundless.

Trooper charged with assault

By LISA SHAPIRO

SPRINGFIELD — A state trooper, apparently surprised during his searching of a prosecutor's files, attacked an assistant district attorney with a knife and chased him around the courthouse office, the district attorney said Tuesday.

Hampden County District Attorney Matthew J. Ryan said Detective Lt. John Mace, a 22-year veteran of the force, who was in charge of Ryan's investigators, was arrested on charges of assault and battery with a deadly weapon following the Monday evening fracas.

The prosecutor, Joseph Quinlan, 31, a 1980 University of Massachusetts graduate, suffered numerous cuts to the face, head and arms, requiring stitches.

The district attorney said that Mace told the police when they arrived, "I'm the bad guy, he's the good guy," indicating the assistant district attorney.

Ryan said an audit was being conducted to determine if any money or other items were missing from the office. He said Mace's arraignment would depend on his physical condition.

Quinlan, the 1979 editor-in-chief of the Collegian, was released from Baystate Medical Center in Springfield on Tuesday, according to hospital spokesman Joseph Bradley.

Mace, 47, who also suffered cuts on his hands and left arm, was listed in good condition at the hospital, Bradley said. Police were guarding his room.

Kidnappers offer trade

BEIRUT, Lebanon (AP) — Pro-Iranian kidnappers holding at least two American hostages reiterated in a statement released Tuesday their offer to trade their captives for at least 15 Shiite Moslem comrades jailed in Kuwait.

"We renew our firm emphasis on the need to free our struggling brethren from the jails of the collaborating Kuwaiti regime, and declare that the Mujahedeen (holy warriors) shall not rest until they see their brethren free," said Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War.

The statement, type-written in Arabic was delivered anonymously to the offices of the independent newspaper An-Nahar and a Western news agency in Moslem West Beirut.

The text was accompanied by a photograph of Amercian Terry A. Anderson, the longest held of the 18 western hostages in Lebanon. Anderson, chief Middle East correspondent for The Associated Press, was kidnapped March 16, 1985.

The picture showed a clean-shaven, smiling Anderson. He was wearing glasses and a yellow sweater. Anderson, who turns 42 on Friday, already has marked four birthdays in captivity.

Islamic Jihad also holds Thomas Sutherland, 57, of Fort Collins, Colorado. He was acting dean of agriculture at the American University of Beirut when he was abducted June 9, 1985.

Professors call for more taxes for education

By DAVID ALLEN FORRESTER
Collegian Correspondent

Taxation is the key to turning the budget crisis around and stopping its effects on the University, according to professors taking part in a teach-in yesterday.

The event was sponsored by Peacemakers, a group of students that includes members of People for a Socially Responsible University, and was called "University in Crisis."

Samuel Bowles, a professor of economics, said getting money through taxation is necessary to prevent a decrease in the quality of the University.

"People will tell you that the money's not there, and I will tell you that they're wrong. Massachusetts is the third richest state in the U.S. according to after-tax personal income," Bowles said. "The money is there. What isn't there is the political will, courage, or commitment of the political leadership of this state."

Bowles and geography Assistant Professor Julie Graham said they advocate taxing the wealthiest members of society.

Graham said legislators told her if cuts aren't made to education they will be made to other services.

Ernest Allen, associate professor of Afro-American Studies, spoke about the effect of budget cuts on minorities and the effect the budget cuts are going to have on them.

"Quite a number of students will be unable to break out of the poverty cycle," Allen said. He said a cut in financial aid of $300,000 which has already been taken, will probably be joined by more cuts.

Grad senate gives $500 for gay awareness week

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The Graduate Student Senate voted last night to contribute $500 to the fall semester Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Awareness Week.

Brad Robinson, the awareness week coordinator, said a noon rally Nov. 2 will be followed by a week of speakers, films workshops and art displays. He estimated about 3,000 homosexual students attend the University of Massachusetts.

"The intent of the program is to combat homophobia through education and to increase pride within the homosexual community," he said. Another awareness week will be held next spring.

In other business, representatives from two groups collecting signatures to put new tax laws on the November 1990 state ballot described the proposed laws to the senators.

Mary Wentworth, representing the Massachusetts Organization of State Engineers and Scientists, said wealthy individuals and corporations are not paying enough state taxes.

Under existing tax laws individuals and corporations do not have to pay taxes on 50 percent of their capital gains, she said. Under the first of two petitions, proposed by MOSES, corporations and individuals by 1991 could claim only 10 percent of their capital gains as a tax deduction, she said.

David S. Sharken, an organizer for the Tax Equity Alliance for Massachusetts, Inc., said the group's proposed tax law stops cuts in social services, elderly and higher education. The law would give a break to the elderly and families with children. New funds would be earmarked for education, environment, and safe roads.

Tax rates would be increased to big business and wealthy citizens and the law would examine ways to close tax loopholes, he said.

Both petions must be signed by at least 55,000 registered Massachusetts voters by Nov. 22 to get them on the ballot.

The GSS voted their support to the petition drives and senators volunteered to help collect signatures.

In other action the GSS voted to contribute $175 to the Sustainable Agriculture Seminar Series.

Treasurer Lisa Markowitz said the money will be spent to attract three speakers to discuss agricultural related topics. Dr. H. David Thurston, of Cornell University will speek on Nov. 7, and Dr. Rhonda Jahnke, of Rondale Institute, Nov. 14 and Dr. Matthew Liebman, of the University of Maine, Nov. 28.

The senate also voted to rehire Marc Kenen as a budget researcher for the spring semester.

Finally, Sen. John W. Olver told graduate senator Jacoby Carter last Thursday that students should write letters to newspapers advocating higher taxes. The action may influence public sentiment and make it easier for legislators to vote for new taxes, he said.

Colonel recalls UM in the 60s

By JOYCE TING
Collegian Correspondent

U.S. Air Force Col. Marcus J. Boyle remembers the University of Massachusetts when there were no lines for add/drop and members of the administration were not fighting against budget cuts because they were content with the revenues.

Boyle, a 1966 University of Massachusetts alumnus, now has his own budget to worry about.

Boyle has been selected as the new director of the Aerospace Center in St. Louis. This new center is responsible for mapping, charting, and geodetic aerospace devices for different branches of the military. At the base where he works, Boyle manages an operation of about 4,000 people.

Since Boyle's school days at UMass, the U.S. armed forces have decorated him with awards including the Defense Superior Service and the Humanitarian Service Medal. Before his appointment to his present position, Boyle served as Chief of Staff of the Defense Mapping Agency in Washington.

Looking back on his time at UMass, Boyle does not remember any co-ed dorms on campus. Class sizes, depending on the level, averaged 35 students, he said.

According to Boyle, the faculty was strongly oriented toward their students. He attended UMass from 1962 to 1966. He graduated with a bachelor of arts degree in European History and later went on to get his masters of business administration at the University of Central Florida in Orlando.

"Although I majored in European history, the liberal arts background helps me to direct large organizations," Boyle said. "The work done here is all very technical, but you need to balance that with liberal arts in order to have effective management."

Boyle thinks today's UMass students have many more advantages and benefits.

Today, UMass has the Southwest residential area for some 4000 students. Because Southwest was being built in the 60s, Boyle never saw its completion. He lived in Baker and Thatcher. UMass has also added other bus routes onto its five college bus route so that students have access to the campus, different towns and the residential areas.

Some things have not changed at UMass since the 60s, according to Boyle.

Mail campaign to be proposed

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

Tonight the Undergraduate Student Senate will discuss a proposition to initiate a massive mailing campaign that would inform all undergraduate students' parents on the effects of the budget cutbacks to the University of Massachusetts.

The discussion will be held during the evening's announcements and led by Carl Grygiel (Thatcher), Brian Crawford (Commuter), Lisa Montagna (Patterson), and Sara DeSimone (Crabtree).

The proposed letters will include the current budget situation on campus, including the possible laying off of even more staff, such as teaching assistants. Also to be addressed in the letters is state funding to private schools of higher education.

"Fifty million dollars goes to private higher education, and that hasn't been touched," said Grygiel. According to Grygiel $17.2 million has been cut from UMass during the last three years.

On the official agenda will be a motion to limit the number of candidates for any Student Government Association position to one. This would eliminate co-candidates everywhere except for Area Governments and House Council Government.

Also on the official agenda will be a motion by Student Attorney Robert Fadel that would force students that have been accused of embezzlement of student activities trust fund monies to turn over the records.

Author: Education combats racism

By MATT SANBORN
Collegian Correspondent

A seminar Monday addressed the ways to ensure equality through education.

As part of Civility Week, Ralph W. Tyler, a speaker at the seminar, said racism can be combatted through education.

"Education must help people discover that all groups involve good and bad people," said Tyler, the author of Basic Principles of Curriculum and Instruction. "We must teach people that skin color has nothing to do with the person. We must not think of it as they and we, but us."

"We must understand others as human beings," said Tyler, adding that understanding must be achieved to obtain any goal.

He said every person must make an effort to combat racism.

"People complain about things, and I asked them, 'What have you done about it?'" he said.

"A Sense of Self: Recognition in the Immune System"

The human body would be the ideal environment for thousands of unwelcome microorganisms, were it not for our network of molecules, cells, and organs known as the immune system. How can this system distinguish between self and nonself, and how does it generate its broad defensive repertoire against so many different microbial pathogens? The example of AIDS, a virus-induced failure of the immune system, illuminates both the importance of immunity and society's response to a new disease.

The district attorney, who was visibly shaken, said at a news conference that Quinlan had returned to the office Monday evening to work when he noticed a door ajar and apparently surprised Mace kneeling amid the files. Mace then allegedly pushed and chased Quinlan into the law library where the trooper had left a-knife, Ryan said.

Mace, who was wearing plastic gloves, apparently had used the knife, with a six-inch blade, to cut a hole in the wall and unlock the door to the district attorney's personal office, Ryan said.

Quinlan fought "very, very fiercely," and was able to pull a fire alarm. After firefighters arrived, sirens blaring, Mace surrendered, Ryan said.

Howard Ziff, a UMass journalism professor, remembers Quinlan as a good student who was friendly with the faculty. Quinlan earned a Bachelor of Arts and Sciences degree in Journalistic Studies and graduated cum laude.

"I thought when he left journalism that he would probably be going into a profession that was a little less hard-driving because of his good naturedness," Ziff said.

The district attorney said Mace ordinarily would have access to the files in his capacity as chief investigator for the office. He declined to comment on Mace's reasons for being in the office or to say whether investigators believed the disturbance had been aimed at covering up another crime.

Hundreds of files, ranging from pending cases to those that were closed, were strewn about the floor and a smoke detector had been disabled in apparent preparation for setting a fire, he said.

"We do not believe this was a simple robbery," Ryan said, but added, "We are not sure that there hasn't been a robbery. that's one of the things we are investigating."

Quinlan, reached by telephone at his Chicopee home, said he had been advised not to comment on the incident.

Civility Week gets mixed reaction

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Civility Week, a flood of lectures, exhibits and films punctuated by spirited rallies this week, has drawn scores of students, faculty and staff to highlight the University's efforts to promote racial harmony on campus.

Heralded by a colorful public relations effort, involving posters in addition to ribbons symbolizing various races, Civility Week has drawn mixed reactions since it began last Friday.

Grant Ingle, director of the Office of Human Relations, said an exact count of community participation in the various forums will be determined through a survey at the end of the week.

"I'm pleased with it," Ingle said. "There are a large number of faculty participants. It says that faculty are very concerned about these issues. There was a time in the past where this was considered a student affairs problem."

The event will culminate Friday with "Civility Day," a commemoration of the third anniversary of a racially motivated brawl in the Southwest Residential Area. The brawl, which involved some 2,000 students, occurred after the New York Mets defeated the Boston Red Sox in the seventh game of the World Series.

Organizers said the number of public and private events offered this year — numbering nearly 100 — are considerably more plentiful than in the past. But this year's culmination, Hands Around UMass, is similar to its predecessors.

The idea is a spinoff of last year's "Hands Across UMass," in which some 4,000 people joined hands and stretched a human chain starting from the Sylvan Residential Area across campus to the Horseshoe in Southwest.

"Hands Around UMass" participants will join hands and encircle the campus pond Friday for the week's grand finale, which organizers predict will draw thousands to the pond.

"We want to make it so it's a participatory activity," said Amy Blease, an organizer of the event. "It's making people reach out to someone they might not normally reach out to."

Blease, a junior and a member of the Alpha Zeta honor fraternity, said participants will join hands and form two concentric rings around the pond.

People in the inner circle will be facing the outer circle to promote greater response, she added.

"You can't see the other person on the other side of the pond as easily," she said. "There's going to be more participation when people are responding to each other."

The effort will be led by a free concert with Jane Sapp, an acclaimed folk blues singer. Sapp, who has spearheaded civil rights marches in the past, will be joined by the UMass Choir singing gospel music for the event.

During the concert, two torch-like staffs bearing the colors of Civility Week — black, red, yellow, beige, brown, and white — will be circulated throughout the crowd.

The staffs will begin circulating at opposite ends of the crowd. When the staffs return to their original position, the event will culminate in a "hug-off," Blease said.

"It's tremendous unity," she said. "From the Southwest incident, where there was great racism, to here, where we're building unity between people."

The Civility Committee is also comprised of student Britt Alschuler, UMass track star Precious Hill and Jason Kofman, an undergraduate student senator.

Prof plays chapel chimes

By SHARON WILKEY
Collegian Staff

No one wants to be treated like a machine, especially during Civility Week. But Kenneth Samonds says he is used to it.

"Everyone is so used to mechanical devices, no one thinks there is a person in here," the University of Massachusetts nutrition professor said yesterday.

"In here" is the Old Chapel, and Samonds is the man — not computerized gadget — that plays the chapel chimes.

After climbing the rickety stairs in the chapel tower, he made his Civility Week debut yesterday between classes. One of his tunes was "You have to be taught," which speaks about how people are not born racist, but learn to be, he said.

Samonds plays the chimes by pushing down wooden levers about three feet long with his hands. The levers are connected to metal poles that are connected to 10 bells two stories above.

"There is a certain excitement that goes with playing something this big that can be heard just about everywhere — whether people want to hear it or not," he said.

But he acknowledged two drawbacks: having only 10 bells limits his number of songs, and private practice is impossible.

Samonds, 47, learned to play chimes in high school and has played about four times a week at UMass since April. But to try a new song, he must do so in the public eye — or rather, ear.

He laughed about the "dry" title of this week's presentation (Music of Ethnic Diversity and Social Responsibility) and said he likes to play songs "tongue in cheek." Because of budget cuts, this semester he has played "Brother, can you spare a dime." On drizzly days he rings out "Raindrops keep falling on my head."

"I give everyone a weather report. If I can make one person smile at a silly song like that, I'm happy."

This week, Samonds said he wanted to play songs from different cultures, but has had difficulty finding ones he could play on ten bells. He said he will play such songs as "We shall overcome" and "Blowing in the wind" during the week.

And on Friday, for "Hands Around UMass," he will play the Beatles' "I wanna hold your hand."

Last year, the electrical bell system at the Tower Library played for Civility Week. Samonds says he prefers "real bells. To me, a university without bells is lacking something.'

Concerns surface at 'smivility' discussion

By WENDI LATTUCA
Collegian Correspondent

About 20 people crowded into the Martin Luther King Jr. Multicultural Center in Orchard Hill Monday night to discuss "real" issues at an open forum titled: "Civility Week, Smivility Week."

The forum, which included University of Massachusetts students, faculty, and staff, was held to voice concerns about Civility Week and seek alternative avenues to racial harmony on campus, said Ynez Wilkins, forum coordinator.

Many participants said they were frustrated because apathy has plagued progress at the University concerning issues of racism.

Hollis Cotton, a 1989 dean's list graduate, recalled an incident where apathy played a large role in his English class.

Two weeks into his freshman year and in front of a class of about 40 students, Cotton's professor called him "illiterate, silly, and stupid."

"Not one student raised an eyebrow, but instead agreed with the professor, saying, 'yeah, his commas and periods are even in the wrong place,'" Cotton recalled.

Participants overwhelmingly agreed that the current academic curriculum should be examined as well as attitudes concerning racism on campus.

The question of devoting one week to the issue of civility was also raised in criticism of the event.

"People who come and join civility week events aren't the ones who need to come," said junior Germaine St. Mary. "The students that attend are the ones who are aware of what's going on and want to see change, but the people who need to be reached aren't."

Many students attempted to find ways to reach the people who are unclear about racial and cultural issues. Wilkins suggested that students use "empathy and compassion as a starting point."

But freshman Daryll Pierre said stereotypes and other problems can only be dispelled if they are dealt with at an early age.

"Our system separates us at birth, where we grow up, what kind of schooling we've had," he said. "These are deep rooted stereotypes that are carried over. It is hard to change what they've known all their life."

A prison or waste dump?

Shortly after George Bush became President, he invited Michael Dukakis over for brunch and shook hands with Jesse Jackson.

These bold initiatives inspired a widely respected professional pundit to gush copiously about the new era of cooperation between the White House and Congress, and how we could finally begin working together to solve the problems facing the nation.

Al Arpad

I cut out that column so I would remember to laugh when things fall apart. I shouldn't have to wait long.

Some years ago, when it became apparent that business often fails to apply reasonable standards to regulate their own impact on the environment, environmentalists started trying to set enforceable legal standards for pollution and toxic waste disposal.

But, incredible as it seems, corporations fought hard for the right to pollute, and still do, because by doing so, they hope to make enough money to insulate themselves from the effects of their depradations.

Regular folks actually do the same thing on a smaller scale, transporting their garbage and sewage out of sight and out of mind, into Boston Harbor, for example, but only the people who own great chunks of predacious corporate interest have the resources for truly irresponsible pillage on the grand scale.

That's not news to most of us, but what many people don't seem to recognize is that the same principles apply to the ongoing tax debate.

We all know about the financial situation in Massachusetts, or at least some 20,000 who went to the Statehouse last week seem to know. Most of us also know about the federal deficit, which is similar to the Massachusetts problem, except the government in Washington allows itself a much bigger fudge factor to help hide the prevailing incompetence.

In both cases the people we elected to govern have caved into pressure, primarily generated by corporate interests, and kept taxes too low to pay the bills.

In Massachusetts our personal income taxes are about average, but taxes on business are the second lowest in the nation, while in Washington, George Bush is pushing hard for a reduction in the capital gains tax. This is no surprise.

Given the chance, business interests will generally squeeze out the maximum short term profit, because they hope that will give them the maximum advantage over the rest of us, no matter what happens next.

Neo-political leaders of the neo-left, Dukakis and Paul Tsongas in particular, have prided themselves on their good relations with business. They consistently fail to recognize what Chancellor Duffey said earlier this semester: "Business leaders," he said, "are notoriously bad in understanding their own self interests when it comes to public policy."

Given the chance, business interests will feed politicians a steady diet of campaign contributions and supply-side economics, until the situation in Massachusetts, or the whole country, becomes intolerable. They don't care what happens to public schools because their kids don't go to public schools, and when the labor force becomes too ignorant, they'll sell out at a profit and move to Arizona or Taiwan.

By then the University of Massachusetts will probably be either a prison or a toxic waste dump. Ha ha ha.

Last Wednesday, about 20,000 people participated in a rally in Boston to protest further cuts in public higher education.

Were you one of the 3,000 students from UMass who rallied? Or were you one of the hundreds left behind? Did you feel the rally was a success? How do you think the media portrayed the event? Did you feel it failed in its purpose to show students as respectable individuals?

Send your opinion to the Editorial desk by Thursday, October 26, by 4 p.m. for the Point/Counterpoint page. No late submissions whatsoever will be accepted!

Media may use wrong terms

The lead article of Monday's Collegian ("Pro-Choicers discuss abortion experiences," Oct. 23) illustrates what I see as an alarming tendency in the media.

As a person who supports a woman's right to choose in regard to abortion, I have no problem with the term "pro-choice."

I do, however, have a problem with the label, "pro-life."

I am disturbed by these casual, misleading and inaccurate references to a group that should be more accurately described as anti-choice, or anti-abortion.

What concerns me is when members of the pro-choice movement itself (including the Hampshire College Theater Collective member quoted in the story) also use this term. I realize that many people use the term without thinking, but it is the media's role to question.

It is precisely the blind acceptance of this term, in a larger scale, that has lulled hundreds of thousands of people who don't have a strong belief in either side of this issue into accepting the latest abortion restrictions.

I can't believe the media would describe the pro-choice movement "the right side" merely because we believe we are. If we allow anti-choicers to call themselves "pro-life" aren't we allowing them to define to opposing side? I don't consider myself anti-life, and I can't believe the 700,000 or so who marched with me in Washington are "anti-life either." One of the goals of Civility Week is supposed to be addressing "hot campus issues," and I hope everyone will consider what the term implies before they say or write "pro-life."

PSRU: Peacemakers, or tie-dyed thugs?

UMass: October 25, 1999 — On the tenth anniversary of their "Day of Action" uprising, Repugnant People for a Socialist University (RPSU) staged a "reunion takeover" of the Fine Arts Center, citing the FAC's link to the Pentagon.

Approximately 150 protesters stormed the building, smearing political slogans on the walls in both oil and acryllic paint.

"Paint and blood don't mix," said RPSU leader Farthington Wilcox, who charged that the UMass Art Club creates the Defense Department's stationery and banquet invitations.

Protestors are specifically demanding the resignation of ceramics Professor Jordana Markman. The RPSU claims Markman once designed a coffee mug for the Coast Guard Reserves . . .

If you feel the above fictional glimpse at the future is ludicrous, you must be new to the Five College Area. For the youngsters, here is a brief flashback of the protestors' charming presence on campus last semester.

Darren Garnick

Citing the danger of UMass anthrax research being applied to biochemical weapons, a group calling itself "People for a Socially Responsible University" took over, on separate occasions, Memorial Hall and the Lederle Graduate Research Center.

All they wanted was dialogue, they said. Communication.

The administration tried talking with the PSRU.

But the PSRU would rather talk at you than with you. They debate with a mobile studio-audience close by, ready to activate their laugh track when something intelligent is said. Snicker! Snicker! Sneer! Sneer!

The PSRU responds to questions with ready-made slogans and rhymes. Suggest that their sing-along avoids the issue, and they simply sing louder. Anyone who dares disagree with the PSRU's tactics is, of course, either a fool or a fascist. Consider me both.

Before dismissing me as some Barry Goldwatery ultra-conservative, consider this: I proudly voted for Dukakis in 1988 and I agree with most liberal and feminist viewpoints. I love protests and wholeheartedly embrace nonviolent mass demonstrations.

The PSRU, however, is not a group of dissidents modeled after Andre Sahkarov. They are shameless, self-promoting imbeciles who rely on protests for their self-identity.

Last May when the University suspended students who were arrested at the takeover sites, PSRU "hunger-strikers" vowed not to eat until the suspensions were reversed. A few days later when media attention began to wean, out came the tofu burgers.

When these tie-dyed thugs are not mugging for the camera, they destroy property and things. In midst of the Graduate Tower siege, some demonstrators "nonviolently" intimidated the office secretaries, harassing them verbally and searching through their personal property. Secretary Martha Martin told the Collegian that when the "125 students came storming into the office, they might as well have considered us pieces of furniture."

The fact that most of these protestors are in it for the drama is evident when the police show up to a PSRU event. Inane references to Kent State or Beijing are yelled. A few songs are sung. And then everyone goes home.

After one of these "ordeals," the PSRU begins their period of superfluous self-congratulation. At the end of the evening, global misery still persists — but, hey, at least they got on TV! The PSRU videotapes themselves for posterity, documenting how ineffective they are in solving a problem.

Today, the saga continues. October 25th, according to the white stenciled fists spray painted all over campus, is the "Day of Action." Oooooh! Run for your lives!

No matter what "action" the PSRU takes today, one thing is certain. They are bound to embarrass themselves and once again bring further discredit to a worthwhile cause.

Political character is dull

Last week, I caught myself conforming to the ideas of others. Although I consider myself an independent liberal thinker, my opinion was all but pre-determined for me.

Because of my Polish heritage, I've taken an interest in Poland's revolution. An issue that has arisen from Solidarity's victory in the Polish government is the amount of money that America should commit to regenerate the devastated Polish economy.

Craig Berger

In Washington, Democrats and Republicans squared off, with the Democrats in Congress proposing that $1.2 billion should be allocated, while the Bush administration initially offered just $100 million.

The results have been predictable, as the Democrats accuse the administration of being insensitive to the Polish people's needs and even "sentimental" ending the Cold War.

The Washington Republicans defended Bush's position while accusing the Democrats of trying to make the president seem weak on foreign affairs and slow in reaction to change.

My reaction was as predictable as the Washington bureaucrats. Being the Northeast liberal that I am, I sided with the Democrats. I rationalized that the citizens of Poland need our help, and it is America's obligation to assist any country, who's people desire freedom.

Without our aid, the Polish economy would never recover and their new free-market economy would not succeed.

And then came my revelation. What if, I thought to myself, the sides were flipped and the democratic consensus was that our economic aid should be limited, while the Administration was willing to commit the $1.2 billion. I conjured up an image of William F. Buckley pleaing for American citizens to support Bush's plan to give the Polish government over a billion dollars in economic aid.

"Imperialists!" I would righteously cry. "All they want to do is set up American McDonald's and Coca-Cola factories in Poland without any concern for the Polish people."

But this was not the case and therefore, that was not my opinion, until I caught myself politically conforming. My point is not whether to side with the Democrats or Republicans.

That issue is a matter of black and white, and I'm more concerned with the grey in-between. The unordinary shades of grey of American politics often turn to black and white due to the political conformity I'm talking about.

Realistically, the United States is a two-party system in which both parties encourage party unity which turns into political conformity. As voters, American citizens are expected to support one of just two parties and I see that being subliminal oppression.

With insolence, Americans scoff at the Soviet Union for holding one-party elections, but are we so diverse with two? Of course the American system is open to any party, but when was the last time a politician represented you who wasn't a Republican or Democrat?

The fact is, American politicians need the support of one of the political parties and often exchange their differing ideas for party backing. The comprises that our leaders have made has constricted American democracy and dulled the country's political character.

The racial problems and politics are deep rooted. Although he said he never participated, Boyle remembers protests on campus.

"The 60s were turbulent times in the country, and it reflected in the activities on campus," Boyle said.

He said the protests, however, were never disruptive. Racial problems also existed on campus during this era of peace and love. Similarly, the racial problems were not as violent or disturbing.

The campus pond, Boyle's favorite spot on campus, is still here. Some things do stay the same.

THIRD WORLD AFFAIRS

The creation of a Third World Affairs page

After years of silence and relegation to cultural exotica, the citizens of the Third World have found their voice. This page, and like the nations we come from, was born out of struggle. Over recent weeks a growing number of Third World nationals reacted initially in disbelief, then in anger to the callous racism directed against some of us, namely Muslims, Arabs, and Palestinians, in the pages of this very daily.

What did it take for us to be recognized as a legitimate and unique constituency subject to discrimination of a form not even recognized by most of this campus? It took petitions, letters to the editor, sit-ins, and a voluntarily administered workshop on racism held in the offices of this paper.

Pratip Dastidar

The ostensible rationale for our presence in your country according to your government is two-fold: firstly, to contribute to American academic research and to benefit from the intellectual resources of this nation, and secondly, to enrich our lives and yours with a diversity of cultural, social, and political perspectives. We feel that while our first mission has been successful, we have failed in the second.

Have you ever wondered why so few of us dare to participate in the intellectual discourse on this campus? We submit that the answer lies a) in an often exaggerated fear of reprisal (the right of free speech does not seem to extend to us) and b) in ourselves, for many of us are unwilling to critically examine our often corrupt and neocolonial ruling elites and only too willing to emulate our former white rulers.

Despite these realities, some of us will continue to speak out from a perspective rarely heard in this nation, that of 80 percent of humanity. What we have to offer on this page are the opinions of Third World nations who feel that cultural fairs and international dances do not permit intellectual expression, that being non-European and of color calls for pride and self-respect, not silence and apathy.

This week has been designated Civility Week by the powers that be. Civility does not mean soothing words, paternalism and no structural change. We share the outrage of our Afro-American colleagues over the recent racial attacks directed against them. We know how it feels to hear the rhetoric of civility and to be confronted with silence when the struggle for institutional change commences.

We wish to thank Afro-American students for standing with us in our joint struggle to bring back the Black Affairs page and to create this one. So join us bi-weekly as we examine the issues and events of the often-ignored parts of a world that has shrunk with the advent of jets, satellites, and FAX machines.

Tibetan speaks on occupation

By ROBIN VARGHESE
Collegian Staff

This year marks the thirtieth anniversary of the Chinese invasion and subsequent occupation of Tibet. Last Thursday, Tenzin Tethong, the Dalai Lama's official representative to North America, and Bob Thurman, president of the American Institute for Buddhist Studies and professor of Indo-Tibetan Buddhism at Columbia University, presented a lecture on the nature and consequences of the Chinese occupation of Tibet in a program sponsored by the Peace and World Security Studies program.

"What we are seeing is the total destruction of a people, a culture, and an environment," said Tethong.

Tibet has been under Chinese occupation since 1959 and has been under martial law since March 7 of this year. In the course of the occupation, 1.2 million Tibetans of a total population of 6 million have been killed, said Tethong. The Chinese government, according to the human rights group Asia Watch, has also engaged in a policy of forced sterilization and abortion of Tibetans.

According to Thurman, in 1983 China began the practice of colonizing Tibet by forcing mass immigration of Han Chinese, the majority ethnic group, into the region with the object of forced assimilation. The result of China's occupation and policy of repression has resulted in a Tibetan refugee population of 120,000.

China's environmental policy towards Tibet has led to an ecological catastrophe according to Tethong. Deforestation in Tibet, the source of many of the major rivers of Asia, has led to flooding in China, India, and Bangladesh. The region has also seen the indiscriminate killing of wildlife and fowl, a practice alien to the Tibetans, said Tethong.

Of the more than 6,000 Buddhist monasteries, the repositories of Tibetan learning, knowledge, and culture, which existed before the 1959 invasion, only about 400 are open today. However, these monasteries are not allowed to perform the educational role they historically played, said Tethong.

Bob Thurman chastised the response of the rest of the world to the Chinese invasion and occupation of Tibet. Thus far, no nation has recognized the Tibetan government in exile or questioned the legitimacy of the Chinese annexation of Tibet.

"We are citizens of a country whose government is part of a conspiracy of silence," said Thurman. "Someone is being killed, and everyone is pretending that that person never lived."

Thurman argued that the United States' unwillingness to address the issue of Tibet stems from the perceived importance of China to the United States in geopolitical issues and the potential loss of the Chinese market.

"The struggle is in the mind of man, whether Tibetan, Chinese, or American," said Thurman. "The question that has to be answered is is life really worth it?"

Tethong stated that the reason for supporting Tibet is that it is part of the human legacy, and it touches all of the people in the world.

"If freedom can't exist in one part of the world, all our freedoms are lessened," said Tethong.

The solution offered by the Tibetan government in exile does not necessarily call for complete independence. Speaking at the European Parliament in Strassbourg in 1988, the Dalai Lama proposed a federation of China and Tibet.

Thurman offered another solution. Pointing to the vast amounts of money spent by China and India, who fought a war in 1962, defending their borders, Thurman proposes that Tibet can act as a demilitarized buffer zone separating the two nations.

Tethong pointed to three major recent developments as progress for the Tibetan self-determination movement. In September, the student leaders for the Chinese Federation for Democracy at a conference in Paris addressed the issue of Tibet for the first time, acknowledging that their government may not have been portraying an accurate depiction of the situation in Tibet.

Tethong has also been talking to the Soviet government about an official visit by the Dalai Lama to the Soviet Union. He also expressed hopes that the Dalai Lama's recent Nobel Peace Prize would increase global awareness of the issue of Tibet.

Reynolds bursts back big time with Breaking In

By GEORGE LENTZ
Collegian Correspondent

In 1972, British director John Boorman brought James Dickey's novel "Deliverance" to the screen. Nominated for several Academy Awards, including Best Picture and Best Director, the film would fail to overcome its competition with Francis Ford Coppola's The Godfather. But despite its failure at the Oscars, Deliverance managed to bring future success to one of its stars, a moderately known actor by the name of Burt Reynolds. To this day, Deliverance is considered to be Reynolds' best film, the one time he played a character rather than a caricature.

His career took off like a rocket, but with the exceptions of Hooper and Starting Over, most of his films throughout the 70's and 80's were unbelievably bad. By 1985, Reynolds' star had become tarnished. Audiences were sick and tired of shelling out five bucks to see Burt clown around in mindless crap like Stroker Ace, Cannonball Run I and II, and Switching Channels. Reynolds career fizzled both critically and commercially, stripping the actor of his once dominant box-office appeal. With his career in serious jeopardy, Reynolds needed a good script, a good character and a good director in order to stage a comeback. Finally, he has found them.

It's been well over 15 years since Burt Reynolds has turned in a quality performance, but given a good script and a good character, a comeback was not out of the question.

Written by John Sayles (Matewan, Eight Men Out) and directed by Bill Forsyth (Gregory's Girl, Housekeeping), Breaking In is the answer to Reynolds' prayers.

Reynolds plays Ernie, a 61 year old safecracker who is sailing into the sunset of his career. He's moved around the country to avoid leaving a trail and has settled too comfortably into a life of crime. The old job just doesn't have that sense of excitement anymore.

That is, until he meets Mike (Casey Siemaszko), a young car mechanic who likes breaking into houses just for the fun of it. The two of them cross paths when they both unknowingly break into the same house. Mike gets a kick out of Ernie's safecracking skills, while Ernie is intrigued by the kid's carefree attitude, something he once had, and would like to get back.

A partnership develops as Ernie sets up a number of "jobs," to teach Mike the professional approach to burglary, while the kid keeps him on his toes, giving him the motivation to stay on the job. But as the money pours in, Mike becomes careless and violates Ernie's cardinal rule about sitting on your cash 'til the heat blows over. Furious that Mike could be so stupid, Ernie ends the partnership, but the two flounder in their individual pursuits. They need one another and eventually reunite for one last break in.

THE SCREENING ROOM

Reynolds is wonderful in a role perfectly suited for him at this juncture in his career. He remains in character throughout the film, and turns in a surprisingly comic performance that isn't full of the cockiness of his previous ones. He's too likeable a personality to condemn, and his performance here is sure to win back a lot of the popular appeal he has since lost.

Although Reynolds is sure to draw most of the attention in this film, Casey Siemaszko certainly won't go unnoticed. His character is a little odd and out-to-lunch at times, but Siemaszko resists playing him as an idiot, giving him instead a sense of innocence that makes him appealing rather than pathetic.

Breaking In is a refreshingly light comedy that keeps the material light, and the laughs evenly dispersed. John Sayles deserves credit for creating some wonderfully comic characters and genuinely funny situations. Among the best is a scene when Mike and Ernie break into a supermarket by coming in through the roof and climbing down a rope. The scene involves a great vertical tracking shot that follows the rope down to a Doberman pinscher waiting for them at the bottom. As Mike and Ernie stand still, expecting to be ripped to shreds, the tension is hilariously broken as the Doberman casually stretches out, completely disinterested by their intrusion.

Among the film's great performances, Maury Chaykin as Mike's lawyer almost steals the film. When the police catch up to Mike after tracking his prints on the cash he's been suspending, Chaykin explains the sentencing scenario to him, "If they give you ten, you do five. If they give you five, you do two. It's like logarithms."

Scottish director Bill Forsyth keeps things moving along smoothly and adds some brilliant comic touches of his own to Sayles' script.

Burt Reynolds' career was deserving of a second chance, and Breaking In more than covers the ground for him.

Opening this week, just in time for Halloween, is Wes Craven's Shocker. The film looks suspiciously like Craven's A Nightmare on Elm Street, trading in Freddie Krueger for Horace Pinker, a real nasty guy who's given the electric chair only to come back and terrorize his victims through (I kid you not) their appliances.

Erik the Viking, the long awaited fantasy/comedy/adventure from Monty Python alumnus Terry Jones is to be finally released this week. The film sports some incredible visual effects and stars Bull Durham's Tim Robbins, and the great John Cleese, another former Python member, in a supporting role.

Crowd gets hyper when Camper "Gets Wasted"

By JAY BRIDA
Collegian Correspondent
and JODY GABIN
Collegian Staff

In this day and age, few bands can match the musical diversity of Camper Van Beethoven, and on Monday night at Pearl Street in Northampton, they proved that their genius isn't merely a studio creation. It is virtually useless to try to pigeonhole their sound, for with no other band can one skank to a ska beat, or slam to a Russian dirge. While not the most boisterous band personality wise, Camper Van Beethoven has an inherent energy in their music that moves the masses.

They started off their two-hour set a bit slowly, with newer songs that seemed to be warm-up material. Pearl Street really started to cook however, when the band dug into their past and came up with "I Was So Wasted." After that, the bodies started to fly, the sweat started to drip, and we were treated to the best they had to offer.

They rattled off old stand-bys such as "Take the Skinheads Bowling," and "Joe Stalin's Cadillac," as well as the newer "Pictures of Matchstick Men" to keep the adrenaline-rushed collegiate crowd in an up-tempo mode.

Sandwiched in the middle of the set were a few off-beat traditional American folk tunes, one of which the band's new violinist, Morgan Fichter (formerly of the bay area band the Cat Heads), introduced to the rest of the members.

Following a brief sing-a-long, lead vocalist David Lowery told us a story of his elementary school field trip to hell. With the refrain, "I don't want to go to the Lincoln shrine," we learned of his purgatory.

After slowing the crowd down with their folk songs, the band performed "Good Guys and Bad Guys," and "One of These Days." Their first set ended with "Tania," and after a brief break they returned with "Eye of Fatima Parts I and II."

During their encores, they demonstrated more of their varied style rather than relying on their "pogo stick" songs, and for their grand finale performed a cover of the Rolling Stones classic, "Sweet Virginia."

Overall, Camper Van Beethoven didn't differ too much from their show last fall in the Student Union ballroom, however this time around they seemed tighter and more responsive to the crowd.

Opening act Syd Straw presented us with a gritty set of white bread wheat-belt soul music, at times straying into country with numbers such as "Blue Shadows on the Trail," her contribution to last year's Stay Awake Disney compilation, other times trying to rock the house with more rockabilly-influenced material.

Beauty from Schloff, shlock from Brown

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Greg Brown/Barb Schloff
Iron Horse
Sunday, Oct. 22

If you're a fan of Garrison Keillor's A Prairie Home Companion radio show, you're probably familiar with Greg Brown. From 1883 to 1985, Brown provided the musical segment of the show. His simple, quirky songs about farming and dull country life won him a rather large following.

Brown brought those, and other quirky songs to the Iron Horse, Sunday night. And most of his material, although funny, and at times hilarious, more often than not slipped into trite and boring.

Dressed in all black except for his brown, leather cowboy boots, Brown was the typical mid-western folk singer. Many of his songs deal with typical topics that other folk singers have analyzed to death.

"Things Will Never Be that Good Again" is about his fond memories of his carefree, adolescent days. "Who Woulda Thunk It" is his hippie turned yuppie song. "(Help Me Make It Through This) Funky Day" is his "I'm having a bad day" song, (although it did contain some humorous lines, such as "It's been Tuesday all week."). 'What's Gonna Happen to Our Little Town?" is about ... well, I think you can figure it out.

Brown can spin the clever lyric, as he did in "You Better Come Back to Me," a song he introduced as "a tale of love from Southern Iowa." With lyrics like the opening line "I'm sorry I hit you/I'm sorry I wrecked your car," it will never be in contention for the official love song of Iowa.

A few of his between song mumblings were funny. But his humor was often painfully obvious, and his few "serious" songs only demonstrated why he sticks primarily with humorous ones. The sole exception was "They Fooled Me Once," a beautifully disturbing ballad about a troubled youth. "Mama died when I was 16/She was shitfaced behind the wheel/You don't pray to a god who takes your mom/and leaves you with a home full of junk." Powerful stuff.

Barb Schloff, who opened for Bill Morrissey two weeks ago at the Iron Horse, did the same for Brown. Even with an apparent cold, her voice maintained her entire dynamic range.

The angelic-voiced, eternally optimistic singer introduced "January Blue," a mystical ballad on the winter doldrums, as "a song my aerobics teacher likes and wants to put in her stretch class. You know you've really made it when you're played in aerobics." She then told the crowd to "feel free to stretch."

Her short, five-song set included the beautiful "Finally Right," and closed with the touching yet tough "Waiting," which demonstrated that she is not just a naive idealist. For, although she tells her boyfriend that she will wait for him, she lets him know, "I think I'm overdue/For some attention."

It's a pity that she was just getting warmed up when she had to leave. An evening of Barb Schloff would have been much more enjoyable than an evening of Greg Brown.

Comedian Jeni yuks it up for comedy night

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

> "Without getting too philosophical, I think I can safely say that my career has been an elaborate plot to get laid."
> —Richard Jeni

With the specter of schoolwork looming like a hangman's noose, temporary relief is on the way. Recently voted best club comedian in Comedy USA magazine's survey of 200 professional comics, Brooklyn-born Richard Jeni brings his ribald sarcasm and probing intellect to the Campus Center Auditorium on Wednesday, Oct. 25 at 8 p.m. Admission is $3.

In addition to appearing on four Showtime specials, he has starred in HBO's most recent Young Comedians Special, made several appearances on Johnny Carson's Tonight Show (the critical barometer of a comedian's desirability), and performed in and produced his own 30-minute Showtime Network Comedy Special, The Boy From New York City, broadcast last month.

Indeed, the prolific Jeni is harvesting the rewards of his perseverance — adulation, wealth and satisfaction. However, he was not always so happy. At 24, spiritually bankrupt from laboring at a series of meaningless jobs, living at home with his parents with no money in his pockets or direction in his life, Jeni succumbed to depression. "I just wasn't cut out for the nine to five scene. I couldn't go on indefinitely getting jobs and losing them," he said.

In 1981, fate intervened when his girlfriend, on assignment for her college newspaper, dared him to get on stage at Pip's, a Brooklyn comedy club hosting a Wednesday night amateur night. He accepted the challenge and promptly bombed, continuing to do so for a year. Nonetheless, he had ultimately discovered the meaning of life, unearthed his Holy Grail. "There was something irresistible about getting laughs — no matter how few — by saying things into the dark," he said. "I was learning to be a comedian and doing great with women, all at the same time. I knew then and there it was a great career move."

Jeni may be funny, but he's no bozo. Intelligent and articulate, he possesses an honors degree in political science from Hunter College.

Eddie Brill, who opened for Judy Tenuta last semester, will do the same for Jeni. The show is sponsored by the B.O.G. Program Council and the Greek Area Government.

OK
IT'S CALLED "GROSS OUT." YOU SAY THE GROSSEST THING YOU CAN IMAGINE, AND THEN I TRY TO THINK OF SOMETHING EVEN GROSSER.
WHOEVER COMES UP WITH THE GROSSEST THING GETS A POINT, AND WE PLAY UNTIL SOMEONE GETS 50 POINTS, OK?
I THINK I ALREADY KNOW WHO'S GOING TO WIN.
IT'S WEIRD. NOBODY HAS EVER PLAYED A WHOLE GAME WITH ME.

OKAY, EVERYBODY, BEFORE WE READ THROUGH THE NEXT FEW SCENES, LET ME GIVE YOU A QUICK SYNOPSIS.
THE RAID HAS TAKEN A SERIOUS TOLL ON BUSH'S SQUAD. TWO AVENGERS ARE RIDDLED BY FLAK, WOUNDING THE TAIL-GUNNER IN ONE OF THEM.
WHEN THE BOYS GET BACK TO THE CARRIER, THEY'RE TIRED AND EMOTIONALLY SPENT. THEY HEAD FOR THE OFFICERS' MESS, WHERE THEY LOSE THEMSELVES IN A NIGHT OF SERIOUS DRINK!
DO I GO?
NO, YOU RETURN TO QUARTERS AND WRITE THANK-YOU NOTES TO YOUR CREW.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

ARIES (March 21 – April 19): Professional organizations and social clubs seek your membership. You are rewarded when you reach out to help others. An exercise program seems certain to succeed. Romance is blissful.

TAURUS (April 20 – May 20): Continue to use methods that will lead to job security. Nothing important should be left to chance. Making a list of necessities before you shop will help you save money.

GEMINI (May 21 – June 20): Take a good look at joint financial ventures. You may be more ambitious than you admit. Compromise and you will keep as grudge from getting out of hand. Romance is sweet.

CANCER (June 21 – July 22): We all have a hidden strength that can come to our aid in times of stress. Stay cool even if tempers flare. Do everything possible to enhance your public image. Forget old grievances.

LEO (July 23 – August 22): Smarten up! Your stubborn resistance to change is not in your best interest. An aptitude for computers will soon be rewarded. A candid talk will produce fabulous results.

VIRGO (Aug. 23 – Sept. 22): Reconsider if you are thinking about relocating. Making better use of your talents could lead to a second income. Group functions are favored this evening. Extend the olive branch.

LIBRA (Sept. 23 – Oct. 22): Do not be shy about touting your talents. Your job performance is being reviewed, putting your in line for a possible raise or promotion. An older person could tempt you romantically. Resist!

SCORPIO (Oct 23 – Nov. 21): Be wise enough to accept change. Discard outmoded methods. Attending night school could result in increased earning power. An unusual relationship blossoms. Self-improvement projects are favored.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22 – Dec. 21): Work is fulfilling, but it is not everything. Join clubs and organizations to widen your social circle. Rearrange your furniture to give your home a more comfortable feel.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22 – Jan. 19): Resist temptation to kick over the traces in your personal Remember your responsibilities. Take time to let family members know how much you love them

AQAURIUS (Jan. 20 – Feb.18): Educational opportunities open up. Do not read more into a neighbor's passing remark than is intended. An exercise program will make you look and feel better in the near future.

PISCES (Feb 19 – March 20): Not a good time for speculative ventures. Avoid all forms of gambling. Do expect to be fairly compensated for your skills, however. Grocery coupons and brown-bag lunches will help you economize.

Weekend experimentation over for UMass

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

It is not often that a team can afford to experiment in games, especially if it is in the heat of a playoff race. But when the University of Massachusetts field hockey team played Springfield College and Rhode Island over the weekend, UMass coach Pam Hixon decided to work on her strategy for tonight's game at Boston University (7 p.m.).

"We managed to work on some things that we might need to use in our game against BU," Hixon said. "We really experimented with a couple of things, so I thought the weekend was really productive."

The tests were given to the defense who must contain BU forward Sally Maxwell. Maxwell (four goals and seven assists) and Tamarah Klein (8, 2) are the Terriers' most dangerous threats. Lisa Brone also has been on the scoring end quite a bit this year with seven goals and one assist.

"BU's strength is their right side," Hixon said. "We really worked on trying to deny our opponents the ability to go to the right. We tried to overplay our left so that they had to use their left. We took away one side of the field and it worked very well."

The Minutewomen shut out both URI (6-0) and SC (2-0). But BU is in a different class than those two teams. The Terriers are the No. 12 team in the NCAA's latest poll, with a 10-4 record. It is unlikely that things will come as easy as over the past weekend and Hixon is still preparing her backfield.

"We still have some bugs and some details to work out as far as the complete strategy is concerned but that [the weekend games] was very good for us," Hixon said.

Saturday's game with URI was switched from Totman's grass field to Springfield College because rain on Friday drenched Totman. Sunday's game with Springfield was a make-up game for one that was canceled last Thursday. With BU's surface being of artificial grass, those two events may have been blessings in disguise for UMass.

"The two games this weekend on turf were very good for us," Hixon said.

So, now there is not a transition from the last game to this from grass to turf. The Minutewomen have had to make that transition many times this year but Hixon has come up with a strategy that has been successful up to this point.

"All along our style of play in my mind has had to be one in my mind that I can use on both grass and turf without much change," Hixon said. "And so far that's worked."

It has worked almost always. The Minutewomen are 11-4-1 and ranked No. 8 in the country. UMass moved up a notch in the poll this week after its two weekend wins. Playing on turf is not Hixon's biggest concern right now.

"For us, it's a matter of really coming together as a team," Hixon said. "and playing 70 minutes. With the exception of a couple of games we've been very much of one half or another half team."

UMass has three games to get used to playing for 70 minutes before it starts the Atlantic 10 tournament. The Minutewomen have clinched a spot in the tourney with a 3-1 conference record. And barring any major disasters, the NCAA tourney looms after that. And unless UMass wants to plan on an early exit from both those tourneys, the Minutewomen will need to give the complete effort.

"We'll come out and play 35, 40 minutes great and then we kind of struggle for a period of time," Hixon said. "We're looking to put together 70 minutes for Wednesday night because that's really what it will take."

BU is in third place in the North Atlantic Conference behind the University of New Hampshire, which UMass beat 2-0 about a week and a half ago and Northeastern, who UMass tied, 1-1, earlier in the year.

"In the whole scheme of things, it will be very important," Hixon said. "This week is another big one."

Big because after BU, Connecticut, the No. 13 team in the country and a team that UMass has had many a battle with in the past, comes to town Saturday.

There will be no experimenting tonight or Saturday.

Soccer looks to win 4th straight

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

Rolling off a four-game winning streak, the first such streak of good luck this season, the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team looks to stop Providence College here on the Hill at 2 p.m. The Minutemen are currently 5-8-2 for the season and are fourth in the Atlantic 10 Eastern Division with one win and two losses in the conference.

"We're not changing our strategy," said assistant coach John Martin. "We're in a groove and looking to exploit our style of play."

Despite sophomore Darren Stone sitting this one out because of his ejection during the Colgate game, Martin is very confident with the starting lineup.

Doug Karet, Brett Anthony and Ray Cunha will start up front. Supporting offense includes Steve Cesnek, Carl Hanks, Pete McEvoy and Dan Lawrence. The defense powerhouse is governed by seniors Evan Buxner, Tom Skiba and Gael Sullivan. As usual, Louis Hollmeyer is expected to come off the bench, in the face of his broken nose.

Steve Armenti will start in goal. He has allowed only one goal in the last four. Because of his outstanding play last week, Armenti was named Atlantic-10 Player of the Week.

Providence is a young team, having only one senior on their roster. They are currently 5-6-3 for the season. They recently lost to Boston University, 2-0, who is ranked third in New England. An impressive double-overtime hold-off against the University of Connecticut was unexpected (1-1), considering UConn is fourth in New England.

Junior John Martin and sophomore Jeff Caiola hold three goals and three assists apiece, leading the team. The co-captains follow up in points with senior Tony Barreira having two goals and two assists and junior Dwaine Shanley having one goal and four assists. Starting 12 of 14 games in the goal is Jim Morris. He has a 1.8 percent goals against average with two shutouts thus far.

Dubliners Shanley and freshman Dennis Clark are big players for PC. Shanley is a sweeper and a target player to boot. "He's their main man," Martin said. "The team looks to him." Of Clark, Martin said, "He's good at distributing the ball in midfield, but I think we can stop him.

"If we can play good soccer," said Martin. "They'll lose their shape and then we can create opportunities."

Women's tennis closes out season

By C.J. ABATI

The University of Massachusetts women's tennis team concluded its season last weekend on a disappointing note. Their final duel match of the season took place on Friday with a match with the University of Vermont. The match, in Burlington Vt., ended in a 6-3 loss for the Minutewomen, and dropped their record to 4-6.

"It was a close match," head coach Edwin Gentzler stated. "I thought we were going to win, but we just didn't get the job done."

The match was closer than the score dictated. Several matches went to a third-set tie break, but the Minutewomen could not score the big points. Venessa Kershner played at -2 singles and won in straight sets 6-2, 7-6. Kere Eddy won her singles match 7-6, 7-5. Maura Foley and Amy Ryan, a new third doubles tandem, also won their match in straight sets.

UMass also participated in the New England Championships, and ended up getting the short end of the stick. Three teams pulled out at the last minute, thus giving UMass a poorer seed. With the absence of Hartford, Connecticut and Rhode Island, the Minutewomen were ranked last among the remaining five teams. UMass was forced to play top-ranked Providence College, and was quickly eliminated.

"I know the coaches had their reasons for pulling out," Gentzler said. "But we had to pay for it. It was very disappointing."

"We had our chance to beat Providence, but we didn't do it. I was planning on being placed in the middle, and then playing Providence in the second round."

As a team, the Minutewomen didn't fare too well, but their were some individual accomplishments. Kere Eddy and Amy Ryan finished third and fourth, respectively, in their No. 3 and No. 4 singles groups. Shizuko Yamasaki and Venessa Kershner took third in No. 1 doubles group.

Coach Gentzler is already looking forward to next spring. He feels his team will be improved and ready to play.

"We play so many matches in the fall that I push them to the best of their technical ability. In the winter, I add new material and new concepts to adapt in the spring. This is the real coaching part of the year. I'm looking forward to next spring. I expect to have a fine season," Gentzler said optimistically.

Volleyball to host Eagles

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Correspondent

After losing to the University of Rhode Island this past weekend, the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team (2-16) hopes to start another Totman winning streak as they take on Boston College (7 p.m.) at home.

The Eagles (8-15 overall and 2-5 in the Big East), idle for two days, are coming in after going 0-4 at the Syracuse Tournament this weekend. They'll certainly be hungry for a victory as are the Minutewomen.

"B.C. is a good team but they're not as good as Yale," UMass coach Carol Ford said.

B.C.'s Terry Shanahan and middlehitter Jennifer Smith are two players who might give the Minutewomen some problems. They lead the Eagles in kills with 2.78 and 2.27 per game, respectively.

The Minutewomen lost a close match to Yale last Friday (14-16, 2-15, 11-15), playing one of their best matches of the season. If UMass can play as well as they did that night, they have a great chance of putting a 'W' in the win column.

One thing's for sure, the Minutewomen do not want a repeat of their performance against URI, being blown out in three straight games. Nothing was right for UM, which committed several errors and many rookie mistakes.

"I was very disappointed with our performance against URI," Ford said. "Our problem was basically our mental game. In practice, we went back to the basics."

Losing to the Eagles earlier in the season in September, the Minutewomen have something to prove to B.C. and to themselves.

"We basically just showed up in September," Ford said.

Captain Nancy Sullivan thinks B.C. is in for a surprise. "There's a big difference in our blocking and defense from the first time we played them."

Freshman middle hitter Sharon Panoff added, "We were not satisfied with our play against URI. We have individual talent. We've just got to do it."

Protesters block construction

By MEREDITH O'BRIEN

Some two dozen students stopped construction of a $5 million engineering research facility yesterday at the University of Massachusetts for three hours to protest Defense Department-financed research on campus.

Holding signs and chanting, "Hey, hey, ho, ho, DOD has got to go," the protesters entered the site around 12:30 p.m. after a heated scuffle with about five counter-protesters who attempted to block the crowd.

No arrests were made and the students left the site peacefully at 3:30 p.m., the end of the workday, as police and administrators looked on. It has not been determined if disciplinary action will be taken against the students, who came from UMass, Hampshire College, and Smith College in Northampton.

At a rally on the steps of the Student Union Building preceding the takeover, PSRU member Deidre Brower, a freshman, listed the group's demands.

The demands include open access to research information and the University's relationship to government agencies and the activation of a five-year plan to convert military funding to civilian funding.

"We want to send a message to Washington that we need and deserve civilian sources of research funding," Brower said. "If the Defense Department and defense contractors think that they are welcome on our campus, they are wrong."

The protesters, many of whom were wearing bandannas to symbolize protesters banned from campus during similar takeovers last spring, sat on the dirt-filled buckets of backhoes and other equipment to prevent further construction.

About 40 students gathered on the other side of the fence to jeer at the protesters. The hecklers and protesters then engaged in a heated dispute over DOD funding.

The protesters said they plan to return to the site today and continue the demonstration.

Dennis L. Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, said, administrators are working in conjunction with the deans of students in the Five College area to consider disciplinary actions.

"We encourage disagreement and dissent, but we can't tolerate the disruption of this building," he said.

The engineering building, granted to the University by state law, is expected to alleviate the School of Engineering's current space shortage by providing offices and research facilities for electrical and computer engineers, according to UMass spokesperson Helen Wise.

Richard Barry, one of the counterprotesters who was involved in the struggle at the start of the protest, said he was part of a group of "concerned" students who denounce the protesters.

"They say they're non-violent, but I got punched in the chest. People were grabbing my arm and trying to pull me away," Barry said.

If DOD funding were to cease, bio-chemistry major John Snoonian said, "Funding would just go to another school.

"They're not respecting engineering students here, and are infringing on other students' rights," Snoonian said.

Last spring, 151 arrests were made during six separate building takeovers to protest anthrax and other DOD research at the University.

While protesters occupied the construction site of an engineering research building yesterday, contractors sat idly by as their workday was halted three hours early.

Students climbed aboard backhoes and other equipment at the site at about 1 p.m. and remained until 3:30 p.m., blocking further construction on the $5 million building.

Joe Paulovics, a backhoe operator, sat in the cab of his backhoe for 30 minutes while protestors gathered on the 20-foot-high piece of equipment. "I just want to go back to work," he said.

Paulovics said he felt the students' protest was misdirected. "I think they're in the wrong place," he said.

At 2 p.m., Karl Konieczny, president of Karl's Excavating in Hadley, removed his equipment from the construction

Tiananmen leaders to speak at UMass

Exiled students to talk of democracy movement

By BETH O'TOOLE
Collegian Staff

Two students who helped lead the democratic uprising in China, which resulted in the massacre of thousands of protesters in Tiananmen Square last spring, are scheduled to speak Saturday at 1 p.m. in Mahar Auditorium.

Chen Jun and Shen Tong, both students from Beijing, will talk about the origins and future of the Chinese Democracy movement in a "China Day" symposium titled, "Chinese Democracy: Dead or Alive?"

"Both [Jun and Tong] are now in exile because of their role in the democratic movement," said Jerry Dennerline, an Amherst College professor and the director of the Five College Center for Eastern Asian Studies.

Jun, a democratic activist and an intellectual, was an undergraduate student last May when the massacre occured. He was the head of a Beijing salon where intellectuals and students discussed their ideas on the movement, Dennerline said.

"Jun is one of the people who have been blamed by the [Chinese] regime for bringing western ideas into the Republic," he said.

Jun will discuss the prelude to the movement in a speech titled, "Student Intellectuals and the Origins of the Movement."

Dennerline said Tong escaped to Canada and then to Boston after the regime's crackdown on students in Tiananmen Square.

Tong will speak on the organization of the student movement, how it worked, and his reflections as one of the organizers in a speech titled, "The Blossoming of Beij-

Duffey says fee increase is possible

Students at the University of Massachusetts are facing a likely fee increase for next semester to compensate for the state's withdrawal of $6.4 million from the University's operating budget this week, Chancellor Joseph Duffey said Tuesday.

Academic departments may also be targeted for budget reductions to meet the cut, which constitiutes four percent of the operating budget, Duffey said.

The state recently cut $25 million from public colleges and universities across the state to compensate for a drastic $500 million revenue shortfall.

"We're looking at a wide range of options," Duffey said. "The campus has been asked by the Board of Regents to identify areas and accounts in which reductions will be taken."

Duffey said he would attempt to balance possible fee hikes with a plan to assist students who cannot afford the increases.

Duffey and Provost Richard O'Brien met with deans and faculty leaders met Tuesday to discuss handling the latest cuts.

"It's a grim time," Duffey said. "There are difficult decisions to be made."

The cuts come on the heels of an $8.1 million reduction targeting services for next semester.

"The campus has just gone through a very severe level of reductions," Duffey said. "The eight million dollar reductions haven't really been felt yet."

Workshop for men works on ending rape

By MICHAEL WEBBER
Collegian Correspondent

An understanding of each others' experiences and an open dialogue between men and women is essential to ending rape, said Steve Botkin, who facilitated an all-male workshop at Amherst College Tuesday night.

Botkin, a member of the Men's Resource Connection, Inc. in Amherst, spoke to a group of about 30 men in the Merrill Science Center about ways men can help to prevent violence against women.

"It's really important to develop a man's perspective on rape, and this doesn't happen too often," said Botkin, who works with men and men's groups at various colleges in the area.

> "Too often, men feel they have no right to say anything about rape and merely keep their mouths shut."
> – Steve Botkin, counselor

"We as men have something to offer to confronting and ending rape — a perspective that women don't have," he said.

Botkin, who received a doctorate in education from the University of Massachusetts, said he is making the study of men's attitudes towards masculinity and women his life's work.

It is essential that men feel safe to discuss the issue of rape and other forms of violence against women instead of feeling defensive about the issue, Botkin said.

"Men must be able to stand up and talk about their own experiences and feelings without fear of being ripped apart," he said.

Once men are able to openly discuss their own experiences and feelings, they work together with women to end rape and other forms of violence against women, he said.

"Too often men feel they have no right to say anything about rape and merely keep their mouths shut," he said.

Botkin said men and women must be aware of each others' perspectives toward relationships and sex.

He said men are trained to follow a model of masculinity that confuses love and sex with violence, he said.

"We live in a culture that implicitly sanctions rape," he said. "Men learn from an early age that intimidation and implicit threats of violence are the way to get things done."

For this reason, men often fail to realize that their behavior may seem very intimidating to a woman, and leave a sexual encounter with an inaccurate perception of what happened.

"Oftentimes a man will leave believing that he had good mutual sex with a woman, while she feels she was intimidated, pressured, or otherwise forced into having sex," Botkin said.

At the end of the lecture, Botkin relayed a list of approaches men can take to help end rape. He urged the students to open lines of communication in relationships and stressed the importance of making their intentions clear.

He also encouraged students to interrupt rape-supporting behavior such as jokes and sexist comments.

Among his other suggestions are: "Don't force, pressure, or manipulate a woman to have sex; go slow, and let the other person take some initiative; and don't drink and screw."

Finally, Botkin said, "Realize that 'no' means no, and that 'I don't know' means back off."

Senate defeats proposal to end co-senatorships

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

The Undergraduate Student Senate finally rejected a motion to eliminate co-senator positions in the senate, a proposal which senators have been battling over for weeks.

The motion passed by a comfortable margin, with 42 senators voting in favor, 30 against, and three abstentions.

The author of the bill, Sen. Dan Chesnicka (Wheeler), who has defended his position repeatedly, said "The existence of co-senators creates a major constitutional contradiction" in the senate.

If enacted, the motion, although allowing current co-senators to remain, would have ended the possibility of any future co-candidate campaigns. The amendment would have had no effect on either area governments or house council governments.

Co-Senator Chris Dreikosen (Cashin) said, "Two people are more efficent because you get two people to collaborate, so you get a better decision."

Student Attorney General Robert Fadel, who addressed the senate in favor of the amendment, said he understood that being a senator requires much time from the participants, but maintained that this commonly used defense is weak.

"I'm sorry, co's don't work," Fadel told the senate.

Traci Davis, president of the Student Government Association, opposed the bill and criticized the senate for failing to create guidelines for the co-senator positions.

Murphy to speak at Memorial Hall

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy, a candidate in the 1990 gubernatorial race, is scheduled to speak tonight at 5:30 in Memorial Hall at the University of Massachusetts.

Michael Greiner, western Massachusetts field organizer for the Murphy campaign, said Murphy's speech will focus on budget cutbacks and the future of public higher education in the state.

"She's a fabulous person. She's dynamic and exciting," he said. "Education is one of her key priorities."

Greiner, a 1989 UMass graduate, said Murphy's commitment to public higher education is highlighted in her plan to exempt colleges and universities from a proposal to place a five percent cap on spending for state agencies.

If enacted, the plan would help to alleviate the state's current fiscal strain, he said.

"She understands that for us to build a top quality higher education system around the state, we're going to need more money," Greiner said.

The event is sponsored by the University Democrats, a Registered Student Organization.

Murphy will stop to visit the opening of a new child care center at Greenfield Community College and will also meet with supporters in Northampton before the speech.

Motion for excise tax to reach town meeting

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Students who park their cars on Amherst property for more than six months may soon be forced to register their vehicles in Amherst and pay an excise tax to the town.

An article, scheduled to be presented at a Special Town Meeting Wednesday, asks the Amherst Select Board and Town Manager to negotiate with University of Massachusetts, Hampshire and Amherst College officials to outline procedures to extract automobile excise payments from students.

"Times are tough and the budget crunch is on," said Frederick Rice, an Amherst Select Board member. "We have to look to new ways of gathering revenues."

Edith Wilkinson, chairwoman of the Amherst Select Board, said state law now requires people to pay excise tax to the city or town where their vehicles are garaged for most of the year. The law affects both on and off-campus students, she said.

She said an estimate made by the town finance director showed that excise payments could generate between $108,000 and $317,000 for the town. The money would be put into a general fund.

Elisa Campbell, a Select Board member, said because of the constant changeover of students and a general lack of information, Amherst officials would have a difficult time deciding who should be billed and how to collect the tax.

Rice said because Amherst has a lower insurance rate than large cities, students from densely populated areas may save money. "But," he added, "the rate may rise a bit if more people register here."

Two UMass students who serve as Town Meeting members said they received warrant article information in the mail Tuesday, but did not have a chance to read it thoroughly.

Melissa Silverstein, who is an out-of-state student, said it would be a double standard to force off-campus students to pay the tax without allowing them to claim in-state residency so they may pay lower tuition rates.

"This would not be a positive incentive to attract students to the University," she said. "And less students means less revenue for the town and for Amherst businesses."

Student Amer Syed said he plans to consult with students and members of the Board of Governors and Student Government Association before voting on the issue.

"After I've read the material I'll listen to arguments on both sides, take into consideration how the students feel, and form an opinion," he said.

Plan return to India to teach exiled Tibetans in schools

Thondup Tsering and Dhondup Namgyal, graduate students at the University of Massachusetts, remember growing up in refugee schools in India after fleeing their homeland of Tibet during the early 1960s.

The pair, both certified educators, now are driven to return to their childhood schools to educate and help the 100,000 Tibetans in exile to preserve their cultural and national identity.

Tsering and Namgyal, two of the first 15 Tibetan students ever to receive Fulbright Scholarships to study in the United States, knew each other only briefly during their undergraduate days in India.

They also share a mission for "the ultimate independence of Tibet."

"I want to bring a political aspect into what I do to promote a sense of nationalism," Namgyal said. "Preserving culture is as important as giving education."

Both Tsering and Namgyal came to the United States with Master's Degrees and teaching certificates.

Tsering was born in Tibet and fled to India with his family when the Chinese government began to invade the country in the early 1960s.

When Tsering won the scholarship, he had been working as a career teacher at the Tibetan Children's Village, a refugee school for orphans and destitute children ages two to 24 years old, he said.

Upon completion of a Master's Degree in counseling, Tsering plans to return to Tibet to work at the same school as a counselor.

"The school is special to me because I myself was brought up there. I always felt I owed something to the school," Tsering said. "For today I am who I am because of the kindness of the school and the people who fund it."

The school, a charitable organization funded by foreign aid and individual contributions, is the home and school for 1,400 students, he said.

Namgyal also grew up in a refugee school along with seven siblings. After one year of military training, he spent seven years at Delhi University. When he was awarded the scholarship, he had just finished his Master's Degree, he said.

Namgyal plans to teach in the Tibetan Homes Foundation, the school he was raised in. His UMass Master's Degree will be in Curriculum Studies and Educational Administration.

Tsering said his American education presents many options for problem solving and exploring issues whereas his education in India, focused on "book knowledge."

"I am happy with my education and can visualize how useful it will be," Tsering said. "The education I'm getting here is more practical in application."

ing Spring and the Future of the Movement."

A question and answer period will follow the two speeches, and a panel discussion titled, "U.S. Policy: Economic Sanctions and Protection of Chinese Nationalism in the U.S.," will be held from 3:30 p.m. to 6 p.m.

The panelists will be Ye Yang, assistant professor of Chinese at Bates College, Steven Goldstein, professor of government at Smith College, and Janet Johnson, foreign student adviser at UMass.

An exhibit of documents and photographs from the spring events at Tiananmen Square will be on display in the lobby.

The symposium is sponsored by Smith College in Northampton, Amherst College, Mount Holyoke College in South Hadley, Hampshire College and the University of Massachusetts.

It is also sponsored by the Five College Center for Eastern Asian Studies and the UMass Chinese Students Association.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted

Follow-up efforts are vital

The budget crisis is the most serious problem facing the University of Massachusetts. A lack of funding will exacerbate every major issue on campus.

Rising tuition and fees will lead to a more homogenous and less diverse student body, less open to differences in others.

Under-funded research projects will be forced to solicit more, not less, money from the plentiful coffers in the Department of Defense.

Students' frustrations will be increased by the fewer, overcrowded classes and less individual attention offered by the lack of teaching assistants and faculty. Frustration often leads to more violent incidents and increased drug and alcohol abuse.

Last Wednesday's rally at the Statehouse was a powerful demonstration of students' concerns about their future and that of the University. Follow-up lobbying efforts and rallies are vital so that legislators know that Oct. 18 meant more to students than a day off from classes.

The Student Senate must formulate a coherent plan to fight against the budget cuts. Such a plan must involve allocating money from the Student Activities Trust Fund — a fund consisting of the $107 annual activities fee that every undergraduate pays — to send students to lobby their legislators on a regular basis.

Other groups — groups that are against progressive, increased taxation to fund social services including higher education — are constantly lobbying the Statehouse. These other groups, equipped with the influence their financial wealth affords them, professionally lobby the state's legislature daily.

If our legislators do not continue to hear from us, we can only expect them to cut more money from our budget, and our future.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of the Collegian board of editors.

Posing queries to poppies

Note: In light of last Wednesday's protest against budget cuts at the Statehouse, a lot of talk in the media centered around the damage done to the surroundings of the building. The following is a one-on-one interview with those most oppressed by the protest — the flowers.

So tell me flowers, what are your feelings on this action by those ill-minded students?

Jim Clark

"Well, I have to give them a little credit. At least there was no discrimination. Chrysanthemums, daisies, and even us — the daffodils, we all got trampled equally."

So trampled is the word you'd use?

"Oh jeez, we didn't even have a chance. There was this mob, screaming and yelling. It was horrible. Reeboks, boat shoes, Timberland boots. Just a sea of soles stepping on our heads. And here we were, rooted into the ground, unable to move. We just had to sit here and take the brunt of it."

They were trying to get into the Statehouse, right?

"The students? Yeah, something about a right to education, or some ridiculous thing like that."

You don't think students should have a right to an education?

"Not at my expense. Without us, what would all those botany students have to do their research on? They depend on us."

So you think you're more important than the students. At least that's what the media said.

"Definitely. We are the work of Mother Nature. She intended us to be here. The grass, the trees, the birds and the bees."

But does the fact that you are public figures, here on display at the Statehouse, make you more important than others? I mean, a neighbor's dog once rolled in our flower bed and crushed all of our zinnias and marigolds. Boy, was my mom upset. But I didn't see any reporters or television crews running up my driveway.

"You don't understand. There are classes in flowers, just like in society. We are the upper class, elected by our constituents to represent all vegetation. We have earned the right to be here and brighten the days of Congressmen and staff while they go in there and accomplish nothing."

But some of you survived. Or at least until the first frost. After that, you'll wither away and die, while the students will still be suffering and fighting for classes.

"Now don't talk to me like that. In body I may move on, but in spirit I will always be here. There will be other flowers to carry on our proud tradition."

Sorry. I don't mean to offend you or anything, but I think your mere existence is insignificant to the rest of the problems this state is facing — especially higher education.

"Well, if that's the way you feel, I don't want to talk to you anymore. Get out of here."

[As I turn to leave, I am met by a horde of Statehouse police, led by House Speaker George Keverian.]

"What are you, some kind of weirdo? Talking to flowers and buildings. I thought only Charlie Brown did that stuff. Boys, take him away to the nut house."

I guess that proves it. You can't talk to anyone on Beacon Hill anymore.

Time to move along?

I don't want a blurry photo, or a caricature of myself next to my byline or anything, (you'd probably be horrified anyway) but, I really was just thinking:

Cosmo Macero Jr.

- Has everyone realized that if the State Republican Party plays its cards right (and maybe even if they don't), the GOP gubernatorial candidate will virtually walk right into iron-Mike's office?
- Seven years ago, I coached some little kids in youth basketball back home. As of this semester, they are now fellow UMass students. I think it's time I moved along.
- Being an activist must be tough. While I was covering yesterday's DOD protest, I was incorrectly identified several times as one of the protesters, rather than the objective reporter that I continually strive to be. During the course of the day, I was told to: "Get a job, go to class, get a life and get a haircut." Do these people know my mother?
- I've had the same pair of Reeboks for four, count 'em, four years.
- I read a story the other day about ghost writers being paid to write for well known writers. Some day I want to have my own ghost writer, but since I can't afford one right now I guess I'll just have to take volunteers.
- I watched a Dave rerun last night and he reminded me of one of America's most worthless personalities: Vanna White. He showed that horrible ad for the movie she made, "Goddess of Love." Blecch, I would have rather spent the night eating condiments.
- I've been catching a lot of flak lately for saying I'm from Boston to people from out of state who ask where I'm from. OK . . . I'm from a suburb of Boston. Big deal. Does it make that much difference to someone from Phoenix? They're probably from a suburb of Phoenix. Next person that challenges me to "vote for mayor of Boston" gets dropped (ooohhh).
- Yes . . . I do have a personal vendetta against Barney Frank. He definitely wins chump of the month for August, September and October.
- Are things just getting out of hand with these self-indulgent, pretentious columns? [bullet] Special thanks to my friend Peter for his help with this fine piece of work.
- I met this kid who has devoted his life to doing whatever he can to ensure a victory by the Chicago Bears each weekend. Last weekend he guaranteed a victory over my beloved Cleveland Browns, in Cleveland! How dare he! Of course they got trounced. Wonder what he's doing this weekend. Chump.

Harassment policy: more than limiting language

In the spirit of Civility Week, many thoughts and feelings have been expressed about the course of action that we, as students and concerned individuals, should take to end various forms of discrimination based on race, sex, sexual orientation, religious or ethnic background.

Most people feel that discrimination and harassment should not be tolerated under any circumstances. Harassment can take the form of degrading racial epithets, insulting letters or any kind of verbal abuse which demean and isolate individuals because of group orientation.

When people are attacked in this manner, it can inflict, besides anger and rage, a great deal of psychological pain which will affect their self-concept and their dealings with other people in the future. Harassment is a serious issue and should be addressed carefully and completely.

So what should be done when a student or member of the University community is harassed? This was one of the topics addressed at a discussion given by faculty members, "Proposals for a Campus Racial Harassment Policy: Preventing Harrassment, Protecting our Free Speech," in the Campus Center. The discussion was led by Steve Arons, Legal Studies; Harry Allan, School of Management; Martha Wharton, Affirmative Action; and Grant Ingle, Office of Human Relations.

At present it is felt that the current harassment policy at UMass needs to be readdressed and dealt with in a more effective manner. There are many questions and concerns which accompany the making of an adequate policy.

Minu Sebastian

One concern is that First Amendment rights need to be protected when restricting speech. As Professor Arons stated, the purpose of the First Amendment is to develop oneself as an individual, and unless we have the freedom to make mistakes, we cannot grow as individuals.

But it is also necessary to realize that unless we protect the feelings of minority groups, violence could be the result. Arons went on to say that he believes that it is possible to draft a procedure which protects First Amendment rights and addresses racial harassment effectively.

Wharton believes that our next step should be to make people more aware. She encourages students to keep student government leaders informed of their needs.

Education was also stressed as a way to end ignorance during the discussion. Plans to draw up a new policy will be made in the near future. Students are encouraged to put in their points of view.

Until today I did not realize how difficult it is to stop people from hurting and badgering others. I do believe in freedom of expression, but when that freedom is used in ways which isolate and psychologically harm people then something needs to be done.

Educating people of the consequences of even slight forms of harassment could improve the situation.

Hopefully someday in the future all people will be able to see beyond race, religion and ethnicity and realize that we are all human beings struggling for the same end . . . to lead a fulfilling, secure and stable existence.

A penchant for pet peeves

I don't know, maybe it's just me, but have you ever noticed that when you are stressed, pet peeves become more than mere annoyances? They become the gargantuan hindrances in the life process. They become the magnified thorns that needle our sides. They become our torment.

Josh Galitsky

I have been ridiculously stressed for the better part of this semester and the "tiny things" are really starting to crawl up my neck and make me scream. It's been like having an itch that I can't reach and when I try to scratch it, I throw out my shoulder.

One thing that has been driving me nuts is people that don't pick up their trays when they leave a food place. I work at a reasonably nice ice cream and coffee shop on campus and I've often been assigned the mindless duty of bussing trays. I've stood around and overheard bits of deep conversation over a cappucino and a few cigarettes. After sharing their depths of unbridled knowledge, these same people leave a pool of crap all over the table for somebody to clean up after them.

If people can solve world hunger in one conversation, why can't they pick up their trash after they've had a bite to eat?

Maybe it's just me.

A book bag is an amazing invention but I hate standing near someone wearing one. I can't even count the number of times I've been smashed into when the person flings their body around to talk to their friend. Even when I say "excuse me" it doesn't help because the bag is a body appendage that they are unaware of.

Maybe it's just me.

People that interrupt conversations could be considered the most annoying breed in the universe. We've all been guilty of this on occasion but I refer to the habitual type. I remember being in some of the most intense, life-reflecting conversations only to have all my answers interrupted by some clown who felt a need to mention his dental floss collection. Meanwhile I had instantly discovered the formula of invisibility and the conversation never resumed with quite the same significance or tone.

Maybe it's just me.

I guess rude people in general really tee me off. I can forgive when somebody shoves their hand in the breakfast cereal to get the Captain Crunch iron-on but I can't deal with some jerk who acts like they are doing you a favor by talking to you. Customers act like this sometimes, treating you like some generic worker instead of a human being. It's these fools I like to wreak silent revenge on by spitting in their coffee or sticking my dirty thumb in their bowl of ice cream.

It isn't just people that drive me crazy, there are plenty of other pet peeves that ruin my week. I can't stand those little price tags that leave an unscrubbable, gummy residue on items like paper products or glass picture frames. I despise that whenever I'm in a rush to get somewhere there is rush hour- style traffic but when I'm not in a rush the dweeb behind me thinks he's Mario Andretti. I also cry at the fact that no matter what line I stand in at the bank, it's always the slowest one.

Come to think of it, a lot of things annoy me — people that talk during a movie, people that belch in public, people that complain about what annoys them. But hey, it's just me . . . isn't it?

Notes from the Basement

Are you a vegetarian? Then skip to the next graph. If you sometimes yearn for red meat, good rare flesh, there is a place for you. Buffalo Bills in Amherst center has great roastbeef sandwiches. Formerly known as J.B.'s, the place still has good food at affordable prices, but now lacks the women behind the counter with BIG HAIR and enough COSMETICS to be the cosmetics counter at Filene's. It is a nice switch, keep the trend up.

Peter Leon

I got to say that Jim Bakker deserves every minute behind bars that he got. This is not just due to the fact that I don't deal well with fundamentalists, but this guy is just scum. (That has no reflection on the Sci-Fi people.) He got thousands of people to send him millions of dollars so he could help other people buy their way to salvation, as he gave his life up to work to spread the word of HIS God. (O.K. I really loathe bible thumpers.) But if J.B.'s ever reopened Tammy could could get the job of head cashier. She is after all well versed in dealing with money and cosmetics.

The mass media pissed me off this past week. Bias has just shone through on all their coverage of the rally in Boston. It would seem that they don't like budget cuts to higher education either. But they think we should just be complacent little students and leave these hard decisions to them.

To these people: Blow it out your ear.

We students are not complacent. We have always cared, Mr. Tsongas. We wouldn't be in school if we didn't. If these leaders of the Commonwealth would stop thinking via their narrow points of view, and take a look at what happens every day of the semester they might get the idea that lots of people like higher education, and that cutting it will not be tolerated.

Write your representative again. This time tell him/her that it isn't higher education that's on the line, but their job.

Just an update on our favorite person to make fun of: Dan Quayle. The Collegian got a photo of him in San Francisco over the AP wire. Now everyone knows he was there, but did you know that in case he got lost, the U.S. Government provided him with a jacket that said, and I quote: Dan Quayle, Vice President.

Next on the play list . . .

This week of civility brought to us by the administration of the University really made me feel like it was more of a show than an honest attempt at educating people about diversity.

Luckily, it seems people took that part of it unto themselves. On the bus in yesterday morning I overheard two women, one Jewish, the other Muslim talking about their religions. They weren't discussing ideology, instead they were discussing the customs involved with each, dietary and ceremonially.

It was so nice. Each one spoke of stereotypes they had learned, like Jewish people eat lots of matzo. As someone who has Jewish heritage, I can say for the most part, they don't. Yes it is cooked with it, but matzo balls go into soup, — so it is a part of it, not the main course. Few people pick up a wafer and just munch. They just don't.

So here's kudos to the people who took time to learn on their own.

This week's quote: When the oppressed oppress the oppressed, they not only do the work of their oppressors, but they make certain their own doom.

Thus 'till next week UMass, have a fun weekend pre-celebrating all Hallows eve.

Letters to the Editor

What does pro-choice mean?

I am the owner and operator of the local Domino's pizza stores and employ more than 300 people, many of which are students at area schools. These employees are the ones who bear the brunt of any boycott. Without sales, I would be forced to cut back staff.

Readers believe that Domino's is anti-woman and anti-choice. Not true. We have many very successful women franchises, and high ranking corporate staff.

My business is pizza. Domino's doesn't, as a company, have a stand on the reproductive issue. A small percentage of my sales go to Domino's pizza as a royalty. The vast majority of my royalties go towards advertising, marketing materials, field support and employee training programs, not into Mr. Monaghan's pocket.

If people were real pro-choicers, how could they support views that deny Mr. Monaghan's right to support the beliefs of his choice? And why hasn't anyone asked me about my stand on the issue before calling a boycott of my business?

John Gesualdi
Domino's pizza

Galitsky from dark ages

I am outraged that the editors of the Collegian allowed Josh Galitsky's article "I know how Cinderella feels" (Oct. 12) to be printed. This article did not just show me that he is insensitive to the issues of sexism, but that he hasn't an inkling of what constitutes women's oppression.

Galitsky's article describes life with his step-mother and how much he hates her — because she is lazy, "extremely dumpy - looking," and does not know how to do the shopping and cooking to his taste. If Galitsky does not like how his step-mother performs the domestic tasks, why doesn't he do them himself? Why does he assume she has to do them?

This article is from the dark ages. Galitsky is using the false and dangerous stereotype that women are objects and domesticates. The column is a conglomeration of words and phrases that typify his step-mother into these stereotypes: "a nag," "spawn of satan," "the woman had no logic," "she really suckered my dad in."

Galitsky doesn't see his step-mother as a human being, he sees her as a domestic machine. And because her parts do not run smoothly, he wants to get rid of her. What is scary is he would throw her out like any other object that is broken,: "I didn't kill her only because. . . I was afraid of getting caught."

It is demoralizing to have to once again go over the basics of sexism to an organization that should know better: women are not objects to be thrown away at whim, nor are we maids, servants, or slaves. We are human beings and we expect to be treated as such.

Some people would argue that Galitsky could replace the word step-mother with the word step-father in his article and the effect would be the same. There is no validity to this argument. Women and men are not equal in our society; you cannot expect to equate them in this article and retain the same impact.

To Galitsky, I suggest: cook for yourself. Do me a favor and find a psychiatrist who can help you with your misogynistic feelings, and take a break from writing.

To the Collegian staff, I recommend that you put feminism on your agenda.

Elizabeth Rensenbrink

Keep men out of our issues

I was appalled that Ted Maravelias should be profiled on the "Women's Issues" page of the Collegian. ("Students for LIfe tackle new agenda addressing morality issues as well," Oct. 24).

While I understand that abortion is both a men's and women's issue, it is extremely offensive that you present a large picture of a man telling me and other women what we should and shouldn't do with our bodies.

If you wish to present a male's "pro-life" perspective to balance previous "pro-choice" reporting, do so in another section, or profile a pro-life woman for the women's page.

Carolyn O'Grady

Clothes can make a person

The University of Massachusetts has taken to having a Civility Day that focuses on the eradication of the "isms" that plague our society, whether they are based on race, color, creed, political alignment, sexual preference or shoe size. In light of this, it is amazing to me that I saw what I did last week.

I was sitting in math class when my focus shifted from the board and the professor's intruding voice to the back of a shirt on the student in front of me. The caricature on the shirt depicted a large woman, who resembled a cross between Atilla the Hun and a matronly nanny, pointing to a black board in the most instructive manner. Down the left side of the chalk board were outlined the letters "W-O-M-E-N" and lined up with those letters were the word 'Worship Our Masters' Every Need." From the warrioress' expression, there was to be no exception to this rule.

Across the top of the shirt was the name of a popular rock group, DEF LEPPARD. Astounding to me that any group having an effect on young people would endorse a design with such a message. None-the-less, this shirt was mass-produced, sold and purchased by someone who thought enough of it. Maybe it was the warrior theme of the shirt that attracted our conscientious consumer. Perhaps it was the scantily clad women cowering in that "school of life."

So, why react so strongly to an article of clothing? I feel there is more to this shirt than a way to cover our young friend's back. If our young friend wears this shirt a great deal, (and it did look well-worn) it is possible that he will have an influence on his friends. The media already portrays women in a dangerous light.

Many studies have been done regarding the effect of the media on peoples' actions and violence. It worries me that this shirt could portray the message that male dominance/female submission is an acceptable thing.

Crime statistics point to there being enough of that in this world. This shirt does nothing but sustain that idea.

I am concerned that an article of clothing portraying such degradation to women, or any other group of people, can be worn so casually.

Surely, one must agree with and to some degree support the logos one wears scrawled across one's chest and back. If so, than the purpose of Civility Day at UMass has a long way to go, and, as a woman, I feel very scared walking around campus at night.

Lisa Geiger
Amherst

Have a safe Halloween

As you know, this coming weekend is Halloween. The level of responsibility demonstrated by students has dramatically increased over the past few years. However, we would like to remind you of the high level of attention that will be focused on the University during Halloween. In the past, UMass has had a reputation of violence and vandalism during this period.

It is a general perception of our university that we cannot afford. Any incident of inappropriate behavior could be disastrous for our campus.

While you are celebrating we ask that you keep in mind existing policies which were developed by student leaders in cooperation with Housing Services. If you are going to be wearing a mask, you will be asked to remove it for identification purposes. We would like to remind students of the on-campus guest policy: 4 guests per resident, only 2 of whom may stay overnight. Guests after 1:00 a.m. must be registered for overnight stay.

We encourage students to have a good time, but it must be tempered with responsibility and awareness.

Bob Monaghan
President, Southwest Area
Government

(Editor's note: 7 other area government leaders signed this letter.)

How're you going to do it?

"And I want to express my deeply felt indebtedness and gratitude to my PS/2. It helped me get more done —so I had more time for fun."

PS/2 it!

You don't have to be the valedictorian to know college is no picnic. But the IBM Personal System/2® can be a big help. It lets you get more done in less time. You can organize your notes, write and revise papers, and create smart-looking graphics to make a good report even better. All in all, the IBM PS/2® can make your school life a lot easier. And after school, it can give you a head start on your career. Because there's a good chance you'll be working with a PS/2 wherever you work after college.

And right now, as a student you have an advantage. You can get the IBM PS/2 at a terrific low price. So save money and make a smart career decision at the same time.

Knitting Factory is jazziest club in town

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Valley Jazz

The Knitting Factory nightclub in SoHo, New York City is a small, bare space on Houston Street that houses the most exciting new music scene in America today, and charges shockingly low admission. As the club and its musicians receive ever-increasing nationwide exposure, the question is: will the Knitting Factory survive?

The Knitting Factory serves as the confluence point for daring musicians who play a wide variety of styles, including the noise-jazz of Last Exit, Curlew and The President, Elliot Sharp's computer music, the avant-pop of Miracle Room and Chunk, the advanced jazz of Leroy Jenkins and Odean Pope's Saxophone Choir, various free-form improvisational groups and much more.

The club's name is a household word among new music afficionados. It is also that cleverest, most Zen-like of things: a non-label. The phrase, "plays at the Knitting Factory," means a lot in certain quarters, yet it says much less about an artist's music than such labels as "garage-punk", "jangle-pop" or "Euro-dance". The Knitting Factory thus categorizes the uncategorizable.

The scene the Knitting Factory represents is, I believe, potentially as important as two other developments in American music — the 52nd Street scene that produced bebop in the 1940s and the San Fransisco Haight-Ashbury psychedelic scene in the 60s. Those consisted of closely-knit, intensely active musicians who pushed their music irrevocably forward. Bebop is now a fixture, and it has retained its artistic integrity. Psychedelia fizzled when its major groups (the Grateful Dead, Airplane, etc.) went commercial, yet its influence is indisputable.

On the other hand, the Knitting Factory scene could end up languishing in cult obscurity, as other similarly intense music scenes did. Chicago's jazz-oriented Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians (which produced such groups as Air and the Art Ensemble of Chicago) and the lamented Canterbury progressive rock scene in England (which produced Caravan, Gong and Soft Machine) are two examples of this. Both of these scenes' musicians were "guilty" of being too uncompromising.

All of the ingredients are in place for the Knitting Factory's habitues to make music history. They have garnered national attention via the weekly radio series Live at the Knitting Factory, which airs on dozens of college radio stations nationwide (including WMUA, 91.1 FM, on Mondays at 10 a.m.), and articles in magazines like Rolling Stone. What's more, they have a deal with A&M records; the label distributes the radio show at no cost to stations and releases occasional anthology albums.

So, given this major-label backing and national exposure, what will happen to the Knitting Factory and its adventurous musicians? Will the music coalesce into a more narrowly-defined style, or will it stay diverse? Will the music become as influential as bebop or psychedelia? Will the musicians keep their edge, fade out, or sell out? These are some of the more fascinating questions in music today; stay tuned for further developments.

Preparing for a Happy Valley Halloween

By KIM BRATER
Collegian Correspondent

ABOUT TOWN

Halloween, the commercialized American holiday where ghouls and goblins come knocking at the door asking for candy, is lurking just around the corner, and being in college has never stopped students from getting into the spirit. You can see decorations hanging in the window of student's apartments and dorm rooms. The displays in the Campus Center all have a Halloween air, and local stores have their Halloween motifs and sales.

The big money maker for retailers this time of year is costumes, and there are many places where you can get a decent costume here in the Amherst area. If you know exactly what you want to be, you can try buying bits and pieces from different stores until your costume is complete, however, if you are like me and just can't seem to figure out a good theme, here are some good places to look.

Faces in Amherst has a great selection of odds and ends for easy to wear costumes. "Things are going really fast," said Mariel Lampaya, a Faces employee. "People always wait until the last minute for costumes. Some things we are already out of are swords, and items for pirates costumes."

If you are planning to shop at Faces, being a rabbit will cost you $8.89 ($1.99 for the over the nose whisker mask, $1.95 for the rabbit tail, and $4.95 for the ears.). Those who want a less picked through stock should go to the Northampton store.

Another good place to find is at the Card Gallery, located in the Stop & Shop Plaza on Route 9. Here you can buy anything from a full witch costume to Groucho Marx glasses.

"We have anything and everything here," said employee Kelly Avery. "Accessories range from $.79 for makeup and teeth, to $159 for a two person horse costume. There are three varieties of bunny ears from $5.98 to $13.98, which seem to be very popular."

Those buying early will have the best selection, but don't fret if you wait too long. The Card Gallery will be open every night, even on Halloween.

Other places to search are K-Mart in the Hampshire Mall, and Bradlees in Northampton, where the prices tend to be a bit cheaper. These two stores seem to gear their sales more toward the juvenile customers, however, their prices are low and selection pretty good. But keep in mind, don't gasp when the K-Mart cashier rejects your check. They only take local checks, period.

Creative people may want to venture into So-Fro Fabrics in the Hampshire Mall and rummage through the fabric to make a costume, or check out Railroad Salvage where the prices are even lower than K-Mart's.

Students can wind up spending a good chunk of change on things for a costume, but there are ways to save money. For example, if you are planning to be a vampire and want to have a bloody effect, buy some cheap red lipstick, or even better, use finger paint. Instead of buying white clown makeup, try mixing baby powder or corn starch with water.

Halloween is a good time to get away from studying for mid-terms and have some fun. Finding the perfect costume can be a frustrating affair, but it's all in the spirit. Don't let it spook you.

Prices so low, selection so big ... it's scary!!

area soon after the protesters arrived.

"These guys are all union workers," Konieczny said of the construction workers. "They're guaranteed the day's pay, so I have to pay them.

"They [the protesters] have their rights too, but there are better ways," he said. "I'm sure if it was a rainy day, they'd all be in school."

Chris Moran, a junior civil engineering student, said the money the contractors may lose for one day's lost work pales somewhat in comparison to the University's dilemma.

"They [contractors] will always have jobs," Moran said. "What about the faculty who are losing their jobs? What about students who may not be able to get jobs if they can't get their education?"

While we were on your campus, you were on our campus.

Last week's Graduate and Professional Schools Information Day brought us to the UMass Student Center to meet prospective students looking for graduate-level programs that lead to careers influencing public policy and community stability. But we found that hundreds of you were on Beacon Hill that day, making your voices heard. We applaud your taking a stand on behalf of your beliefs. If indeed, your plans include graduate study, come back to Beacon Hill. We're there all the time—for you.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: your finances and career demand the lion's share of your attention. The new year finds you ready to settle down to business. Breaking with a partner or company in February will put you in a positive, forward-looking mood. When you shed old baggage, you feel able to tackle almost anything. April is full of delightful surprises-some of them financial, others romantic. Take a more practical approach to a relationship and both parties will be happier.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): If tempers are allowed to fly today, there is no telling how far they may go. Others respond more readily to reason and gentleness. Secret concern over finances requires your immediate attention.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): This is the kind of day you just want things done. Difficulties or objections are raised by key associates. Curb your temper. Keep your personal possessions under lock and key.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Be on the lookout for opportunities that can add to your stature and financial work. Do not neglect routine task. A letter or cable has hidden meaning. Read between the lines.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Be guided by your impulses today; they are being fired by fine planetary configurations. Events take place that will deepen your understanding of others. Reconnect with people you have not seen recently.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22):Look forward to an electrifying day-mentally as well as emotinally. Have no regrets. Follow your instincts in career and romance. Dining in a great restaurant will put mate in a mellow mood.

VIRGO (Aug. . -Sept. 22): Take whatever steps you deem proper to ensure your loves ones' financial future. Be certain you have enough insurance coverage. Someone who lives abroad may exert a powerful influence over your destiny.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23): Each step forward could be painflly laborious unless it is well planned in advance. Accept the assistance of your loved ones. Clean out your closets contributing unwanted items to your favorite charity.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Restrain you more extravagant urges today. By afternoon's end, you will feel ajob is well done. A conversation may get around to subjects you have avoided in the past. Be discreet.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be more practical. Keep a tighter rein on office politics and spending. Although a job offer is tempting, you might do better by staying put. A calm partner will bring you great happiness.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Learn to recognize futuristic developments in business and finance. Old-fashioned methods will deplete your profits. Curb a tendency to be demanding or you risk losing a friend or lover.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): An opportunity to buy land in a distant place arises. Family and business associates urge you to make decisions too quickly. Avoid talking with a neighbor who is easily upset.

PISCES (Feb. 19-march 20): An animated discussion could lead to achievment of your aims. Welcome ideas about self-promotion. News from foreign shores is encouraging. Romance is delicious.

Questions abound over release of Pats' Dupard

FOXBORO (AP) — New England has cut two young first-round draft choices already this season, but coach Raymond Berry said yesterday the Patriots' success rate with top picks is comparable to the rest of the NFL.

Less than two months after 1985 first rounder Trevor Matich, a 28-year-old center, was waived, the Patriots cut 1986 top pick Reggie Dupard, a running back, on Tuesday, six days before his 26th birthday.

"If you research 28 teams, it might be interesting," Berry said. "We're probably just about normal for the rest of the league."

He didn't cite specific cases to support his statement.

Although the Patriots have done well with their 1987 and 1988 first-round selections — tackle Bruce Armstrong and running back John Stephens — it is unlikely that many clubs have cut top picks from consecutive seasons at ages when they should be reaching their peaks.

Berry didn't criticize Dick Steinberg, the Patriots' player development director who heads their draft process.

"I don't think Dick's ever claimed infallibility," Berry said. "There's very few of those among us."

In 1985, the Patriots chose Dupard one pick before Chicago took Neal Anderson, now the NFL's leading rusher.

Dupard's departure comes at a curious time. Although he was hurt for much of his career and never lived up to expectations, he was one of only two New England running backs who did not miss a game this season because of injuries.

The Patriots have four left and two of them, Marvin Allen and Robert Perryman, are listed as questionable for Sunday's game at Indianapolis. The other two, Stephens and Mosi Tatupu, both were sidelined for two games. They also have Patrick Egu, a former free agent cut by Tampa Bay who has been on the developmental squad since being signed Sept. 14.

"We just feel like [Dupard's] role was changed with John's development," Berry said. "Also, we're using backfield sets where five backs [on the roster] aren't as important as they were and Patrick Egu looks like he can step in and do a good job."

Instead of activating Egu, the Patriots yesterday filled the roster vacancy left by Dupard with cornerback Howard Feggins, who was on the developmental squad.

Berry said the off-season acquisition of free agent tight end Eric Sievers helped make Dupard, the Patriots' leading receiver last season, expendable.

"Eric Sievers has probably taken most of" Dupard's role in the short passing game "and has done an excellent job of it. He's been extremely durable and reliable," Berry said.

Although Berry said he should have four running backs ready to face the Colts "we can go with three. We're using a high percentage of a one-back offense and we're using [tight ends] Sievers and Marv Cook" as lead blockers for runners.

The Patriots still have four quarterbacks, and Berry, asked why one of them wasn't cut, said "there'd be nothing wrong with taking that approach."

Then why cut a running back?

"We chose to," Berry said.

Asked if any off-field factors contributed to the decision to cut Dupard, Berry said, "I've learned to never get into such questions."

But, he added, "he's a high-class young man, very popular on our team."

Minutemen dump Friars, 2-0

Senior co-captain Steve Cesnek (6) defends against a Providence player in yesterday's 2-0 UMass win at Boyden Field. Cesnek had a goal for the Minutemen.

When you're on a roll, you're on a roll.

Electric passes and lightning bolts of energy boosted the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team past Providence College yesterday on the Hill, 2-0.

The Minutemen (fourth in the Atlantic 10 Conference, Eastern Division) are 6-8-2 for the season, but are 4-0-1 in the last five games, and the team and coaches couldn't be prouder.

"We're real happy with the results," said head coach Jeff Gettler. "It's late in the season, but we're peaking at the right times. I'm very pleased."

Twenty-five minutes into regulation, sophomore Dan Lawrence and junior Carl Hanks fed a gentle cross to senior Steve Cesnek who walked the ball in for the first goal of the game, 1-0. The play was tight and supportive through the first half.

"We were able to finish our chances," Gettler said. "It was tough not having [sophomore] Darren Stone, but we compensated. Overall it was a good game."

During Saturday's game against Colgate University, Stone was red-carded and thus ejected from that game. According to ISAA rules, a player is ineligible to participate in the game following the game in which he was allotted the penalty.

Fouls and yellow cards intensified a physical game with UMass having 17 fouls compared to PC's 15. Senior Louis Hollmeyer was yellow carded as well as Providence's co-captain Dwaine Shanley.

During one of many offensive drives, Lawrence networked down the field and tapped the ball to sophomore Ray Cunha who completed a long cross to sophomore Brett Anthony, scoring the second goal for UMass eighteen-and-a-half minutes into the second half. The Minutemen outshot PC, 18-9.

"Defensively we did everything we needed to do," said Gettler. "[Sophomore] Kevin Perna did a good job, allowing [senior] Evan Buxner and [senior] Gael Sullivan to rest. [Senior] Tom Skiba was a great leader for us. He directed and organized the defense."

Awarded Atlantic 10 Freshman Player of the Week, Steve Armenti gave his all as he completed his fourth consecutive shutout. The keeper has allowed only one goal in the last five games. Providence's goalie, Jim Morris, had four saves for the game, but had his two-game shutout streak halted.

"This wasn't particularly our best game, but it's the best we've played all year," Gettler said. "And right now I'm really looking to Rutgers." UMass will face Rutgers University Saturday at 1 p.m. on the Hill.

UMass, BU battle to 0-0 draw

Field hockey now 11-4-2

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Freshman goaltender Phillipa Scott extended her shutout streak to three games yesterday at Boston University. Unfortunately for the University of Massachusetts field hockey team, the Minutewomen's offense extended its scoreless streak to one as UMass walked away from the Terriers last night with nothing settled under the lights, 0-0 after two overtimes.

"They [BU] controlled the midfield in the second half of the game," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "We were so anxious to score and attack, I don't think we combined well,"

Ironically though, the Minutewomen created the best chance to win the game with a minute left in regulation when junior forward Nancy Philbrick slipped behind the entire Terrier backfield, all alone on BU goalie Lori Heywood. Heywood came up big though and preserved BU's first tie of the season.

UMass is now 11-4-2 on the season, 3-1 in the Atlantic 10 Conference where it holds second place behind Penn State. The Minutewomen came into the game as the No. 8 team in the NCAA's poll. The Terriers, who came into the game at No. 12, went to 10-4-1 and in third place in the North Atlantic Conference behind Northeastern and New Hampshire.

After Scott had relatively breezed through the first 35 minutes of the game (three saves), she suddenly found herself under siege in the second half. BU unloaded 11 shots, 10 of which Scott was forced to save.

"BU just got on a little bit of a roll," Hixon said. "We gave up couple of turnovers in our own end."

None of them were costly though. Despite giving up five penalty corners in the second period, UMass hung on until the game was forced into a ten-minute overtime where neither team could generate much offense.

BU was turned away by Scott on numerous occasions in the second half and failed to capitalize. But UMass also let a few opportunities get away in the first half, unable to convert on four penalty corners. The Minutewomen outshot the Terriers 8-4 but had nothing to show for it.

"We had a good first half and BU had a good second half," Hixon said. "BU was a little more dangerous than we were in the second half."

And Heywood kept UMass at bay, recording 10 saves for the night in a key Northeast regional battle for both teams.

slap shots: It was the last regular season road game of the year for the Minutewomen (5-3-2 on the road). The Minutewomen will finish their season up with the University of Connecticut on Saturday (noon) and Dartmouth on Tuesday (2 p.m.), both at Totman Field where UMass is 4-1.

The Minutewomen have played two designated home games at Springfield College and have won both of them. UMass has not played at Totman Field since Oct. 8, when the Minutewomen walloped Maine 9-0. UMass was 3-1-1 during that time away from the home field.

Minutewomen struggle in final two sets of 3-2 defeat

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

In a season in which tough losses have been the norm, this one may be the hardest of all to swallow.

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team had its third win of the season well within its grasp last night at Totman Gym, before Boston College seized the moment, took the final two sets and the win in a five-set grind (15-10, 12-15, 12-15, 15-8, 15-5).

"I'm so frustrated right now," said UMass coach Carol Ford. "We should not have lost that match."

But when it was all on the line, the Minutewomen went flat. They had the Eagles on the ropes in the fourth set, pulling into an 8-all tie, before BC rallied to take the final seven points of the set and swing the momentum 180 degrees.

"We didn't play well enough to win. We didn't want to win," Ford said. "After a big game we were sitting back on our heels."

The Eagles (9-15) slowly chipped away in the fourth set. After the 8-8 deadlock, UMass controlled the serve on seven different occasions, but failed to score another point. Michelle Korin finally settled the set with a service ace into the back left corner to tie the match at two apiece.

The Minutewomen (2-17) were barely in the final set. With Sharon Panoff (13 kills, 17 digs and 3 block assists) serving, they got a quick pair after the Eagles were called twice for carrying for a 2-1 edge. However, in rapid fire BC rattled off six consecutive points and essentially wrapped things up.

UMass got to within 7-4 on a Julieta Santiago (14 kills, 12 digs and 3 solo blocks) block and an errant spike by BC's MaryEllen MacKinnon. But that was as close as it would get, the Minutewomen picking up only one more point the rest of the match.

The Eagles were as dominating in the first set as they were in the late stages, surging out to a 14-5 lead. UMass tried to crawl back behind the serving of co-captain Nancy Sullivan (12 kills), but the hole proved to be too big to escape.

But it was a different tune altogether in the next two sets. UMass again fell into a hole, down 7-3, but ran off five straight to take an 8-7 lead. Then after BC scored the next four, the see-saw finally landed on the right side, UMass winning seven of the last eight points to knot the match.

Same formula for set number three, BC inching out to a 5-1 lead before a seven-point run brought UMass back into it. Again BC would eventually inch ahead, 12-11 before a pair of winners by freshman middle hitter Rachel Bredemeier and an errant BC return gave the Minutewomen a 2-1 lead.

BC clearly wasn't at the top of its game, playing confused at times, but was able to rally at the end to pull it out.

"BC didn't play well," Ford said. "I don't mind losing to good teams, but I mind losing to BC the way they played tonight."

From an optimist's point of view, it was a big turnaround from the last time the two sides met (Sept. 19 in Chestnut Hill). In that one, the Eagles dominated in a three-set sweep.

"They killed us. We were never in that match," Ford said. "There was an improvement, but we still need to get some stuff out of our system."

UM faces George Washington tomorrow night (7 p.m.) in an Atlantic 10 match at Totman.

SOMEONE TO BRAGG ABOUT

By JODY GABIN
Collegian Staff

Billy Bragg was 14-years-old and employed at a hardware store in his native working-class London suburb of Barking, England, when he heard his first Bob Dylan song. Like many of us, who, upon our first introduction to the world of music, instantly feel some odd attachment to its magnetic passion and indignation, Bragg became sure that music would change the world.

Some years later came the rise of the punk movement, with its new approach to music and its revolutionary ideology. Bragg believed, as many did, that punk's "new and different" ideals would bring about revolution; that the movement's music, fueled by rage and animosity, would, in itself, bring about a change in society.

But it wasn't until the election of British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, specifically her second victory, that Bragg realized that music alone could never change the system. It became clear to him that music, while being a perfectly viable outlet for change, had to work along with society to prove its point. He realized that revolutionary music presented to a closed group of individuals simply preaches to those already converted; revolutionary music taken to the streets and thrown in the face of mainstream society, has the potential to bring about change.

BRAGG BLENDS PASSION WITH POLITICS

"Thatcher," Bragg claims, "is the woman that politicized me." At the time of her election, he began to ally himself with various socialist organizations, as well as the British Labour Movement. Literally and figuratively, Billy Bragg began to take the media world by storm.

In 1983, Bragg was signed to Go! Discs, which released his debut EP, Life's A Riot With Spy Vs. Spy, to a wave of critical acclaim. After a year of travelling around Britain as a lone minstrel (often billing himself as Spy Vs. Spy, assuming he would attract larger crowds if people thought they were going to hear a full band.), sleeping on floors and playing any and all available gigs, Life's A Riot allowed for Bragg's first European tour.

After returning to England in 1984 to record his first full-length LP, Brewing Up With Billy Bragg, he began a six-week tour of the U.S., opening for the now defunct Echo and the Bunnymen.

In an attempt to gain notoriety in the U.S., Bragg took to the streets of New York City with a personally constructed amplifier system strapped to his back. Figuring that he could at least get himself arrested for causing a commotion, he performed full volume outside the annual New Music Seminar. However, very few people paid any attention to him, he failed to anger police (they merely told him to "move it along."), and as far as media coverage went, all he received was a brief blurb on the evening news following a clip from a Prince concert.

Bragg toured non-stop throughout 1984 and 1985, pausing only to record his Between The Wars EP, which benefited the families of striking British miners.

In 1986, after forming the politically-conscious U.K. pop coalition Red Wedge in partnership with Paul Weller, Bragg began a two-week tour of East Germany, which led to his first dates in the Soviet Union.

Following the tour, he returned home to England to record his first major-label release, Talking to the Taxman About Poetry, for Elektra Records. Bragg earned further praise upon the release of the album, and in lieu of a devastating defeat for the British Labour Party, toured Nicaragua and returned once again to Moscow.

Following the release of a live, six-track EP entitled Help Save the Youth of America, Bragg began a month-long tour of colleges and universities in the U.S. and Canada, accompanied by representatives from groups such as the Democratic Socialists of America and the Committee in Solidarity With the People of El Salvador.

In mid-May 1988, Bragg recorded his latest release, Worker's Playtime. Inspired by the break-up of a serious relationship, the songs on Worker's Playtime focus more on emotional issues than do his previous efforts.

Bragg has performed everywhere from picket lines to concert halls, on both sides of the Iron Curtain. He says that if he's got a listening audience, he'll talk politics — often, his shows run close to three hours due to his lengthy monologues — if's it's a rowdy audience, he'll skip his between-song banter and just play.

Despite criticism that Bragg is too dogmatic or preachy, his level of sincerity is beyond reproach. Although his audience has nearly tripled since he first set foot on American shores in the summer of 1984, Bragg continues to make a conscious effort to reach out to his fans and avoids assuming a "rock star" mentality.

Billy Bragg will be performing at Smith College Sunday night, along with Exene Cervenka (formerly of X) and the Oyster Band. The show starts at 7 p.m.

THEATER

A PERFECT CRIME WITH A WARM HEART

By WILLIAM J. GEORGIADES
Collegian Staff

The Mount Holyoke College Department of Theater Arts presentation of Beth Henley's "Crimes of the Heart" is a more than impressive example of theater that is solidly good by any standards, not just by college theater standards.

It would have been very easy for this production, directed by Joyce Devlin, to have paled into amateur night. The plot, about a trio of Southern twentysomething girls reuniting under trying circumstances, was made for hamming and plodding over acting, as exhibited in the ridiculously overrated Hollywood debacle of the same name.

Fortunately for the audience, however, this production is consumately professional, from the lighting to the set design, and especially, to the performances. The professionalism of this production easily matches the professional (sic) writing power of Beth Henley creating a more than impressive piece of theater.

The play is a quiet piece centering on three sisters overcoming both their internal and external problems. Such a description doesn't sound too thrilling, but the powerful emotions, the pain of growth and the often shattering honesty of the performers make this play one of the most exciting pieces of theater to grace the valley in some time.

Madeline Rains excels as the dowdy, potential old-maid, Lenny Magrath, who takes care of her dying grandfather. We can almost taste her loneliness and despair, the contradictory feelings of envy and disapointment she has for her younger, visiting sisters, as she repeatedly tries to blow out the candles on a dangerously metaphorical banana. More than anything though, throughout all the fighting and frustration, we feel her love coming through; her, at heart, acceptance for her sisters as they are.

Gingy Vanover, Liz Costanzo, and Madeline Rains, in Crimes of the Heart.

Lizabeth Adrienne Costanzo, playing Lenny's sister Meg, is a one woman tour-de-force, epitomizing the small town girl who tried, but never did, make it good, at least not in terms of the singing career she hoped for. Drinking whiskey from the bottle, consorting with married men, yelling at Lenny about how pathetic she is, it's painfully easy to see who she's screaming at. What could have been a two dimensional character, leaning on frustration and petty decadence becomes a fully fleshed out person expressing both a smug superiority and a childhood pain that remains with her.

This pain is the result of the mother of these girls having hung herself. It is on this incident that the play hinges for a great deal of explanation, such as the motives of the character of Babe Botrelle, played beautifully and passionately by Virginia Vanover. Applying a necessary touch of madness/eccentricity to her character the audience can't help but fall fully into sympathty, even a little in love, with her predicament and character. We are actually swayed into accepting that her shooting her husband was the only thing she could have done. This is not so much a result of the script, but more a result of the performance.

Sarah Elizabeth Greer is in fine form as the gossipy neighbour we all have to endure at some time, bringing memories of the Wicked Witch of the West. And Andrew Hawley and Paul Spatarella as the two men in these women's lives come off as adequately pathetic males, exhibiting a shy machismo and a clumsy affection, respectively.

This is an ensemble cast where all the characters are so different that the cast as a whole stands out. There are no disapointments, but rather a whole bunch of delights, a garden of ever blooming performances, intermingling as humans do.

The laughter the audience shares with the performers over the grandfather having a stroke is not viscious, it is a testament to the production of this play that one can laugh at such a sad affair, then laugh at one's laughter and so on. We also revel in Lennys' finding the courage to contact an old boyfriend. We care about these characters. Henleys' work itself is not the best in the world, by any means, but this is a welcome working of the woman's often tedious prose.

The set is flawlessly appropriate as are the costumes (consisting of 70's flares et. al.). The accompanying music is the blues played live and raw with guitar, harp and vocals, perfectly enhanced by the theaters' accoustics.

The lighting is a fine addition to the mood. Casting the stage in a yellow shade one is reminded of the sun, of warmth and hope, giving the desperation of the characters a touch of optimism, especially, towards the end, where Meg says to Babe "It's a sunny day." It's inevitable that you'll leave the theater feeling the same way, at about 10.30 at night. This affecting optimism is infectious, always nessesary, usually rare in most every art form, and availiable.

"Crimes of the Heart" will be playing at the Lab Theater at Mount Holyoke College from tonight through till Sunday night only, beginning at 8 p.m.

Dear Henry & Kathryn,

I am very impressed by this latest demonstration of your commitment to be the very best restauranter in the Valley.

Your recent efforts will undoubtedly recapture your well deserved position of supremacy and well it should, for your newest concept of Asian specialities is timely, unique, and deliciously enticing. Bravo!

As a consumer I applaud your culinary creativity, however, as a business person in Northampton/Western Massachusetts, I bow to the tremendous demonstration of your never ending effort to meet the challenges provided by the trials and tribulations of competition that all small businesses face in this day of rapidly changing consumer preferences and circumstances.

You are an inspiration for all business owners that must compete for their share of market.

Sincerely,

Don

Horseflies itching for stardom

By LISA MILLIGAN
Collegian Correspondent

"For the most part, I find the banjo an annoying instrument," laughed Judy Hyman of the Horseflies. Hyman seemed almost apologetic when explaining that the band's instrumentation includes the use of the banjo. "I want to emphasize that we're not connected with bluegrass music whatsoever."

The band's eclectic collection of instruments (fiddle, banjo, tube drums, African beat box and balliphone all share the same stage with the traditional bass, guitar and drum set) often necessitate clarifications of what the band is not. The flies' musical ideas often inspire critics to liken them to artists like Camper Van Beethoven and Laurie Anderson.

The Horseflies, who will be performing at the Iron Horse Friday night, say their music is influenced by sources from Appalachian dance music to reggae. Hyman said that danceability is a big factor in the flies' music. The band borrows much of its style from Black music and relies heavily on driving rhythms. Band member Rich Sterns contributes to the reggae edge by coaxing a deep, soulful sound out of his banjo ("It's not the [ordinary] 'chimey' sound a banjo usually makes at all," Hyman said).

Hyman said it took years of experimentation to clarify the sound the Horseflies wanted to pursue. The flies began ten years ago in Ithaca, New York as simply four friends getting together to play some music. The original members included Hyman on the violin, Sterns on the banjo, Jeff Claus on the guitar and John Hayward on the bass. "We started out by playing what we thought was very traditional music with a rock edge, but the traditionalists didn't like us because they thought we were too weird, and the [avant-garde] didn't like us because they thought we were too traditional."

By 1987, the Horseflies were ready to cut an album and revamp their style. They added percussionist Taki Masuko and keyboardist Peter Dodge to their ranks and recorded The Human Fly.

Reviewers loved it. "In a way the band was born two and a half years ago," Hyman said.

Since then the group has performed at such places as the Central Park Summerstage Series, ("It was a Fourth of July weekend, the weather was wonderful and we had a blast.") to the Big Beat festival in Vienna, Austria. In March, June and September, the flies also opened for 10,000 Maniacs (who will be playing John M. Greene Hall on Nov. 30).

"10,000 Maniacs are really great folks," said Hyman. "Both our bands have similar backgrounds, coming from upstate New York.

We were really glad that they took us on as an opening act because it gave us a lot of exposure and a better chance to reach a wider audience."

The Maniacs called the flies their "favorite band."

Currently the flies are working on trying to produce their next album, then embarking on a subsequent tour. They are also considering record contracts from two major labels, including Elektra (the label of 10,000 Maniacs).

Immediately, however the flies are looking foward to participating in Brooklyn Academy of Music's "Next Wave-New America" festival Nov. 18.

MUSIC

Getting sick with the Malarians

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Staff

If there is just one thing to remember about the locally-based Malarians, it is that they hate labels placed on what they call "their own kind of music."

Lead vocalist Mal Thursday and Slater Awn, bass guitarist, said with a laugh, they would rather be classified as "Killer Sex Rock."

"It's kind of a drag to be labeled unless you want to fit into a club," Awn said. "Unless you want to fit (the style of music) all the time, it can be a real drag."

The five piece band, which is in a sort of second generation after some personnel changes over the past year, gets much of its inspiration from the early 60's, although they hesitate again to be classified.

"We don't want to be pigeonholed as a 60's band. We're not 60's, we're not metal, but we're still rocking," said Thursday.

Thursday noted that in an area such as the Pioneer Valley, music and groups can be "transient."

"People are only here so long before they pack up and leave," he said. "So it's kind-of difficult to keep a group going, let alone get a following."

"In the Valley at least, it's kind of limited the places you can play," Awn added. "For a five-college area, there are only six real clubs you can play, so we have to go out of town a lot to play. But we have large followings in New Haven, Montreal, and some places in New Jersey."

> "We are going to have a good time and put on a rocking show. That's our ambition. I don't know where we're going to go from there, I mean besides paying the rent, I don't know."
> – Slater Awn

Those who have not heard the Malarians since the new members joined, will be in for a surprise according to Thursday. "We sound nothing like, say the first album (Know)," he said. "We sound a lot more contemporary now. We're kind of a good alternative band. No synthesizers or (synthesized) drums or any of that. Just good rocking music."

Awn added, "It's a little more hard rocking now. And a little more primitive, more raw. It's sounds really good."

The band which also includes Peter McHugh on rhythm guitar, Steve Healy, drummer and co-editor of the literary magazine Brave Mannequin, and lead guitar Mike Sewell, formerly of the Lonely Moans, are preparing for the next show Saturday night, Oct. 28 at Pearl Street. The show is booked as a Halloween Bash, and Pearl Street is giving a $200 prize for the best costume.

According to Thursday, the band plans on also playing old Malarian favorites like "Hexon Blood Beat." Fifth Business will be the opening act.

"It's going to be a good rocking show," Awn said. "We are going to have a good time and put on a rocking show. That's our ambition. I don't know where we're going to go from there, I mean besides paying the rent, I don't know."

Thursday, who just returned from the New York production of his play, Burt in the Marketplace, agreed with Awn. "We plan on having a good time, having fun and rocking the people of Pearl Street."

THE SAVAGE APPROACH

By KRIS EARLE
Collegian Correspondent

Emulsion, such as oil in water, insoluble. Appropriate for Barrence Whitfield and the Savages' Live Emulsified on the Rounder Records label. They are unlike any other band of today. Most live albums are usually utter failures, but Whitfield and the Savages are clearly an exception.

Live Emulsified contains nine selections from the band's three previous albums: their self-titled debut album, Dig Yourself, and the album that won them best local rhythm and blues band of 1988, Ow! Ow! Ow!. Also, three bonus tunes appear on the cassette and compact disc only.

Of the tracks included on the album, the best selection has to be the ridiculous, yet ripping "The Girl From Outer Space," in which Whitfield wails throughout, to an ear-splitting magnitude, and quotes the ever-popular Led Zeppelin line, "Way down inside. . .woman! You need. . ." and back to ". . .the girl from outer space!"

The wail of the wild man is heard on the opening "Bloody Mary," which heartily kicks into the other major high point on the album, "Rockin' the Mule in Kansas," a jumping and hopping mesh of Bruce Katz's Jerry Lee Lewis-type keyboards complemented by a Fishbone-esque/Clarence Clemons type of sax playing from Dave Scholl and the unstoppable teamwork from the rhythm section of drummer Seth Pappas and bassist Dean Cassell.

Out of the three bonus tracks, "Mama Get the Hammer," a song about destroying your loved one, is a gem in itself. The other bonuses, "Chillin'," and "Livin' Proof," are not as uplifting as the first. The former is too slow and a bit boring, while the the latter starts off slow and is not as 60's-like and rockin' as the others.

Nevertheless, I highly recommend Barrence Whitfield and the Savages album Live Emulsified, for those of you who are into James Brown/Little Richard howling and 60's style rock and roll blended with a little bit of soul. The songs featured are the kind one starts to sing and tap the feet to at first hearing. The band obviously has fun at what they do, and Live Emulsified proves that they are good at giving their audience a hell of a time.

Barrence Whitfield and the Savages will be playing an 18 and over show tomorrow night at 8 p.m. at Pearl Street. Whitfield is known to mingle with the crowd as he sings and jumps on and off the stage while performing. They did not win Best Boston Rhythm and Blues Band for sitting around and counting how many toes they have.

TITO !!!

Ask Tito Puente his opinion on "salsa" and he will reply, "I know I'm no cook. The only salsa I know is the one you cook with. I am a musician, and I interpret music."

Puente, recognized as the pre-eminent exponent of Latin jazz, began his musical career at a very young age, when his mother thrust the piano upon him, but his love was always for percussion. Because he was too poor to take music lessons, everything he learned, he learned from the streets. He credits that for his many musical innovations.

"When you go out on the street, out on the field, you have to develop your own creativeness to be able to be successful," he said.

He joined a band called The Happy Boys, and at age 16, got a job with the Noro Morales Orchestra.

After spending time in the military and studying at Julliard, Puente formed his own nine-piece band, The Picadilly Boys. With this band, Puente, better known as The King of Timbales, began to see his innovative Latin rhythms copied into American pop music.

Puente's achievements easily rank him among the hardest working men in showbiz. In his four decade, globe spanning musical career, he has done over 120 recordings and 400 compositions. He has won three Grammy awards.

He has worked with many jazz greats, including Woody Herman and Doc Severenson, and his songs have been covered by the likes of Carlos Santana. He participated in the two major movies, Radio Days and Armed and Dangerous, and his orchestra was the first Latin orchestra to perform for the President of the United States.

Live, the band is phenomenal. Puente wowed them at the UMass Fine Arts Center last year, with his non-stop pounding rhythms and endless energy. People were literally dancing in the aisles.

Murphy says yes to education, no to new taxes

By KATERI WALSH
Collegian Staff

Democratic gubernatorial candidate and Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy, addressing more than 100 people in Memorial Hall last night, said education is a top priority, but a Murphy administration will not pay for education through new taxes.

The deciding factor in her entering the state's gubernatorial race was a commitment to education, Murphy said.

"If there is something that is so compelling and so important to me that I'm going to stand up and pursue the governorship with a vengeance despite all that goes along with that, that something is this state's public schools," she said, adding, "that means K-12 as well as higher education."

Murphy was continually brought back to the subject of higher education and the fiscal crisis that has led to cuts in the University of Massachusetts budget of $23.5 million in 27 months, crippling several departments and programs. Murphy would not commit herself to raising taxes at any level, saying that the legislative climate for an increase is not there.

"Until there are more cuts, you will not see more taxes, because the political will is just not there," she said, although she continually dodged questions of what programs she would cut.

She said that what is needed in the current fiscal crisis is a long-term plan to examine all of the different programs and needs of the state, including prisons, mental health, roads and bridges, environment, and education.

"What we need is a 10-year plan that fits it all together," she said, adding the first thing to do is "stop this practice of prolonging the payment of bills." She said her administration would commit itself to an annual fiscal growth of five percent.

She commended students for last week's demonstration at the Statehouse in Boston to protest budget cuts, and called for registered voters to keep the pressure on their state legislators.

"What you did is far beyond some of the glib lines of some of the newspapers about stomping the flowers," she said. "You've changed the level of discourse from 500 angry students to thousands being heard."

"That kind of stand has to continue," she added. "One shot catches attention but a sustained outcry makes a case that's going to be heard."

Murphy, who met earlier yesterday with some 30 staff and students at the Everywoman's Center before going to Wilder Hall, emphasized at both speeches her unconditional pro-choice stance. She stressed the importance of viewing the issue from a personal standpoint.

"Any time we can reduce this to personal stories, whether they be our mothers, our grandmothers, or our friends, those sort of stories are very compelling because they reflect an honesty, a raw reality that cuts so deeply," she said.

Murphy said her goal for Massachusetts was to have a constitutional amendment that would "keep the courts [and] keep the legislature . . . out of the abortion issue."

She said the wording of an amendment should be as simple as possible: "This is a woman's decision . . . period."

Murphy, who was secretary of environmental affairs under the first Dukakis administration in the 1970s, outlined her plan to have "zero pollution" discharged in Massachusetts by the year 2000. She proposed meeting this goal through engineering, chemical redesign, and "an aggressive program of systematically cracking down on pollution" at the state and municipal levels.

"The fact is that the environmental degradation going on jeopardizes life on this planet," Murphy said. "We need to start thinking globally."

Jeff Cronin, a member of the University Democrats, sponsors of the speech, said that while the group plans to bring all the Democratic gubernatorial candidates to campus, he is most impressed by Murphy's candidacy, citing her commitment to education and her pro-choice stance.

"She's committed to pro-choice at a time when it's imperative that our statewide office-holders have that commitment," he said.

Few hear controversial speaker

No room for Cameron?!

By AMY HENRY
Collegian Correspondent

Controversial speaker Paul Cameron said in an interview last night that homosexuals are deviant, morally disruptive to the fiber of society and a public health hazard.

Cameron, of the controversial Family Research Institute, was scheduled to speak last night in the Campus Center, but arrived to find the room had been previously reserved by the Central American Solidarity Association. He instead spoke with several students individually in the Campus Center.

Cameron, whose last visit to the University of Massachusetts in the fall of 1987 caused widespread controversy on campus, discussed several issues, focusing mainly on homosexuality.

"Homosexuals have admitted to intentionally infecting others with sexually transmitted diseases," Cameron said. He added that "Homosexuals are more socially disruptive. They have more instances of getting parking tickets and of committing suicide.

Cameron also said that statistically "people who hang on to virginity get better grades in school."

He said if abortions were made illegal, the number performed each year would be cut in half. "I'm for developing human life, and we should go to great lengths to protect fetuses, " he said, adding that in cases where the woman's life is at stake, abortion is acceptable. He does not, however, condone abortion in cases of rape or incest, he said.

Cameron then addressed testing for Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome. He said everyone in the workplace should be subjected to mandatory testing for AIDS, and those testing positive should be quarantined.

Ted Jansson, human affairs coordinator for the Lesbian, Bisexual, and Gay Alliance, said that Cameron's presence on campus is "detrimental to human rights and therefore antagonizing to the LBGA."

Another LBGA member, Jennifer Fox, said "As a lesbian I feel as threatened and violated as a Black student might feel if a Grand Dragon of the Ku Klux Klan were permitted to speak here.'

Ted Maravelias, president of Students for Life, sponsor of the event, has accused the Student Activities Office and other administration officials of "abridging his freedom of speech, freedom of assembly."

"This is a case of political discrimination," he said.

Irene Carew, director of the Student Activities Office, said that the speech "was not a scheduled event" and by having Cameron speak Maravelias could be violating public policy.

Cameron has said that he plans to return to campus during Gay Pride Week. In response to Maravelias' statement that the LBGA gets $15,000 for this week, Cameron said, "That's pathetic and wrong."

The PSRU: friend or foe?

Students split on campus activists

By BETH GATELY
Collegian Staff

They've taken over six buildings and the construction site of a $5 million engineering building, protesting Defense Department-financed research at the University of Massachusetts.

But UMass continues to receive some $12 million each year in research grants from the DOD. Most of the financing is channeled to the engineering and polymer science departments.

They've generated support from some faculty and community members and increased their student following and opposition from the more conservative constituency on campus.

But the majority of students on campus have been silent, giving every indication of ambivalence. What does the average student think about this group of student activists?

Given the opportunity to voice an opinion, some students appreciated the People for a Socially Responsible University's ideals, while others fundamentally disagreed with the group.

Fionna Smith, a Hampshire College junior, said that making its presence known nationwide is PSRU's first step toward developing a dialogue with the government — a dialogue that may result

Cosby to help raise $ for UM future

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Comedian Bill Cosby is the planned honored guest at a $100 a seat fundraiser Sunday night at the University of Massachusetts — a fundraiser designed to kick off the University Fund for the Future, a reserve that will help lobby against further budget cutbacks.

Stephen Kulick, spokesman for the event, said the fund will principally support a three-year outreach campaign to strengthen the University's image across the state.

Cosby has agreed to donate his time to speak at the event to help aid the University, which recently suffered an additional loss of $6.4 million from its operating budget, Kulick said. The latest cut is the fifth in less than three years.

"He has responded to an appeal," Kulick said. "It has a lot to do with the budget problems and to try to be in a better position in the future."

Cosby, a UMass alumnus, received his Master's degree in education from the University in 1972, his doctorate in 1977, and an Honorary degree in 1980.

Cosby maintains a home in nearby Shelburne Falls.

"I think he understands the seriousness of the budget crunch and wants to help out," Kulick said.

Other scheduled speakers include Chancellor Joseph Duffey and three members of the UMass Board of Trustees, Robert Haynes, Mary Reed, and Chairman Gordon Oakes.

Also scheduled to speak are John Braude, of the Tax Equity Alliance of Massachusetts, Roseanne Bacon, president of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, and UMass professor of anthropology John Cole.

BOG delays WMUA office expansion again

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

After 30 minutes of intense debate, the Board of Governors voted 7-6 to table a motion that would have allowed radio station WMUA to expand into room 103 of the Campus Center, the home of Spectrum.

Gov. Bill Hewitt said WMUA, located in room 102, has been seeking additional space near their studio for about six years. A recently vacated room on the fourth floor of the Student Union could be moved into by Spectrum, an arts magazine, he said.

"Its unfair to WMUA to delay any longer," he said. "WMUA is a large organization which has 21 employees, Spectrum publishes about once every three years."

The proposed additional room for WMUA would be used as office space and equipment storage, Hewitt said.

A problem arose when Hewitt told the board he was not able to inform Spectrum of the motion. Liz Hart, BOG vice president, recommended the motion be tabled so the BOG space committee can examine it and continue to try to contact the Spectrum staff.

Charlotte Carter, the BOG chair, said board members made many phone calls and wrote letters to the Spectrum office but got no response. She was pleased the board voted to conduct a thorough investigation. The motion is scheduled for a vote Nov. 2.

In other business, Carter said the Campus Center concourse vending program exists to benefit students by allowing them to earn money to support Registered Student Organizations and education-related expenses and offering them handcrafted and manufactured goods at reasonable prices.

Carter said she has met with the vending coordinator and Campus Center officials to discuss revising the vending policy.

Bill Harris, the Campus Center director, has proposed increases of between $2 and $20 to full and part-time students, dependent on the vendors' University affiliation.

"The costs of doing business have gone up and we need more money for general operations," Harris said. "I am speculating students can afford to [pay more] and are willing to pay more."

Carter said fees should be raised for vendors not affiliated with the University.

"The students shouldn't have to take the brunt of fee increases while we're going through budget cuts," she said.

A proposal Carter and the others are considering would limit an RSO sponsorship to 10 days. Vendors are sponsored by RSOs, keeping all money beyond an $60 fee paid to the RSO.

Scott Lever, WMUA chairperson, said several thousand dollars of the WMUA operating budget comes from vending revenue. WMUA has business relationships with about 10 vendors who pay them $60 a day to sell on the concourse. The radio station employs an internal vending organizer who combs fleamarkets looking for potential vendors, he said.

"This proposal will really kill us," he said. "We will lose vending money, and also have to spend more to recruit vendors." in listening to one another and sharing ideas.

"The longer the government is ignorant the more unruly [the protesters] will become out of desperation and anger," she said. "I think there should be some motion on the part of the government to work with students, because if we don't get invited in the process, in 20 years we'll have a disaffected government that's out of touch with reality."

Smith, though not a member of the PSRU, is a veteran protester. At the University of Wisconsin-Madison, she participated in an overnight occupation of the chancellor's office, and demanded the university divest from South Africa.

However, Jack Thompson, a senior BDIC major, said though he agrees with the group's ideals, he thinks protesting will not help the United States head toward such a radical change in ideals.

"I wish the DOD would get the hell off campus, but I'm not sure protests are an effective means of reaching that end," Thompson said. "There is no great unifying issue for everyone to be [upset] about."

But if 10,000 people or the whole campus took over a building, such a change may occur," Thompson said. "Marx was right. It takes the proletariat to stand as one to make changes." He added, "Unless they do that, the powers that be will have the final say."

Ellen Schoff, a UMass senior, said, "I agree with their cause and they have a reason to protest, but they are not going about it the right way," she said. "I think it would help if they had more organization."

Students in favor of DOD funding on campus said the money for research must come from somewhere, and given the state's current fiscal constraints, any money should be accepted.

Meg Starkweather, a first year graduate student in polymer science, said, "There is a problem where the money comes from."

She added, "There was a huge rally in Boston to protest the lack of funding from the state, but they are also protesting too much from the federal government. It all depends on how the money is labeled."

But Starkweather said she agrees with PSRU's opposition to research on biological and chemical weapons.

"Personally, I wouldn't do research for a nuclear bomb, but a lot of times students don't know what the research is for."

But Dave Dube, a chemical engineering student, said he is adamantly opposed to the PSRU.

"I have no problem with defense research," he said. "In fact, I don't think there's enough money from the DOD."

"They are infringing on my rights to an education when they takeover a building, and they have no right doing this," Dube said.

Increased campus diversity examined

By CHRIS MACEK
Collegian Correspondent

Jeff Hirsch, director of the mental health department at the University of Massachusetts, addressed a group of more than 30 students, faculty, and staff Wednesday about the need to recognize diverse groups at UMass.

In the forum "Networking in a Multicultural Campus," Hirsch said, "There's no one way of seeing the human condition. Our goal is to be a multicultural organization where every person and idea is valued."

The event was designed to "highlight the many coun-

Protesters face suspension

Students involved in Wednesday's takeover of the site of construction of a $5 million engineering research facility may face suspension and fines for interrupting work, said University of Massachusetts Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis L. Madson.

"The students can expect the sanctions will be quite severe," Madson said, adding that those who have had a prior history of violating the University's picketing code and code of student conduct may face suspension.

Madson also said he estimated about 10 students involved in the takeover were positively identified as UMass undergraduate and graduate students, with other students from the other colleges in the five college area.

He said the UMass Dean of Students office would be working with the deans of each of the other colleges to establish disciplinary actions against the others, and that Samuel Conti, dean of the graduate school, would handle action against the graduate students.

The students, members of People for a Socially Responsible University, sat-in at the site for three hours Wednesday, stopping construction work on the facility. The sit-in cost the University more than $2,000 per hour in lost work time.

"Students can expect they will be held accountable for construction costs," Madson said.

Statehouse grounds to be revived

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

Students traveling to the Statehouse in Boston tomorrow morning plan not to carry protest signs or petitions against budget cuts.

Instead, the group of about 25 students plan to bring 16,000 red and yellow tulip bulbs, with the hope of replenishing the damaged grounds of the Statehouse.

The idea was conceived by the students, members of the department of landscape and architecture. They contacted the Statehouse this week and arranged to help repair the grounds which were damaged in a rally against state budget cuts nine days ago.

The Statehouse requested that students

New Games to provide new look at LS&R

The Leisure Studies and Resources department has scheduled the New Games Festival this afternoon at the campus pond.

"New games are introductory. They're a way to meet new people," said senior leisure studies major and LS&R President Diana Casey. "Many of these games are used in children camps."

The reasons for the event are twofold. "We want to get people there to learn about leisure studies and to dispel the myth that we only teach people to play," Casey said.

"We can do anything an [Hotel, Restaurant and Travel Administration] major can do, and more," she said, noting that many graduates get hired in many fields.

Casey lauded the program for its fine faculty. "The professors are the most fascinating on campus. They will do anything in the world for you," she said.

Landscape, Architecture and Regional Planning Department Head Lawrence Klar, who noted that the department recently hired a new faculty member, said the bulk of leisure studies courses focus on supervisory and management-level career opportunities. He hopes the festival will increase awareness of leisure studies.

"It's unfortunate that most students aren't aware of the brunt of the program. There are a lot of students out there that are missing out on a great opportunity," he said.

Jet carrying 54 people crashes soon after liftoff

TAIPEI, Taiwan (AP) — A China Airlines Boeing 737 carrying 54 people crashed into a mountain and burned yesterday just after taking off from the eastern city of Hualien, and all aboard were feared dead, officials said.

All on board were Taiwanese except for a passenger identified as a businessman from California. The airline gave his name as J.W. Philips. It did not provide a hometown.

The jet was en route from Hualien to Taipei, 93 miles away.

Witnesses on a nearby highway said they could see the flames from the wreckage.

Hualien police said about 130 rescuers rushed to the crash site near Chia Min, a village of about 2,000 people. The site was accessible only by foot. It was expected to take them hours to reach the plane, and they were slowed by rain and darkness.

The jet left Hualien at 6:54 p.m. and crashed five minutes later, according to officials of the airline, Taiwan's national carrier. It said there were 47 passengers and seven crew members. Airline spokesman Lodge Lo said all were believed killed.

Airline officials had earlier said that there were 29 passenger aboard the aircraft.

It was raining when the plane took off, but the cause of the crash was not known. No other details were immediately available.

In Seattle, where Boeing is based, Boeing Commercial Airplanes spokesman Tom Cole identified the aircraft as a 737-200 delivered to China Airlines in December 1986. He had no other details.

Taiwan's worst air disaster was in 1981, when 110 people died in the crash of a Far Eastern Air Transport Boeing 737.

Gorby to plan cut in nukes

D.C. downplays proposal

HELSINKI, Finland (AP) — Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev yesterday announced a major plan to reduce nuclear weapons in the Baltic Sea that will include the scrapping of Moscow's nuclear-armed submarines there.

In a goodwill gesture to northern Europe, the Kremlin chief said the Soviet Union has removed all tactical nuclear missiles that could strike the region and will take certain types of sea-launched nuclear weapons out of the Baltic Sea.

He made these announcements in remarks prepared for delivery to 1,500 Finnish politicians, businessmen and other invited guests. Gorbachev said the eventual goal was to rid the Baltic of nuclear weapons.

"We are prepared to come to agreement with all the nuclear powers and the Baltic states on effective guarantees for the nuclear-free status of the Baltic Sea," he said.

Gorbachev said the steps were being taken unilaterally and were a follow-up to a speech he gave two years ago in the Soviet northern port of Murmansk. Many of his proposals in that speech - including a call for a nuclear-free zone in northern Europe - were dismissed by NATO.

In Washington, White House press secretary Marlin Fitzwater said, "We do not believe nuclear-free zones contribute to security in Europe."

"Most of these proposals have been designed to affect NATO deterrence capability while leaving Soviet nuclear weapons intact," Fitzwater said. "On the other hand, we do appreciate the intent of this and if it can develop into something concrete, why, that might be a hopeful sign."

Gorbachev said the Soviet Union already has taken two of its Golf-class submarines out of operation from the Baltic, and he pledged to destroy the remaining four by the end of next year. The nuclear missiles aboard the subs will also be destroyed and not replaced, he said.

Gorbachev did not specify which types of sea-launched nuclear weapons the Soviet Union would remove from the Baltic Sea.

The United States has expressed concern that removal of the sea-launched missiles cannot be verified, and it has balked at their inclusion in a superpower arms pact now being negotiated.

Report shows only modest gains in school reform

NEW YORK (AP) — States have made only modest gains toward school reform this decade, and few are heeding calls to shift more power and responsibility to local schools, a report said.

The report, "The Progress of Reform: An Appraisal of State Education initiatives," found that only a few states such as Washington, Arkansas, Maine and Massachusetts have programs to encourage local districts to find creative ways of improving classroom instruction.

The study, released Wednesday, concluded that state efforts since 1983, when the federal report "A Nation at Risk" heralded the school reform movement, generally have lacked coherence.

It suggested that future items on the reform agenda such as more equitable distribution of school funds to poorer districts and giving teachers and parents more authority in school governance will be dauntingly difficult.

"If we're going to get those kinds of things, people are going to have to be willing to stay at it for a long time, " said William A. Firestone, associate professor of education at Rutgers University and co-author of the report.

The study was produced by the Center for Policy Research in Education, a consortium of the Eagleton Institute of Politics at Rutgers, Michigan State University school of education, the Stanford University school of education and the University of Wisconsin-madison Center for Education Research.

House fails to override Bush

Veto on abortion still stands

WASHINGTON (AP) — Abortion rights advocates in Congress say they're not giving up their bid to allow Medicaid abortions for rape and incest victims, despite falling far short of overriding President Bush's veto.

The House sustained Bush's veto Wednesday in a 231-191 vote, 51 fewer than the two-thirds majority needed to overturn a veto.

Rep. Chris Smith, R-N.J., called the vote "a decisive victory for the pro-life movement" and evidence the political ground has not shifted on the abortion issue, as abortion rights advocates say.

But Democrats and Republicans who back the more liberal restrictions argues that public sentiment is on their side and that the vote will yield far-reaching political damage for Bush among younger voters.

"I am amazed," said Rep. Les AuCoin, D-Ore., "to see the Republican White House hand over to the Democratic Party a political generation that's out there and awakening to this issue."

"President Bush may well have stumbled on the one issue that could cost him re-election," said a Republican, Rep. Bill Green of New York.

The vote followed Bush's veto on Saturday of the provision, which is but a paragraph in a $156.7 billion appropriations bill for health, education and labor programs for the 1990 fiscal year that began Oct. 1. The provision would loosen an eight-year ban on federal financing of abortions for poor women except in cases where the woman's life is endangered by her pregnancy. It would have permitted Medicaid abortions for poor women who are victims of rape or incest and who "reported promptly" to authorities.

help plant the bulbs, said John Hancox, a UMass senior and coordinator of the event.

"There has been considerable damage done to the flowers," Hancox said. "By doing this, we hope to get the issue off the crushed flowers and bring the issue back to the budget cuts."

The students are scheduled to leave UMass for Boston at about 11 a.m. and, using their own tools, plan to work through the day under the supervision of groundskeeper Gregory Arnold. The project is being funded entirely by donations from students, faculty, staff and alumni, Hancox said.

Hancox added that he and the department of landscape and architecture hope to organize a statewide fundraiser of Massachusetts public colleges to pay for the rest of the damage.

"It's a positive method of bringing out the issue of budget cuts," he said.

cils, committees, organizations, and other groups which work, often behind-the-scenes, to make this an increasingly multicultural campus," said Grant Ingle, a staff assistant in the Office of Human Relations.

Ricardo Townes, associate dean of students and representing the UMass Minority Employment Coalition, urged faculty and staff to find ways to connect with students.

Holding up an article in Wednesday's Collegian that criticized Civility Week, Townes said, "Civility week is not seen by the students of color how we would like them to see it."

. . . see you at the ballot boxes Mikey

I was at the rally on Oct. 18th at the Statehouse. It was really good to be part of the large crowd of undergraduate and graduate students, faculty and others. The enthusiasm of the people was really rousing, especially in a country known for non-participation.

The State officials behaved as though the crowd didn't exist. The fact that only one of them (Tsongas) emerged to address the crowd was adding insult to injury. Their behavior seemed to typify the attitude that the rally was the work of aberrant weirdos, and if ignored long enough, they would just shut up and stop being bothersome.

Unfortunately, the student leadership played right into the hands of the officials. Instead of focusing on a clear plan of action, they dithered and dallied and waited for the gods in the Statehouse to shower them with blessings. There was clearly a lack of direction and no demands were clearly enunciated.

When Paul Tsongas deigned to speak, and started off with "Until today we didn't even know that you cared," the crowd was rightfully outraged. This is when the confused priorities of the "leaders" became obvious. They spent more time placating people in the crowd than representing their concerns to the goons.

The need for control is understandable, but there was a complete loss of momentum here. Why didn't Mike Dukakis speak to the people? How about Ed Lashman?

This brings us to the subject of the media portrayal of the event. Admittedly, there were people in the crowd who seemed to be hell bent on converting the occasion into a party, but this type of machismo is inevitable in this sort of situation. That definitely does not detract from the seriousness of intent of the majority of the people present.

How come everybody forgot to mention that there were graduate students and faculty people present? How come the officials and their stooges and the media are left carping about the petunias?

All this focus on non-issues is calculated to divert attention from the real issues. All of a sudden, some people have changed from fiery ralliers to apologists. Come off it, that was a quite docile crowd, speaking in terms of mob mentality.

If people are sitting somewhere congratulating themselves, with some sort of post-orgasmic bliss about the achievements of the rally, they should think again. The real work starts now. The politicians up there have to be reminded that they are supposed to represent the interests of the people, not acting like seemingly benevolent patriarchs frowning down upon errant urchins.

They have got to get the message that we are the people they represent, and if their actions don't reflect our concerns, see you next time at the ballot box Mikey. Remember: Don't send to know for whom the bell tolls. It tolls for thee.

Amherst rep congratulates UMass students

I extend my thanks and congratulations to the thousands of UMass students, faculty and staff who made the trip to Boston last week to lobby at the Statehouse. The rally was by far the largest to hit Beacon Hill in more than a decade. When the dust settles, I believe this effort will have helped our cause tremendously.

I also want to express my deep respect and admiration for those students in the Department of Landscape Architecture and Regional Planning who are heading the effort to replant the flowers damaged at the Statehouse. This effort will go a long way towards easing any of the tensions created during the excitement of last week's rally.

Thanks to all who have called or written their state legislators. This effort marked a major milestone in our campaign to support and improve our system of public higher education.

State officials and media divert attention

Unless there has been a rewrite of the Constitution, a person is innocent until proven guilty. As was reported in the newspapers, I am one of the two students charged with disorderly conduct and assault and battery of a police officer during the budget cut protest rally at the Statehouse. An enormous wave of repudiation of my alleged action has crashed. Before I drown, allow me to explain my role in the action of civil disobedience that took place.

The incident began as a group of 400 to 500 students, myself included, gathered on the stairs in the lobby of the House of Representatives. We then marched on the House Chambers where we were stopped by the Capital police in the foyer prior to the House floor.

There we sat down and chanted. When more police arrived, we were told to leave the foyer, which we did. After moving into the lobby, students began pushing into the chambers again. I became trapped in the doorway between the police and other students. I would have liked to have left the area but could not move due to the crush of bodies around me.

The police were yelling to get back. I tried to explain that I could not move, but there was much confusion and physical pressure. Soon an officer grabbed me and told me that I was under arrest. I assume that he wanted to make an example of me. He then "informed" me that I was charged with assault and battery — I had allegedly kicked him.

I assure you that I did not kick anyone. I do not believe violence accomplishes anything but retaliatory violence. Besides, if you were directly in front of 10-12 pound officers would you kick them? The object of this protest was to make our voices heard. As I am sure you are all aware, the university and the other schools in the (un)Commonwealth can not withstand the previous cutbacks and certainly not another round while maintaining any semblance of quality.

We feel frustrated by the legislature's lack of action on behalf of the public education system. Public education provides the only opportunity to the middle and lower classes to gain a better personal and societal standard of living. Our lobbying, while has a yielded nothing but more cutbacks. Speaker Kevarian referred to our behavior as disgraceful.

I regret that this incident will allow state officials and the media to divert attention from the real issue of the economic destruction of the public education system in Massachusetts.

Michael Currier

Where was our voice?

Although I believe the rally in Boston on Wednesday was a triumph, I must not let pass my outrage, my disgust, and my sadness.

Last week, at one of the meetings to organize the rally, it was decided that only one student leader from each of the states' higher educational institutions would speak at the State House. It was also decided at that meeting that Student Trustee, Eric Nakajima, would be the speaker for the University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

Given that he is one of the two university-wide elected officials of the undergraduate body, the President being the other, this was appropriate. However, the night before the rally, Eric was approached by a newly elected senator, who I shall not name, who suggested that another senator, newly elected in October, should speak at the rally.

Eric, at this time, is somewhat confusing. Apparently, the logic was that a non "student leader" would better represent the students. Why would a non "student leader" represent the students better than an official who was intimately aware of the issues and is acknowledged to lead the student body? Given this, why was the suggested speaker an elected senator of the commuter area? It seems to me, that the logic put forth was a bit skewed, and someone's political interest prevailed over public interest. I feel this reeks of a hidden agenda.

The position of the Student Government President is one of great responsibility. Not only do they have to be informed on the majority of campus issues, but they must also be the definitive student voice.

Where then was Eric's head? Why wasn't the Collegian wondering where Eric's head was? And why wasn't the student body wondering where Eric's head was?

Eric was in the State House all day. He did not make it clear to anyone that he would not be speaking. He did not inform anyone that there would be an alternative speaker, nor did he relay that there would be only one speaker per institution. President Tracy Davis naturally assumed that she would be expected to speak. This is her job. She is our student leader. She is our voice.

With all this said, perhaps the saddest point, is that an opportunity has been lost. I am outraged that neither Tracy, nor Eric, spoke at perhaps the largest student rally on the most crucial issue concerning the students of this state. I hope that Trustee Nakajima would see the necessity of a formal apology to our President. Eric, where is your head?

" . . .the march to the Statehouse, led by the UMass Marching Band, was a historic and important first statement of democratic protest and the consistent urging of students to register and to make their opinions known and their votes to count is a serious and useful first step in these dark days. Represenative Stan Rosenberg's message to keep writing state legislatures weekly, will, we hope, not go unheard."

Active issue support

Students, staff and faculty should be proud of the support for public higher education that we demonstrated last Wednesday. Despite raw weather, the turnout in Boston was excellent. As an administrator, who took vacation time and attended, I was appreciative of, but not surprised by the focus and commitment shown by those who gave their time to be there. It is disappointing that there were disruptive incidents and that the media focused so much attention on the accidental damage to lawn and flowers.

Nonetheless, the point was made that we care about access, diversity and excellence in public higher education in the Commonwealth. Thank you to all who made the trip to the rally, as well as to those who wrote and called their legislators!

What next? Students, parents and others are carrying their share in increasing tuition and fees. Faculty and administration are now trimmed to the bone. It's time for the legislature to do its part by raising new revenues. Together we need to continue our active support in keeping attention to this issue.

Wizards and aliens invade UMass

By DAKKAN ABBE
Collegian Correspondent

Passing through the campus center lobby last weekend, few people would know what strange things were happening a mere 50 feet below them. The difference wasn't in mere space, but in time. As 1989 dragged its sorry ass past the campus center information desk, occasionally tripping over itself and making a date with a six-pack of cold beer, eternity raged on in grand splendor, wasting little time to worry about what century it was, caring little for the automatic tellers nearby, floating around the lower level in a universe of wizard kings and Orang Penerbangs.

It was a glorious freak show carried off with pride and disdain for the "mundanes" that oozed nothingness above them. NotJustAnotherCon 5 was just that.

The schedule of events for the weekend read like some kind of gathering of creation happy gods looking for inspiration for that new planet in star system 26. "Create a society." "Create an alien." "Enclosed environments." They've got it right. Our world has become so boring, predictable and downright depressing that the best thing to do is merely ignore it and create your own reality. One panel discussion I went to was on live fantasy role playing where you spend about ten days with at least 50 other people living another reality that someone spent six months designing and writing. Each player must read a 300 page book before they can play.

There were several contests over the weekend including an unspeakable prose competition and the infamous "Eye of Argon Test." "The Eye of Argon" was a short story written some 30 years ago that is generally acknwledged as the most horrible piece of sci-fi/fantasy prose ever created. A veritable potpourri of cliches, unspeakable metaphors and adjectival nonsense so awful that the winner of the contest was the one who could read the story out loud for the longest period of time without laughing. Out of 22 pages, the furthest anyone got was the fourth page, where the bravest reader of them all was overcome by the sheer stupidity and ridiculousness of it.

Saturday night was the costume ball, where all were out in the finest of costumes, fit for a party at the Restaurant at the End of the Universe. Scantily clad women with deerskin loin cloths and fur breast plates mingled with the cannibalistic residents of the guacamole planet, Chi-Chi Con Villa. Trekkies and Dragon-heads exchanged convention stories and discussed the Sunday afternoon art auction where fantastical vision met the limits of two-dimensional reality, though that limit seemed to not really exist in the creations of the brilliant artists shown. In the Hucksters room art met capitalism and had a great conversation that lasted the whole weekend, entertaining everyone who came in for a visit.

NJAC-5 was a raging success to some, an exercise in silliness to others, merely XPress 24 entertainment to others, but it was much more than any of that. It was Dragon's breath, photon-fire, Kirk-blood, Orc-flesh and warp-speed stew for the world weary and the other world hungry. Yum-yum, give me some more.

Royal 'Family' on their toes

Gisele Plourde of the The Royal Winnipeg Ballet performing Beethoven's Symphony Number 7

By LAURIE O'NEILL
Collegian Correspondent

On Tuesday evening, the Royal Winnepeg Ballet of Canada delivered an inspirational performance in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. A near capacity audience watched the single showing of the Royal Winnepeg's program, before they continued on its U.S./Atlantic Canada tour.

The company's opening piece, entitled "Seventh Symphony," was truly a celebration of movement and music. Toer Van Schayk's choreography added dimensions of harmony and mystery to the music of Beethoven's Symphony No. 7. Throughout the piece, the organization of the choreography and the dancing progressed towards order.

Several times, eight or ten dancers concluded a powerful scene by abandoning the stage, leaving a lone performer to reveal his or her own character to the audience. The seeming disorder of 20 independent bodies scampering across the stage was resolved by the end of the piece, when they all came together to move as a single fluid unit.

After intermission, the company performed a more light hearted work, "Anne of Green Gables — The Ballet." Choreographed by Jaques Lemay with music by Norman Campbell, the dancer enacted the story of Anne Shirley, a young orphan who eventually finds a home for herself as well as a place in the hearts of the audience. The ballet traces her growth and often humorous experiences as a schoolgirl causing mischief, as a teen discovering young love, and as a young woman confronting reality and choosing responsibility.

Suzanne Rubio's lively, caring and expressive performance of the character Anne was totally convincing. The audience responded positively throughout the piece with laughter, and the final applause endured for approximately four to five minutes.

The Royal Winnepeg Ballet prides itself on its versatility, and boasted popularity at its recently sold-out performances in Japan, China, Taiwan, Malaysia, and Thailand.

Its 1989-1990 tour is a special cause for celebration because it marks the company's 50th season, a great achievement in the world of dance. David Moroni, artistic consultant for the Royal Winnepeg, states what is probably the key to the Ballet's consistent success, "It reaches out to its audiences, it's not pretentious."

Of course, the company would not succeed without its dancers. Why do they stay? According to principal dancer John Kaminski, "The thing that's great, is the size of the company. It is a family."

Why do audiences love it? Maybe they love it because the unity of the "family" contributes feeling and coherency to every work the dancers perform. After all, ballet is truly a symphony of motion.

Poetry in emotion

Monday night, Jim Carroll took us for a ride, or rather a passage, in time. Reading from new, old, and unfinished works, he brought about a modified history of his own universal mysticism, with selections from Living at the Movies, Forced Entries and other yet unfinished work. These were delivered with a spasmatic eloquence which enveloped the spectators with sincere corruption.

He drove us through a mythological/anthropological tour of New York, exemplifying his crusades through this chamber of horrors. Revealing the beauty of it's transformation, unveiling the layers of laden filth stripped to a core of truth and reality, he defines the significance of creative perception through conception of the soul.

Damning the unguided complacency of those who do not live with fire, who satisfy themselves with warmth yet never enter the flame, Carroll challenged us with our unknown spiritual realizations and knowledge of a faith and power.

He is a conductor and terminator of rhythmic force and grace, reflecting light from his space, a gate to the heart, an evolution of love.

The soft cruelty of his words carressed a bridge to the willingness of seated tenants in the room, as if a center of light in some strange nebulae. His lyrics are a crucifixion of experience, leaving us to tremble of our own accord.

As an introduction to Mr. Carroll, Azaela Snail was a stark figure, shadowed on slide projections of New York scenes, a young woman echoing coarse ballads of emotion and desire with potential for enchantment.

Fuzzbox will sock you, shock you and rock you

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Our special topic this week is a subject about which we profess great ignorance: women. Personally, we have always had a weakness for the female voice smothered in lots of electronics, and this week we'll look at two bands that follow this formula, to surprisingly different ends.

Animal Logic is a trio that looks great on paper: Stewart Copeland, former drummer for the Police, plus Stanley Clarke, legendary bassist and a woman named Deborah Holland who is credited with "songs, vocals." Obviously, we know who to blame for this fiasco. You'd think that with Clarke's twangy bass and Copeland's genius for drum and keyboard programming, nothing could go wrong. Unfortunately, nothing goes right. Holland's voice is pretty, but unremarkable, and it has an annoying nasal twang at times. The songs themselves are fairly insipid, full of trite cliches about love, that are not helped much by the standard chord changes.

It's really quite amazing how two tremendous musicians could have their trademark styles so totally muted. The worst thing about this album is how generic it all sounds. Copeland and Clarke have utterly failed to put any kind of stamp of individuality on this. Clarke in particular suffers. His bass playing is almost totally inaudible. What went wrong here? It's beyond our capacity to say, but if pressed, we'd have to say that no matter how great your players, you can't make something out of terrible songs.

DISC JUNKIE

We here at the Junkie Offices would never drop such a load of depression on our faithful readers unless we had a special treat in store to compensate. And never fear, because this week's goodie is a real doozy. Four lovely English ladies, who used to go by the journalist-unfriendly name of We've Got a Fuzzbox and We're Gonna Use It, but who have since shortened it to plain old Fuzzbox (a lovely double entendre), have released a new album called Big Bang! (a lovely triple entendre). They used to be a rough guitar outfit, kind of like the Go-Go's with grunge, but for some reason they suddenly decided that they wanted to be an ultra-polished Euro-pop band. This suits us just fine. Imagine if Frankie Goes to Holywood or Propaganda or any of those great Zang Tuum Tumb bands had survived to 1989. Sound good? You bet! A lot of the credit must go to producer Andy Richards, who is a disciple of ZTT wizards Trevor Horn and Stephen Lipson. In the best ZTT tradidtion, this record sounds HUGE, with a sound you just can't ignore. But lest you think that the ladies Fuzzbox are just bimbos to be pushed around by an evil synth-wielding producer, forget it. In interviews they come across as a group of women totally in control of their career. The record sounds the way it does because they wanted it to.

Vicki Fuzzbox has a fantastic voice. Breathy and sensuous, it oozes sex everywhere. The sharp intake of breath just before the opening line of "Self!" qualifies as one of those Pop Music Epiphanies, when you suddenly realize that the world will never be the same again. Then Jo Fuzzbox straps on her guitar for a great cock-rock thrash, and your stereo is flung into orbit.

Whether tackling neon psychedelia on "Pink Sunshine," lilting a gentle ballad on "Irish Bride," or covering a Yoko Ono tune ("Walking on Thin Ice"), this album has confidence and fun to spare. It popped into our Top Ten very quickly. Take a look into this Big Bang and find out why the back cover says "Batteries Not Included" on it. It won't take you long to figure out, we're sure.

BOOKS

New Age books hit the big time

By DAVID R. MARK
Collegian Staff

The reasons may vary, but a belief exists among those in the know that the recent surge of New Age books will not only continue, but may in fact explode in coming years.

"Something is going on," said Marcia Pokus, owner of Magical Rocks in Red Bank, N.J. The store has one of the largest New Age selections on the East Coast. "Since the harmonic convergence in '86, people are opening up to crystal healing, heightening their sensitivities and realizing there is a whole new world out there."

New Age books? Crystal Healing? Harmonic convergence?

What does it mean?

According to Steve Deger, managing editor of Llewellyn New Times, a St. Paul, Minn., catalog of New Age books published by Llewellyn Books, any number of things qualify as New Age books.

"It encompasses astrology, nature religions, UFOs, magic, herbalism, dream symbolism and analysis, past-life regression, hypnosis, crystal healing, parapsychology and several other things," explained Deger, a veritable data bank of New Age knowledge.

The healing power of crystals is based in Eastern thought, he said. The theory is that the body is an energy system. Illness occurs when the energy does not flow. The same crystals that regulate radio waves also regulate the body's energy, Deger said.

The primary nature religion is Wicca, a pagan religion commonly known as witchcraft.

"It's nature-oriented because its followers have a reverence for the inner workings of nature," he said, adding that many of those followers are interested in herbalism, or the effect of herbs on the psyche.

The Library of Congress lists 135 books under the subject heading New Age Movement. Of those, 105 have been published since 1986.

> "The interest in New Age books is too big and has been around too many years to be a fad."
> --Nancy Nugent

The first book listed is The Aquarian Guide to Occult, Mystical, Religious, Magical London and Around by Francoise Stracham. That book was published in 1970 by Aquarian Press, but the library said books on similar topics, such as occult sciences, date back to the 16th century.

Bantam Books is one of several mainstream publishers that has been producing New Age books under a separate imprint — A Bantam New Age Book — for about eight years. Andi Zipper, publicist at Bantam Books, said about 100 books were printed last year under that imprint.

Prentice Hall Press has also been publishing New Age books for about eight years. Its fall catalog lists seven New Age titles, and according to Lauri Sayde, Prentice Hall publicity manager, the publisher has a long backlist of New Age books it reprints.

At the University of Massachusetts bookstore, New Age books have been on sale for several years, said Myla Platt, a junior art major who works in the book department. The store carries between 50 and 100 titles at a given time, she said.

"It's not one of the most popular sections, but people do buy the books," Platt said.

The 91-year-old Llewellyn Books is the oldest publisher of New Age books. Among the more recent companies to enter the market is Pyramid Books of Salem. Nancy Nugent, who started Pyramid Books in 1983, said the mail-order company sells nearly one million books written by some 500 authors a year.

"The interest in New Age books is too big and has been around too many years to be a fad," Nugent said. "The world is ready for these ideas now. Human being have reached the stage now where they feel they can use this information, and because of that they're becoming receptive."

But witchcraft?

"Things that are new tend to sound weird," she said, adding that most people, after investigating New Age ideas and reading New Age books, find something they feel makes sense and that they can apply to their lives.

Deger said it is a misconception to think the people burying their noses into New Age books are strange, devil worshippers, druggies or even followers of the varied components of the movement.

Many people who read New Age books are just exploring the unknown to define it, he said.

Volleyball hosts GW

The University of Massachusetts volleyball team will look to rebound from Wednesday's dramatic loss to Boston College, when they take the Totman court tonight to meet George Washington at 7 p.m.

There is little doubt that the game against the Eagles will still be in the back of their minds. The Minutewomen (2-17) led the match two games to one and were leading the fourth 7-4 when the sky fell in. Without going into all the gory details, they were outscored down the remainder of the match, 26-6.

Believe it or not, there is some conciliation to Wednesday night's loss. Earlier in the season UMass played B.C. and lost, in three straight games.

There is no question that this volleyball team is much improved and removed from the one that opened the season losing its first eight straight.

The Colonials will take the court at Totman with a 14-15 record. Their top hitter is Allison O'Neill (.250). Cinnamon Burnim leads the team with 209 kills and is closely followed by Khris Knight with 204.

Polo takes on Notre Dame

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Staff

The Irish are coming, the Irish are coming. That's right, the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame are in the area for a few days and will take on the University of Massachusetts water polo team (11-9, ranked 19th) tonight at Amherst College at 7:30 in the final home game of the season.

The Minutemen were supposed to play Boston College tonight but have already played the Eagles once this year, so when Notre Dame called looking for a game, UMass made the switch.

UMass coach Russ Yarworth admits he knows little about the Irish, but noted that many of their players are from the talent-infested Chicago area.

"That area is very strong for high school water polo," Yarworth said.

Notre Dame is not a varsity team, but a club team. They are even coached by a student.

Despite their club status, just the name Notre Dame carries weight, even in water polo.

"The kids are pumped up to play Notre Dame," said Yarworth.

"They're a big-name school, so the kids want to handle them."

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Tension will subside when you solve a financial problem. Creative thinking helps you put together some promising business ventures. Count on romance to add glamour to your social life in early January. You are susceptible to fads and may be tempted to try an unusual diet. Consult your physician if you have a weight problem. Learning to control your volatile temper will help you make friends. Avoid making mountains out of molehills.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE; virtuoso Nicolo Paganini, President Theodore Roosevelt, playwright Dylan Thomas, actress Nanette Fabray, musician Floyd Cramer, actress Carrie Snodgress, rock star Simon LeBon, artist Roy Lichtenstein.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Distant affairs require your close attention. Money and family life could be involved. Let others do the talking. A social event will bring you great pleasure. Romantic partner often confuses you.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Plan for an important trip to a familiar place. Bring food and plenty of hugs and kisses for loved Capricorn. Work hard and stop worrying about what might be. Things will work themselves out in the end.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You are well situated in your work. Think twice before exploding into an argument. Money comes from an unexpected source. By showing more affection, you can heal a breach with a loved one.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): You are on the way to success. A surge of self-confidence seems to come out of nowhere. A letter or telephone call brings you down to earth by reminding you of family obligations.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Do not be upset if you cannot please everyone. Figure out a work schedule that will make both you and your employer happy. Double-check the fine print of all legal documents.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Pleasing others will score important points and generate new trust. A legal matter can be settled in your favor out of court. Engage in activities that will enhance your image. Make long-distance calls.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Discuss investments with your stockbroker or a accountant. Although bargains abound, examine merchandise very carefully if sales are final. A close relationship is a source of secret delight.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Those who are self-employed reap fine profits. Partner or mate will make a huge difference in your personal life if you make the first move. You get public approval for helping others.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): The emphasis today is on seeking practical solutions. Authority figure is impressed with your performance. Keep your diet and exercise resolutions. Your love life accelerates.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan 19): Look forward to getting many things done in the near future. Enjoy the company of a loved one in a special place. Kiss a Taurus, but remember the Taurus' feelings too.

AQUARIUS (Jan 20-Feb. 18): Your home could be overflowing with clutter, including special gifts. Someone who has a bad attitude may be envious. Try not to fret about it. You have your own life to live.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You are on a new path. Have courage. Take your time in whatever you do - a thorough job will impress an authority figure more than haste. An unexpected check delights you.

managed to receive some votes for consideration. The Scarlet Knights (11-7-1) are at a down point in their season, losing their last four games, and should be pumped up to play.

"They're a very psychologically motivated team and can play with incredible highs," Rudy said. "They tackle hard, are very workmanlike, and are very fit. One coach even told me, 'They're just like UMass.'"

On the other hand, Brown is one team who's unlike Rutgers, UMass, or probably any team in the country. The Bruins believe that defense is the key to victory, and boy do they play it.

"They'll say, 'We'll give you a part of the field, but we'll take this part,'" Rudy said. And the Bruins will take as many as eight defenders and put them in their part of the field — right in front of the net.

Rudy said of their defense, which has given up only six goals in 13 games, "They have many talented defensive specialists who'll guard the goal like it's Fort Knox."

On offense, the Bruins (10-2-1) look to counterattack and depend on restarts as their big play. "They're hoping for long free kicks and they go bonkers on cornerkicks," Rudy said. "They'll kick it off your shins if they can get a corner."

Brown, who has clinched the Ivy League for the eighth straight year, has proven that laying on some heavy 'D' and playing for the one goal has worked. As a matter of fact, the Bruins have actually outplayed UMass against common opponents (6-1-1 to 5-2-1).

One thing's for sure, the Reds will have a lot of homework.

Minutemen host Rutgers

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

Opposing the seventh-ranked team in the nation is a tall order, but the head coach of the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team, Jeff Gettler, isn't phased. In fact, he's anxious.

"I'm real excited about this one," said Gettler. "This is a big rivalry and we're coming to win."

Rutgers University is currently 15-2-0 for the season, and 3-0-0 in the Atlantic 10 Eastern Conference, holding first place. The only game to go into overtime has been against Philadelphia Textile University, 3-1. Philadelphia Textile is ranked 20th in the Intercollegiate Soccer Association of America national poll.

A rough loss to swallow was last week against UCLA, 1-0. That loss broke Rutgers' longest winning streak (10) in the school's history.

For four consecutive weeks, Rutgers team members have been honored with Atlantic 10 Conference Player of the Week. Sophomore Lino DiCuollo, junior Steve Rammel and junior Dave Barreuta have been named. Rammel, a transfer from the University of Connectiuct, has been honored twice.

DiCuollo has 15 goals and 1 assist; Rammel has 12 goals and 7 assists. They are currently tied at second as top scorers in the nation. In the last nine games alone, Rammel has scored 11 goals and 6 assists.

In goal for the Scarlet Knights is Barreuta who has started 16 of 17 games, 9 of which were shutouts. He's the top keeper in the Atlantic 10 Conference and third in the country with 48 saves and a .42 goals-against average for the season.

Captains for Rutgers are senior Darrel Edelstein, senior Tony DeOrio and sophomore Alexi Lalas. Edelstein is out with an ankle injury suffered against Seton Hall University. He has five assists for the year.

DeOrio scored the game-winning goal of Wednesday's Rider College match, his first of the season. Lalas has shown great leadership for an underclassman by wrapping up All-Tournament team honors in two regular season tournaments, those being Rutgers-Met Life Soccer Classic and UCLA-Met Life Soccer Classic. He has scored one goal and two assists.

"They're a brilliant team," said Gettler. "We match up really well against them, like we did against UConn. The team is pumped to play a good, strong game against Rutgers. They're coming to play tough — and to win."

ner. The second group has generally consisted of Pat Ryan, Matt Simon, and Mike Davis.

"We've shown that we can run well at Easterns," said O'Brien. "So I'd like to see it become a habit this weekend."

WATER POLO NOTEBOOK: Yarworth was a bit miffed about Harvard staying in front of the Minutemen in this week's poll, considering UMass beat them last weekend 11-10. Harvard is ranked 18th, UMass 19th . . . the top five this week reads this way: Cal Berkeley (14-2), Cal Irvine (16-3), Pepperdine (17-4), Stanford (20-5), and Cal State Long Beach (10-6) . . . Jon Miller continues to lead the team in points with 67 (44 goals, 23 assists) . . . Alex Yelensky is second with 40 points (28 goals, 12 assists) . . . Brian McIver has the distinction of committing the most personal fouls, 29 . . . The Minutemen have brought their shooting percentage up to a more respectable 40 percent . . . They are outshooting their oppenents for the season 459 to 393, always a good sign.

SPORTS

UM returns to Totman tomorrow

To play at home for first time in 20 days

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Unless you happen to be Tony Eason, it is no fun playing on the road. The University of Massachusetts field hockey team has not played at its natural habitat since Oct. 8 when the Minutewomen stomped Maine, 9-0.

The road has not been so kind to Pam Hixon's troops though. The Minutewomen went 2-1-1 on the trips post Maine, but the wins didn't come as easy.

Earlier in the season, back in the end of September the Minutewomen played two games during the tail end of Hurricane Hugo and ended up finishing one of those games, which was with Atlantic 10 rival Rutgers, on a Monday morning at 11 a.m. while classes were going on.

The rain and the winds didn't exactly make it inviting to sit out on the hill in front of Totman. But tomorrow, when UMass takes on the University of Connecticut at Totman Field (noon), the forecast calls for sunshine in Amherst.

"Home support is something that we could really use," Hixon said.

Especially tomorrow as the Minutewomen battle a UConn team that is ranked 13th in the nation by the NCAA and has been on a roll as of late, having won its last four in a row.

"The UMass/UConn rivalry is a big one so I anticipate it to be exciting at the very least," Hixon said.

The stakes are high for both teams. UConn is ranked No. 13 in the country and that is right on the borderline of an NCAA playoff berth. The top team in four regions will be invited to the tourney and then the eight best teams that are left after that will receive bids. With the season about to close, UConn needs this game.

"There is a lot of motivation there for them," Hixon said. "But we need it too. We've got to do well against the teams that are underneath us [in the rankings] to stay in there. We want to be eleven or higher. We don't want to get caught in the 12th or 13th spot."

Ranked No. 8 in the country, the Minutewomen are clearly in a better position to make the playoffs than the Huskies. They can control their own destiny with a win over UConn tomorrow and over Dartmouth on Tuesday and also have another avenue with the winner of the Atlantic-10 tourney which the Minutewomen have clinched a spot in, automatically going to the NCAA tournament. Hixon is always cautious though.

"We haven't had the big win, other than New Hampshire," Hixon said. And tomorrow the Minutewomen may have to play almost perfect to get the victory.

"The team that makes the first mistake or the team that makes the most mistakes is going to lose," Hixon said.

Being at home, where UMass is 4-1 this year, will help though, especially in the midfield. "At home, I think our midfield will play very well. I think we match up better in the midfield."

And a little better than if UMass was playing at UConn.

Field hockey sponsors fund raiser

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team will sponsor a raffle at its game with the University of Connecticut tomorrow at Totman Field. The Minutewomen are attempting to raise enough money to send the team to Europe in 1990 where it will play European teams. First prize in the raffle is $100.

"We really can get some good competition in prior to the season beginning so I think it just starts us off on a much different foot than the same old drudgery or the year in and year out preseason."

Hixon is skeptical about recruiting players from overseas. But just this past year recruited Phillipa Scott, a goalie for England's National Under-21 team. And Hixon is delighted with her freshman goalie.

"Scotty has been outstanding," Hixon said. "So personally I don't think there is another goaltender who has played as consistently well under the kind of pressure that Scotty has been under all season long.

UMass, with Wilkos at the helm, heads to NU

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

This is one of those mixtures that is potentially disastrous — like drinking whiskey and tequila together, or cleaning your toilet with Comet and ammonia.

Tomorrow, the University of Massachusetts football team hits the AstroConcrete of Parsons Field in Brookline against Northeastern University, looking for its first win in three games.

The only problem is that the Huskies (3-4) are pretty proficient in what UMass has the most trouble stopping — the run.

Northeastern runs out of the wishbone offense, which means it passes with the frequency of a lunar eclipse. UMass (2-4-1) had more yards passing last week than NU has all season, and the Minutemen haven't had trouble containing the aerial shows this year. But they have made more than one running back resemble the second coming of Jim Brown.

"Their strength is our weakness," said UMass coach Jim Reid. "We have to play the type of game we played against Rhode Island. There's no reason why we can't."

This is a team that averages over 200 yards a game on the ground, led by fullback Harold Scott (488 yards, two touchdowns) and Northampton's own Dan DaPonde at quarterback (452, four TDs). UM opponents are grinding out 178 per Saturday. Yes, folks, that could spell trouble.

"They've got strong inside running, a lot like Connecticut, and with their wishbone schemes they challenge you straight ahead," Reid said.

Reid also noted their blocking technique of going low and cutting out the legs, something that could lead to a lot of injuries. But he has worked to correct that particular glitch.

"They're blocking a lot at the kneecaps. I don't want to put guys like Matt Tulley, Mario Perry and Drew Comeau at risk," Reid said.

But UMass will have to take a lot of risks, going for broke, if they want to beat Northeastern.

"We've got to be aggressive on defense. It's chancy, but now we've got nothing to lose," Reid said. "It's tough to be out of the [Yankee] conference race so early, but we've got to prove ourselves."

On the other hand, the Minutemen could try to fight fire with fire and look to outscore the Huskies. Their own running game has been a big question mark since tailback Jerome Bledsoe went down with a pulled quadricep in last week's loss to Delaware.

Sophomore Larry Hicks was penciled in to start tomorrow at that spot, but he too went out with a knee injury this week. Senior Steve Olson will get the call, but flanker Ron Blauvelt is being moved over to help out. Olson, who suffers from asthma, can only go a few plays at a time before having to rest.

Elsewhere, QB Gary Wilkos is back in condition after getting his throwing shoulder banged into the turf last week. Paul Tornatore, who looked strong in Wilkos' place in rallying the Minutemen last week, waits in the wings.

"Right now we're sticking with our basic offense with Gary," Reid said. "He appears to be throwing well. I have confidence in Gary and with the way Paul performed in the fourth quarter against Delaware, that makes me more confident."

Looking at NU's season, it's been a sort of topsy-turvy ride. A team that posted consecutive shutouts (over Cornell and Rhode Island) has been blasted for over 30 points the last three weeks. Lehigh, which UMass beat during Week 2 (42-23) got the best of the Huskies last weekend, 33-13.

"It would be nice for the offense to put some points on the board early," Reid said. "We've got to get some fire and play real hard."

N.E. Championships next for harriers

Fifth out of 41. That would be the best that the University of Massachusetts men's cross counrty team could hope for this Friday at the New England Championships at Franklin Park in Boston.

With the first three team spots virtually locked by Boston College, Boston University, and Providence College, and Northeastern looking to be a strong contender for the fourth slot, the Minutemen have as good a chance as anyone to snag fifth.

The major competition for UMass' fifth place bid will probably come from Connecticut. In the current N.E. cross country poll UMass is ranked ninth and UConn 10th.

Fortunately, the Minutemen won't have to deal with the Ivy League powers Dartmouth, Yale, Brown, and Harvard all of whom are ranked ahead UMass in that same poll, due to the Heptagonals, a meet which all Ivy League schools attend annually.

If UMass can run like it did two weekends ago when it won the Eastern Conference Championships it should be in good position to take fifth place. If UM decides to run like it did last weekend at the Atlantic 10 meet, it could find itself as far back as 10th.

"Unfortunately, our trademark has been one of inconsistency," coach Ken O'Brien said. "We need to have all seven individuals put all other outside circumstances aside and simply concentrate on running a hard all-out race."

UMass has been led by junior Art Smith. Smith led the Minutemen last weekend at the A-10s with a fourth place finish.

Not far behind Smith have been Jon Corso, definitely the most improved runner, Joe Livorsi, and Herb Heff-

The New England Women's Cross Country Championships at Northfield Mountain on Oct. 28 look to be Providence College and everyone else. The Friars are ranked third in the nation and haven't been touched by any other team in New England. The good news for UMass is that the Minutewomen have a legitimate shot to be the best of "everyone else."

"Providence College is expected to win," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said. "Short of a disaster, they will definitely win."

After that, the field is wide open. "From two to five will be a dogfight," LaFreniere said. "Hopefully we'll be like pitbulls and come out on top."

The Minutewomen will look, as usual, to senior captain Shana Smith for leadership. "Shana always runs a consistent race," LaFreniere said. "She never goes out too fast, and always gains on people at the end."

Although sophomore Precious Hill has been unable to regain the form which placed her 13th in New England as a freshman, LaFreniere expects big things for her. "Precious is ready to go. I expect her to go out and run with Shana from the beginning."

The key to UMass' success is obvious: running together. "The closer together we are, the stronger we are," LaFreniere said.

Last year's New England Championships illustrate the importance of bunching UMass red together throughout the race. Although Hill and Smith both finished in the top 16, UMass' next runner only finished 40th. Overall, UMass was a disappointing sixth. "We're a lot tighter than last year though," LaFreniere said. "If every one of our top seven runners is hot and runs tough, we can finish second in New England."

Reds finish up season

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

The women's soccer season is winding down to its last weekend, and for the University of Massachusetts, they'll have some 'home' work on the Hill, hosting Rutgers and Brown Saturday and Sunday.

It's been about three weeks since the Reds last played on Boyden Hill, and not too much has changed. The team is still lingering around the Interscholastic Soccer Athletic Assocation's top 10, improving their ranking to seventh in the nation.

Lately, the poll has been played to the tune of musical chairs, with five schools switching positions.

Before playing two of those teams (North Carolina State and William and Mary) last weekend, UMass coach Jim Rudy had hoped to get an indication of where his team stood in relation to schools of the same caliber.

Afterward, Rudy said, "Nationally, we're a legitimate top 10 team." He can say that with some degree of assuredness, because the Reds have compiled a 10-2-4 record playing arguably the toughest schedule in the nation, littered with top 20 teams.

UMass won't catch any breaks this weekend either, as the top 20 teams don't stop rolling in just yet. The Reds will be hosting Rutgers (11 a.m.) and No. 14 Brown (1 p.m.).

"It's going to be a tough weekend because the two teams are so opposite," Rudy said. Rutgers will present a more direct style as compared to Brown, who's motto should be 'Defense, defense, and more defense.'

Both will be going for the jugular, as Rutgers and Brown need a win over UMass to give them a chance of advancing into the postseason.

Rutgers is on the fringe of the top 20 doorstep, as they

Comedian Cosby kicks off campaign for UMass'image

By MARIA SACCHETTI
Collegian Staff

Answering his alma mater's call for help in light of budget constraints, actor Bill Cosby returned to the University of Massachusetts last night to kick off a campaign to boost the school's image across the state.

Cosby joined some 440 faculty, staff and a handful of students in the Student Union Ballroom for the $100 a seat fundraiser, held to finance the University Fund for the Future, a three-year outreach campaign to gather support for the University.

The event, sponsored by the Massachusetts Society of Professors Union, gleaned $65,000 in ticket sales and additional donations for the campaign.

Cosby, who received a Master's degree in education from the University in 1972, a doctorate in 1977 and an honorary degree in 1980, jokingly chastised the audience for using too many "words" instead of grabbing that fellow by the throat who hasn't seen the significance of education.

"There are people wandering around this state who don't know it's going to be inferior," he said. "You've got to take it to the people. But all these words, they can't get through all these words."

Holding a silver-plated fork which bent in his hand while he was attempting to dine, Cosby held the instrument aloft while speaking in front of a backdrop of banners representing the University's 12 colleges.

"I just went in with this finger and the fork came back at me," he laughed. "I thought, oh no, these people have cut back as far as they can go."

Cosby's visit came in the wake of an additional $6.4 million budget reduction to the University ordered recently by the Board of Regents. The cut brings the University's total loss to $25 million since the cutbacks began three years ago.

Roseanne Bacon, president of the Massachusetts Teachers Association, urged the audience to spearhead the campaign by encouraging state legislators to raise taxes to compensate for low revenues.

"These are not very funny times," Bacon said. "Especially not if you are attempting to do the job most of us have taken on ourselves, to attempt to educate students who come to a public institution."

When asked about the current status of minority students on campus, Cosby said in a press conference that the cutbacks will affect those minority students who are unable to attend college without financial aid.

"Obviously, the person who can write a check is the person who can get in," Cosby said. "It begins to get a little ridiculous, because then the word minority must mean people who can't make it in education."

Professors debate use of sanctions against China

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

Two professors debated the use of economic sanctions against China at a panel discussion Saturday which followed the 'China Day" symposium in Mahar Auditorium.

Maintaining that sanctions hurt many of the people they try to help, Steven Goldstein, professor of government at Smith College said he was against the use of economic sanctions.

"Given the current social and economic vulnerability of China, this would be an ideal opportunity for the United States to engage China rather than impose sanctions," Goldstein said. "It is important to keep open the kinds of communication lines that can bring change."

Goldstein said academic and business exchanges would be more helpful in affecting change rather than sanctions, which could isolate China.

Ye Yang, assistant professor of Chinese at Bates College, said he did not support comprehensive sanctions against China, but instead favored a package of limited economic sanctions.

"Sanctions may make China an isolated and angry nation, but this is 1989, not 1949," Ye said. "China has a heavy economic reliance on Japan and Western nations. In the last ten years there has been a policy of encouraging the private sectors."

"What matters to the Chinese government is where their pocketbooks are. Sanctions should be balanced with other options, though there are few for the White House," Ye said.

Ye raised the issue of the United States' moral obligation to create a precedent for the protection of worldwide human rights.

"It is a chilling signal to the people in Eastern European bloc nations and countries all around the world fighting for democracy to let this present regime (in China) go on doing business," he said. Ye said that not considering the people in addition to the government is a problem with American foreign policy.

Students join hands around pond

By WILLIAM FLEISHMAN

More than 1,000 students linked hands around the campus pond Friday to promote cultural and racial harmony at the University of Massachusetts.

"Hands Around UMass" marked the end of Civility Week, which consisted of more than 100 events highlighting the efforts of the campus community to combat racism and other forms of oppression.

"We want to extend our thanks to the many faculty and staff that worked so hard to make Civility Week a success,"said Grant Ingle, director of human relations. "This week has definitely met the objectives and goals that we had set."

The program commenced with a noon rally on the Student Union steps. Banners bearing colors of diversity - black, red, yellow, beige and white — were waved as organizers of the event took turns urging the crowd to think about racism.

Britt Alschuler, a Civilty Week committee member said, "I hope that the people who didn't show up today will at least sit at home and think about why they didn't come today."

Students discuss freedom

By BETH O'TOOLE
Collegian Staff

Two University of Massachusetts Chinese students spoke about the future of the democratic movement, rather than focusing on the massacre of thousands of protesters in Tiananmen Square this summer.

In a "China Day" symposium titled "Chinese Democracy: Dead or Alive?", Shen Tong and Chen Jun addressed some 80 people in Mahar Auditorium.

"Every student in every campus in Beijing and across China has a taste of freedom in their mouths and this taste is sweet," Tong said. "This sweet taste of freedom in their mouth will linger for generations."

Tong, who is from Bejiing, said the movement was dependent on the students' collaboration.

"Unity was of great importance to the success of the movement," he said.

He said during the spring, student organizations began to unify and newspapers and radio stations were formed.

Tong said that salons also played a large part in the movement, because students and intellectuals could discuss democracy and examine history in order to learn from it.

Jun, a democratic activist and an intellectual, was the head of a Bejiing salon when the uprising occurred last spring.

"I support idealism and I support the change," he said.

Tong said China's history has not been a peaceful one.

"[It has been] bloody revolution followed by bloody revolution, and each time, the old government is replaced by a dynasty," said Tong.

In order to develop democracy and freedom the Chinese people must create a visible movement through demonstrations and hunger strikes, he said.

"The first step toward change must come from within China," said Tong. "The role of organizations in exile will be important because now we have a chance to experience democracy in democratic nations."

Jun said the westernization in China will grow through intellectuals and they should lay down the foundation step by step.

"[Intellectuals should] plant western civilization in China and watch it grow," said Jun.

Football tips Northeastern, 31-27

By JIM CLARK

BROOKLINE — Going into Saturday's game against Northeastern University, University of Massachusetts football coach Jim Reid knew his team would have to put some points on the board to overcome the Huskies.

The Minutemen did just that, putting up touchdowns on their first two drives and holding on down the stretch for a 31-27 win at balmy Parsons Field.

In the uncharacteristic October warmth, and on the ever-so-soft Parsons AstroConcrete surface, players were dropping all afternoon. But the UMass subs rose to the challenge time and again, a total team effort.

"I'm so proud of this football team," Reid said. "You have no idea what they overcame."

The night before, Reid had called on former Minuteman Manuel Fernandez to give a different kind of pep talk to the team.

"He worked hard and busted his hump all the time, and he only played about four games," Reid said of Fernandez. "He said the greatest lessons in football are learned when you're not a starter, when you're number two."

Saturday, those "number twos" all turned into number ones.

"What I said at the half is that we had to find more leaders. We needed some people to step forward," Reid said.

True freshman Bobby Burke jumped right in for injured linebacker Chris Tenkin with seven unassisted tackles. Mark Wojciechowski and freshman Al Thornton, who handled the long snapping, replaced the felled Al Pogarian (foot) at center.

And others, like tailback Steve Olson,

■ students hold hands around campus pond

Jane Sapp, folk-blues singer, took the stage before the audience left to form the human circle around the pond. Sapp, a civil rights activist from Georgia, led the UMass Jazz Choir and sang, "I'll be with you until we meet again."

Once the students joined hands, passersby stopped to help complete the chain around the pond.

"I definitely didn't expect this many people,"said Thaddeus Morcheucho, a freshman. 'I was just walking by and felt obligated to fill in the holes."

After the chain surrounded the pond, Sapp encouraged the participants to sing with her until the the ring was broken.

She sang emotionally charged verses such as "We shall not be moved — just like a tree planted by the water" and "We shall overcome — Black and White together."

Last year, more than 4,000 students participated in "Hands Across UMass," and formed a chain which stretched from the Southwest to the Sylvan residential areas. Organizers said although the turnout was less than the previous year, the message was still clear.

"We don't judge the success of "Hands Around UMass" by how many people were here, but by what the students will think and do from now on,"said Alschuler.

Randi Dubno, president of Hillel, said, "I think it's great — every week should be Civility Week. We put up posters and encouraged people to go to the events. We even made a Civility Week mural in our cluster."

Ed Korza, assistant dean of students, said, "I think it's a very positive experience. Civility Week is a student-run affair. The administration is here for support."

In 1986, Fredrick Hurst conducted an investigation of racial incidents on campus and recommended that the administration establish an annual civility day to promote a positive racial climate on campus. The administration opted for a Civility Week.

On Friday, the Civility Committee is scheduled to begin planning next year's Civility Week.

85 light candles at vigil to encourage civility

Students, staff attend vigil for harmony

By ANDREA BREGOFF
Collegian Staff

Some 85 people attended a candlelight vigil signifying civility, unity and diversity Thursday night in the Northeast Area Quad.

Chi Chi Cruz, Northeast Area Government president, who kicked off the event with a candle lighting ceremony, said Civility Week should be renamed Awareness Week because civility should be practiced 365 days a year.

However, time must be set aside to make people aware of the broad diversity of this campus, she said.

"We should all take pride that the students and administration are not afraid to confront the problems which arise sometimes from diversity," Cruz said. "To confront diversity is to accept diversity, and we celebrate this diversity as being the brilliant colors which illuminate our campus and bring us one step closer to achieving a community of understanding and human dignity."

Dennis Madson, vice chancellor for student affairs, said Civility Week focuses on what the University values and what it stands for, and that civility does not start or end, as it is ongoing.

"Civility week should not be looked upon as a sum total of this university's commitment and activity, but more so as a culmination of the entire year spent fulfilling this commitment," Madson said.

"This university has struggled openly to become more diverse and multicultural," he said, adding that while civility does not end when the week does, this is the time set aside to reflect on the accomplishments the University has made.

EWC graduates Advocates

Volunteers to work on hotline, education

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

Traditionally, graduation exercises are held in the spring with caps and gowns and "Pomp and Circumstance," but Thursday night, 18 women were honored in the first graduation ceremony for the Counselor/Advocate and Educator/Advocate programs.

The Everywoman's Center sponsored the programs.

Certificates were awarded in Campus Center room 917 to ten Counselor/Advocates and eight Educator/Advocates to mark the end of the 50-hour training they completed in a three-and-a-half week period, said Volunteer Coordinator for the Counselor/Advocate Program Deb Levy.

The graduates received their certificate, a handshake from Levy and then they lit a candle.

"The candles are a symbol of light. Inside of all of us, we are keeping the flame going with the work we do," Levy said.

Upon graduating, the new advocates, half students and half community women, will serve a ten-month commitment to the programs, which are a part of the Against Violence Against Women Programs at Everywoman's Center.

The Counselor/Advocates run the 24-hour hotline and do legal and medical advocacy, Levy said. The Educator/Advocates hold workshops on date rape, rape, incest, pornography and images of women in the media, she said.

Before introducing Kathleen O'Neill Alexander, the keynote speaker, Pat Barrows, the Coordinator of the Counselor/Advocate Program said she felt the night was special because it was the first time anything like this had been done since the program began in 1976.

"This first graduation feels great. It's important to take this time out to honor you," Barrows said. "It takes a deep commitment to do this kind of work."

Alexander, the Director of Victim/Witness Assistance Programs for Franklin and Hampshire Counties, was active in two parts of the training process.

"[These programs] are not a race for the sprinter, but for the long distance runner" she said. "Let women equip themselves to win this race. It's not an easy road, but a worthwhile one."

Following the address, the graduates, EWC trainers, support staff members and friends joined Coordinator of the Educator/Advocate Program Stacy Roth in singing "Of Woman," a song she wrote.

Educator/Advocate graduate Catherine Leiser said although she is a little bit nervous, the training has prepared her.

"I look around this room and think, wow, we really did this. Now we're ready to really start the work we're going to be doing," she said.

Jerusalem official stresses need for peace in city

By ROBIN HOBAN
Collegian Correspondent

Avi Armoni, a special adviser to the mayor of Jerusalem, said his city is probably the most difficult city in the world to govern, in the lecture "Coexistence in Jerusalem."

Armoni, who is studying at Harvard University's Kennedy School of Government, stressed the diverse cultural communities in Jerusalem. Wednesday's lecture, sponsored by the Judaic Studies department, was part of Civility Week.

People of Arab, Jewish and Christian descent are represented in Jerusalem, he said. These groups are further broken down by religious sects, degree of orthodoxy and by the different regions of the world from which residents have emigrated, he said.

Given the cultural variety, Armoni said coexistence is vital in order to overcome the problems in the city.

As a result of the Intifada, the Palestinian uprising, the situation in Jerusalem has become as volatile as it is in Israel, Armoni said. Armoni said turmoil in Jerusalem must be worked out because the three of the world's major religions are represented in the city.

Strategies like the Jerusalem Mosaic Plan, which divides the city into cultural neighborhoods, have alleviated Jerusalem's problems, Armoni said. In these sections, the customs and beliefs of the inhabitants are observed and respected, he said.

"Respect for others rights and beliefs is the basis of democracy," he said.

Armoni admitted that the plan is not perfect, but said it does help.

He said the governments of Jerusalem and Israel realize the hope for a society based on loving thy neighbor is unrealistic, at least at this juncture. He said Jerusalem residents should be tolerant for differing cultures and beliefs.

"We are no longer trying to make Israel into a melting pot. We want to recognize the virtues of a diverse society," Armoni said.

The government of Jerusalem is trying to overcome heated national issues by focusing on municipal worries, Armoni said. For example, instead of getting involving in the complicated West Bank question, the government first addresses the city's problems, he said.

legislation of which she said, one of the two will probably be enacted.

The Pelosi bill supports a blanket visa waiver for all J-1 students from the People's Republic of China. Those under the legislation could begin the immigration process, she said. Johnson said that President Bush will most likely veto this bill, and instead favor the Morrison bill. But, she said the two bills may be combined.

The Morrison bill would provide a temporary safehaven for people whose countries are experiencing political turmoil, she said.

Johnson said the Chinese government may counteract this legislation by allowing fewer Chinese students out of China and fewer American students into China, thereby limiting educational exchange.

Quayle and Reagan: Stimulating, absolutely stimulating

Bob Bobala

I've got some difficult decisions ahead of me as I try to cut down my reading list over the next couple weeks. I have to make room for two books which will not only stimulate me intellectually, but truly move me.

First is The Dan Quayle Quiz Book (Little, Brown, and Co., $4.95). Second is Nancy Reagan's memoirs, My Turn, which Newsweek deemed so important to American society that it ran a special report on it last week — excerpts included.

Now, poor Dan Quayle. He's been out of the spotlight since taking on his quiet role as the vice president. But, maybe with this book out, compiled by Jeremy Solomon and Ken Brady, some of the attention he's been missing will return.

On second thought, I doubt it. But here's a couple sample questions from the book anyway.

"How did Quayle respond when asked about the ethics of his admission to Indiana University Law School under a special program for disadvantaged students?"

A. "My mom and dad just made a phone call to the president of the university. There's nothing wrong with that."

B. "I was disadvantaged."

C. "When the admissions committee learned about my military record, they decided I deserved a chance."

D. "As my grandmother once told me: 'It's a doggy dog world out there and you've got to wag your tail harder than the rest if you want to make it.'"

E. "I deserve respect for the things I do."

According to Solomon and Brady, the kind authors, the answer, E, is attributable to a remark Quayle made to a reporter.

How about this one: "In 1987, Senator Quayle introduced a special tax break for what group?"

The answer, no lie: Golf pros.

But tax breaks for golf pros is one thing that Nancy Reagan doesn't talk about in My Turn (written with William Novak). She does, however, talk about everything you'd expect her to talk about . . .

Astrology: "While astrology was a factor in determining Ronnie's schedule, it was never the only one, and no political decision was ever made based on it." Thank you for clearing that up, Nancy. But maybe the Reagan administration should have paid more attention to the zodiac during its policy making. Could have avoided that whole Iran-Contra thing.

Raisa Gorbachev: "From the moment we met, she talked and talked and talked and talked — so much that I could barely get a word in edgewise, or otherwise." You mean there really is somebody on this planet who can keep the wind from blowing out of your mouth? Say it isn't so!

Don Regan: "In spite of what's been said or written, I did not mastermind a plot to get rid of Don Regan. There was no cabal. I wasn't in cahoots with anyone to bring about Don Regan's fall." Well, Mrs. Reagan, if you're lying and you really did try to get rid of Regan, then I'm sure there are a lot of people who would like to sincerely thank you for your efforts.

Her lavish wardrobe: "I've been interested in clothes for as long as I can remember — ever since I was a little girl, when I loved dressing up in my mother's outfits. So yes, I do enjoy wearing fine clothes. They make me feel good — the same way I feel when I get my hair done — just as any woman does." Newsweek devoted 16 pages to this.

Ronald Reagan: In those 16 pages, 14 of which are book excerpts, the word Ronnie appears a mere 14,929 times.

Stimulating, absolutely stimulating.

So, what's it going to be? Which of my readings shall I forgo over the next couple weeks so I can read these books in their entirety? Whitman? Dickinson? Maybe Thoreau?

Biased coverage of Cameron

I find your coverage of Paul Cameron's presence on campus to be biased at best, and homophobic at worst ("No room for Cameron?!," Oct. 27). It is a slap in the face to members of the gay community and its allies.

Since so few students were even interested in talking to Cameron, why did you need to give it full page coverage? All of you have enough experience to know that what is put on the front page tells the reader what the editorial board considers most important. And it's obvious that the writer did not verify her facts and there was no attempt to report both sides of this issue.

Your paper is certainly losing my support. Depending on the day I read it, it is either racist, sexist, homophobic or downright inaccurate.

Your chance to snoop

Admit it. You've all wanted the chance to read other people's mail. I have seen you steaming envelopes open over a kettle. And holding envelopes up to light.

Alise Harfield

Well, here's your chance to read mail I intend to send. After some consideration of postage costs, as well as overall entertainment to the public, I decided to share with you some otherwise letters you'd never get to peek at.

An open letter to the staff of the Minuteman:

Dear Repubs,

If imitation is truly the highest form of flattery, then I am truly flattered by your staff for copying, word for word, not only our Point-Counterpoint Page, but also the topic-of-old, Flag Burning.

You seem to have a pattern of this monkey see, monkey do behavior. I mean, doesn't W. Matthew Whiting echo someone we used to know, and love?

But, Matthew, I mean "W" . . . (can I call you "W?") I don't mean to pick. I'm glad you thought your column on flag burning so relevant to campus that you submitted it to 2 papers — the Collegian and the Minuteman.

Of course, in yours it ran in full. Although I'm sure you had nothing to do with it.

Oh, and before you jump to the common conclusion that I'm one of those flaming liberals from the Basement, you'll recall that I took a conservative standpoint on the issue. Or don't you read carefully what you mimic so well?

Yours truly,
A. Sherri Harfield

P.S. In language you'll understand, JEERS to your first issue. Why don't you find your own style?

An open letter to my four professors — you know who you are!

Dear Profs:

The meeting you had this summer where you scheduled every test, paper, take-home and exam on consecutive days three times during the semester was successful. I become a basket case for the week before and the week after. As for the week during, well, it explains why I can never make posted office hours. I suppose I'd be ashamed to show myself — wrinkles under my tired eyes, swaggering walk due to over exertion on my legs, halitosis due to no time to even brush daily . . .

Oh, but don't feel guilty. Perhaps I'll pass. Somehow . . .

Truly your student,

An open letter to potential Trick-or-Treaters:

Dear Masked:

I have no candy this year. Do you hear me? NO CANDY. I live in an apartment stocked with cheap pasta and water. NO sweets. Don't you know they're exorbitant in price? What do you think, I can afford to sustain this tradition I've kept for 20 years when I was living off of my parents?

Well, not anymore. I'm on my own without anyone to mooch off of. Know what that means? No, besides you're not getting any candy? It means I can't go trick-or-treating. Neither one, tricking or treating. Why? If you read my letter above you'd know! My mean professors gave me too much work!

So don't egg my apartment (you can't anyway, I bought special reverberating insulation for the outside. Any object thrown comes back at you with 10X the force).

Instead, feel free to share whatever you get from others. You can drop it all off (especially the chocolates) at the office.

Happy Halloween, anyway.

Tax hike comes too late

Finally, our esteemed state representatives and senators have begun to implement a plan for, hold your breath, NEW TAXES.

Those crazy liberal Democrats have finally given the thumbs up towards generating tax revenue to get tout of the $500 million deficit generated by government overspending.

Gayle Long

Even though Dukakis has been pushing for a tax hike, he no longer has any political backing in the State House's chambers. Social programs and higher education are a disaster, with their operating budgets sliced and whittled away to almost nothing.

So what is on the minds of our legislators? Not solving the problem, but getting back into office. Sure, the budget crisis is going to last for a long time, but the politicians are hoping to outlive it.

The Democrats have been playing hide-and-seek with their constituents for some time. I am not even sure that the Democrats have read their own platform lately. But for them to hold out for so long on new taxes and tear apart social programs, they'd might as well be Republicans.

Speaking of the Grand Old Party, they have been on the move, out-registrating the Democrats by a two to one margin since early 1988.

Maybe the new voters are having the same problem I am having, that is, figuring out if Massachusetts has one party or two.

Also, in March 1988, our favorite son, the Duke, was a Presidential candidate.

Maybe that has something to do with it.

Anyhow, the Democratic party is declining, quieting the ultra-liberal reputation of the state.

So, a tax bill is being discussed, pondered and debated. Ten cents on gas, upping the sales tax to six per cent and raising the alcohol and cigarette tax. They are also planning on non-tax revenue sources and more cuts.

I wonder if they will cut more from higher education. Do you actually think they heard the 15,000 people calling for an end to almost $25 million out from the budget? Another cut would make six cuts since last March. The legislator should remember we all pay taxes and vote instead of ignoring us.

Why have we been waiting for the two parties to finally get it together and out of this financial mess? The big reason is the gubernatorial election next November. None of the candidates from either party are willing to lose support from the people by saying that we need more taxes to get out of this disaster before it gets any worse. They want us all to believe that it will all eventually pass.

For example, Evelyn Murphy was on campus last Thursday, and while she sympathized with the plight of our crippled university and college system, she claims that new taxes are not the answer. Well then, what is? Let's get out of this so eventually that state budget crisis is not seen as the worst mess since the national deficit.

Taxes are not my favorite thing either, but it is a start. I am not expecting the remainder of my college education to be an easy experience. But maybe the people after me will be able to reap the benefits of a state with a balanced budget. Things like quality education, care for the elderly and those with special needs, a clean environment and maintenance of our roads.

Massachusetts needs these taxes to get the state to pick itself up and brush itself off. It is not the only step, but it should be the first.

People may choose to ignore the crisis but they will realize that extra money that comes form their pockets. Then they will be ready for the next step.

Your Monday nights don't have to be boring

• The Bonedaddys define cool

By JAY BRIDA
Collegian Correspondent

If one can judge a band by the company they keep, then the Bonedaddys are bound to be cool. The Daddys have at times hooked up with the legendary Bo Diddley, and since we all know that Bo knows cool the Bonedaddys, by association, are cool.

If one can judge a band by how weird they look, the Bonedaddys must be weird, decked out in those fezzes, grass skirts and strange ornaments. They definitely look weird and cool.

If one can judge a band by their reputation, the "Brotherhood of the Bone" is a cool rep. They are a popular L.A. club band that L.A. club goers swear by. If you can trust a Southern Californian's opinion, then the Bonedaddys are going to be cool.

Well, those are a few hypotheses about the status of the Bonedaddys, but you probably have to hear no more. Okay.

The Bonedaddys have been likened to Fishbone, the English Beat, Kid Creole and even to African funkster Fela Kuti, by people other than their press agent. They have also released one album, out on Chameleon Records, a subsidy of Capitol, called A-Koo-De-A, and it has been well received by people who have ears. The reviewers have used all of the neat adjectives record reviewers use when they like something. Try this succinct gem on for size, "Bonedaddys hits you with an amalgam of L.A. pop/rock/funk, Afro-disco, English Beat-ish ska, American R&B and freaky French Caribbean Junkanoo." He doesn't even mention the Latin percussion and African polyrhythmic beat until later. Needless to say, the Bonedaddys are a large band, with eight members churning out notes to fit their groove. They'll use everything, from bongos to banjos to brass.

Hey, I'm sold. The Iron Horse's dance floor will be open for tonight's show, and that usually means a good time. The music sounds irresistably funky and that will be necessary to shake the Monday night blues.

• Soundgarden stretches limits

By COLIN SEARS
Collegian Correspondent

People seem to either love Soundgarden or hate them. A band that evokes this much passion in the ears of its listeners is definitely worth checking out, and tonight at Pearl Street they give the uninitiated an opportunity to catch them, and the devoted a chance to see if their live shows hold up to their albums.

Opponents of Soundgarden are quick to brand them as a Black Sabbath/Led Zeppelin rip-off with nothing new to offer. If one listens to either Louder Than Love, their latest LP, or Ultramega O.K., one realizes that Soundgarden takes their music beyond the limitations of their predecessors. Whether one likes it, or not, is another question.

Soundgarden are surely not innovators, yet they build on their influences in a way which is creative and respectful. On Louder Than Love, singer David Cornell is soulful and often evokes images of Janis Joplin or Robert Plant.

The music is hard and heavy and overpowering in most places, yet they step back to let a psychedelic aura take control once in a while. Power is always present in their music, and Matt Cameron's rhythmic and heavy-handed drumming always serves as a backdrop, even in the most serene moments of their songs.

Soundgarden seem to have been influenced by Motorhead and Jimi Hendrix, and the guitar work of Kim Thayil at times reminds me of U2's the Edge. That their influences are surely not limited to the Sabbath/Zep book, even a fan will quickly cite.

Tonight's low priced show ($4 for 21-and-over, $6 for those 18 to 20) should surely be worth it to see Seattle, Washington's Soundgarden play such classics as "Flower," "All Your Lies" and "Beyond the Wheel" from Ultramega O.K. and new material from Louder Than Love, such as "Big Dumb Sex" and "Hands All Over."

Frisco and Felicia reunite on General Hospital

By BETH STOLLER
Collegian Correspondent

SOAP BUBBLES

GENERAL HOSPITAL – Robert, who came close to discovering the printing press Iona used to make her counterfeit money, suspects that David may be involved with the counterfeit ring. Monica finally decided to trust Alan that he wasn't having an affair with Lucy, so he begins having an affair with Lucy. While getting it on, they hear Monica outside calling for her Alan. Close call but they're not caught ... yet. Frisco gives Felicia an ultimatum that if she is lying about her amnesia he will leave her. Felicia realizes she doesn't want to lose him. At a costume party in Windermere, Felicia is chased by the Headless Horseman who wants the medallion she stole when she was Phoebe. As Felicia runs through the woods, she screams for Frisco to save her. When he finally does appear, she declares her undying love for him and apologizes for fibbing about her amnesia. The two embrace and kiss passionately, while in the background, Colton watches them and realizes Felicia has made her choice, and he's definitely not it. While Robin and her friend are on a scavenger hunt, they unknowingly uncover Victor Jerome's body. Anna is relieved that Victor is finally dead because now she and Robin can lead a normal life. But hold onto your hats boys and girls, this is, after all, a soap opera. What will Anna do when she finds out ... Duke is alive?

DAYS OF OUR LIVES – Shane and Rebecca survived the cave in and somehow dug their way out of the rubble. Rebecca and Shane kissed and almost did the deed, but Rebecca stopped Shane because she felt guilty about keeping Shane away from Kimberly. Shane and Rebecca were surprised to find the body missing where they had buried Arthur. Shane became furious with Rebecca when he found his identification in her backpack and realized she knew who he was all along. As for the other characters, Eve was stunned when Nick collapsed right in front of her. Jennifer and Emilio were kissing when the Sting Rays gang snuck-up behind them for revenge. Patch dove into the water at the exact spot where Marina nearly drowned two years ago and found the keys that she had lost. It's just a good thing two years isn't enough time for keys to move or get buried under dirt in water.

YOUNG AND THE RESTLESS — Jim, Scott and Salena (along with the police) broke into Cricket's hotel room to save her from the evil Derek, who attempted to force Cricket to lie to the cops that he really didn't rape her. Derek melodramatically shouted that he wasn't going to prison, then jumped out the hotel window to his death. Good riddance. Carol and Skip were very upset when Nan told them she had decided not to give her baby up for adoption. Carol and Skip talked with Harlow, an adoption lawyer who insisted the expectant mother doesn't get any money for giving up her baby, but Skip and Carol would still have to pay the lawyer $30,000. After Clint talked Gina into it, the pair eloped. Carl and Paul were surprised when Victor told them he had asked Cassandra to marry him. Victor asked Cassandra to fly off to Paris with him so they could be wed right away, but she hesitated.

Flies fiddling leads to good fun

By LISA MILLEGAN
Collegian Correspondent

The Horseflies
Iron Horse
Fri., Oct. 27

An eclectic and high-spirited performance by the Horseflies drew a variety of responses from a packed house at the Iron Horse on Friday night. At the forefront of the dance floor, audience members hurled their bodies in rapid contortions to the flies' often driving rhythms. Back, closer to the bar, fans seemed to be content to lean back, wine in hand, and nod gently to the music. Somehow, both of these responses seemed in keeping with the Horseflies' music.

It may seem cliche to say so, but the flies truly proved that they have a unique sound to share. Their instrumentation is somewhat similar to Camper Van Beethoven's but their tempos are quicker and their sound has a much harder rock edge. Their music could perhaps be labelled "high-tech square dance" or "African-influenced hoedown." Spit-fire fiddling and virtuoso banjo playing were accompanied by a constant African beat. It was enough to make even experienced college-music afficiandos do a double take.

The important thing about the flies is not the lyrics or the singing, but the instruments and the virtuosity of the players. This band is made up of excellent musicians. Leading the way is violinist Judy Hyman. Her solos in such songs as "Road Kill" and "Breaking up Christmas" offer evidence that she can hold her own against any respectable fiddle player. Percussionist Taki Masuko's innovative rhythms go far beyond the "boom-chuck" variety you can hear on the latest Bon Jovi LP. To top it all off, keyboardist Peter Dodge has programmed unusual sounds onto his synthesizer to push the Horseflies onto the cutting edge of American music.

The rapport the flies established with the audience also helped increase their popularity. The intimate nature of the Iron Horse allowed band members to joke freely with club patrons. After the show, the Horseflies didn't immediately race backstage. Instead they discussed songs with their fans and shook many hands. Even if they hit the big time, you can tell that they'll still be hanging out after shows, ready to strike up conversations with interested fans.

With their blend of unique music, the Horseflies can probably look forward to a string of sold-out shows.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Try to reduce spending. You don't have to throw money around to gain love. Give work your best effort. A promotion is likely after the first of the year. Don't slack off during winter holidays. Your ideas are more persuasive when put on paper. Pay attention to higher-up's priorities. Someone's misfortune in early spring will teach you an important lesson. Save for future. Family members will follow your lead.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: baseball's Lee Tunnell, singer Grace Slick, actor Henry Winkler, second US President John Adams, poet Ezra Pound.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Welcome new information about an old situation. You gain financially by updating and recycling previous ideas. Teamwork will improve the bottom line. A personal relationship begins to heat up.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): A "red-letter" day for your personal relationships and social life. Someone who talks your language has great romantic appeal. Plan family entertainment that is both fun and within your budget.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): A conflict between home and work must be resolved before you can make progress in either area. A neighbor offers to babysit in an emergency. Plan a special treat for this good friend.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Diplomacy and patience are your best allies now. Friction will generate more and more heat. Back away from petty squabbles. Good financial gains can be made if all pull together. Offer fringe benefits.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): No action is recommended until you have had ample time to study and analyze. Although someone dear offers excellent advice, you may not be in the mood to accept it. Think again.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Sometimes you have to use a little influence to get the results you desire. Contact a prominent friend for help. A special TV program could give you valuable insights. Be attentive to loved one.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Reasonable people usually can arrive at some kind of agreement when they try hard enough. Make the first move to bring about a compromise. Give a little and you will gain a lot.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Expect the unexpected. A difficult situation will have a happy ending. Domestic changes may mean taking a whole new direction. Be flexible. A conciliatory attitude could work wonders with an older relative.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Those who are not free may need to take a different approach. It is rarely a simple matter to break existing ties. Others begin to come around to your way of thinking.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Protect your private time with loved ones by discouraging drop-in visitors. A work project may be more complicated than you expected. A quiet evening at home could hold more appeal than a noisy party.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Have confidence in yourself and others will follow where you lead. Fresh financial gains are part of the picture. You never know what kind of treasure a thorough housecleaning may turn up.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): A talkative work associate could spill the beans. A close personal relationship has come to mean a great deal to you. You may be ready for a lasting commitment.

From forward to midfield, DeAngelis scores

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

Why mess with success? When you've got a forward, who seems to have scoring goals down to an exact science, maybe even an art form in the case of Kathy DeAngelis, why change the formula?

Why switch the University of Massachusetts field hockey player from forward, where she has flourished, to the midfield, where she has never played in her life?

The answer, reasons UMass coach Pam Hixon, is to get the ball to the stick of her big gun more often.

"When we put her up in the forward line, we really had trouble getting her the ball," Hixon said. "We were having problems earlier in the season getting the ball up the field because we just didn't have the people in the midfield with the experience to make a good pass and to work with Kathy so it seemed more logical to us if we wanted her to handle the ball a lot to put her in the midfield."

In the two previous seasons, the Minutewomen did not have that problem as DeAngelis led UMass in scoring. The move this year in the second weekend of the season by Hixon, however, has paid off. DeAngelis is leading the team with 14 goals to date and has had no trouble adjusting to her new role.

"It's not much of a difference," DeAngelis said. "The only thing is I have a little bit more marking responsibility defensively than I did in the past with the forward position."

The move was not made out of the blue though. An All-American forward last season and a member of the United States Reserve team, which is just one step below the Olympic team, DeAngelis is the complete player.

"She is an excellent passer when she needs to be," Hixon said. "She distributes the play well. By putting her back in the midfield, we just have more secure sticks and more experience in decision-making as far as passing and distributing the play."

And most of the decisions made by DeAngelis and the rest of the midfield have been the right ones. With one game to go, the Minutewomen are 12-4-2 and are ranked No. 8 in the nation by the NCAA. Much of that success can be attributed to a new midfield corps which replaced the one that graduated last year. The new trio seems to be working well together.

"I really feel that working with Beth [Thornton] and Sherlan [Cabralis] has been a big help because their such intelligent players," DeAngelis said.

The current midfield is new but not inexperienced. Thornton is a junior and Cabralis is a 23 year-old freshman who has played with the Trinidadian national team. Thornton and Cabralis have combined with DeAngelis on more than a few occasions this season.

"Our midfielders are probably the players who handle the ball the most on the field," Hixon said.

After watching DeAngelis' offensive output for the last three years, Hixon knows one thing for sure. If she can get DeAngelis the ball, the results will usually be positive.

"Because of Kathy's skills, we've designed a lot of our plays and we've done a lot of things to get the ball in Kathy's hands," Hixon said.

And this year, a new play has been added where DeAngelis is an option to take the shot on the penalty corner from the top of the circle.

Once she has the ball, DeAngelis knows what to do with it, especially if she is in the circle. Modestly, she concedes that there is a certain amount of luck involved though. "I just happen to be at the right place at the right time," DeAngelis said.

It's not coincidental that DeAngelis seems to be at the right place at the right time more than most of her teammates or opponents. Since redshirting three years ago, she has terrorized defenses that could not find a clue to solving her.

"Kathy is an excellent one-against-one player," Hixon said. "She's got very good individual skills and can either maneuver the ball around opponents or, if she can't, Kathy is intelligent enough to get the free hit so she keeps possession of the ball very well."

How valuable DeAngelis is, is hard to tell. Hixon will know next year after she has graduated. Two years ago, DeAngelis as a sophomore after having sat out a season, virtually carried the offense on her back, scoring 19 goals in leading the Minutewomen to the Final Four.

UMass may have more weapons this year with forwards such as sophomore Dawn Trumbauer and senior Mara Frattasio, who was not healthy for most of that season two years ago. The Minutewomen do not have quite the depth that they may have had last year, when they seemed destined to the Final Four before they were shocked by Northeastern. It is a younger team. But DeAngelis draws parallels between this year's squad and the one from two years ago.

"I am very optimistic," DeAngelis said. "It was tough in the beginning in preseason. It was a little up and down the way we were playing. We have such a young team and we lost some real key players last year. But it started to come around. I feel so optimistic because of what happened two years ago."

tic 10 and NCAA tournaments coming up, did not allow the Huskies to get back into the game.

"Our defense has played well," Hixon said. "Scotty has gotten progressively stronger. We've gotten more confidence in the combination of Scotty in goal and Kerri Fagan at sweeper."

The defense limited UConn to 12 shots and seven penalty corners in the game and preserved what was an important win for UMass, the No. 8 team in the country.

"We needed a win after our tie against BU and our tie against Northeastern," Hixon said. "It was important that we didn't come up short."

But there might have been more on the line for UConn, which came into the game ranked No. 13 by the NCAA. The top 12 teams will be going to the NCAA tourney this season.

"They needed to pull something here in order to move up into the top 12," Hixon said.

Defense has allowed the Minutewomen to remain in the top 12 thus far, with just one game left in the season, that with Dartmouth tomorrow at Totman.

Kater picked up a ball from the midfield and surveying the field, threaded the needle to an open Sue Gaudette for her 10th goal of the year.

Things looked like the Reds would play the remaining 38 minutes out for the victory, but Rutgers put a monkey wrench into those plans as the Lady Knights scored the game-knotter with 13 minutes left.

The two 15-minute overtime sessions weren't anything unusual for UMass; after all, that would be the fifth of the year and the third in as many games.

But the result would not be a tie, like the other four OTs, but a loss. With three minutes left in overtime, Vicki Hoekstra crossed a ball to Rutgers' leading scorer, Kris Kurzynowski for the game-winner.

"With our approach [Saturday], it doesn't surprise me we let up an overtime goal," Rudy said. "This was very poor; we're not a team that can show up and expect to win."

When the Reds stepped onto the Hill yesterday, they did more than show up — they were intense and fought all over the field.

UMass somewhat unexpectedly scored thrice against a stingy Bruin defense. The Reds established an early lead on a restart, with Holly Hellmuth booting a free kick into the box. Sue Gaudette dug the ball out in front of goalie Kathryne Tarnoff to Robin Runstein, who pushed it in for a 1-0 lead.

Runstein was the spark on the second goal, passing to Colette Bowler on the left wing, who fed Kim Eynard in front for her seventh goal.

Michele Woodside capped off the afternoon, continuing her fine performance as of late, heading in her sixth goal of the year.

"This is a type of effort that might indicate what kind of team we are," Rudy said.

LaFreniere said. "Laura told me she still felt the effects of the Atlantic 10 meet."

Sophomore Michelle St. Laurent deserves the equivalent of a 10th Player Award at least as much as Nick Esasky did for the Red Sox for her performance. St. Laurent was the Minutewomen's fifth runner, placing 52nd overall.

"Michelle saved the day for us," LaFreniere said. "She's a key reason why we came in second. I can't say enough for work habits and attitude."

Rounding out the UMass seven were junior Kathy Holt (62nd) and sophomore Precious Hill (67th).

Reserves shine as Minutemen win, 31-27

flanker Ron Blauvelt, fullback Duncan MacRae and defensive tackle Rich Kane — all of whom either were playing out of position or hadn't made many big contributions all year, took on starring roles.

"The story of this game was guts and courage. Our guys filled in beautifully," Reid said.

The Minutemen went 74 yards in just six plays on the opening drive, capped off as quarterback Gary Wilkos (10-for-22, 140 yards) nailed Mike Tobin in the right corner of the end zone for a 30-yard touchdown strike just 2:33 into the game.

There was no secret to NU's game plan. The team that was averaging just 44 yards passing per game went strictly to the ground, behind the wishbone and QB Dan Daponde of Northampton.

Daponde (20 carries for 60 yards before hurting his shoulder) rushed on seven of the first eight plays before making a critical mistake — he tried to throw a pass. Cornerback Don Caparotti was camped out at the 5-yard line for an easy interception.

The pickoff set up UM's longest drive of the year, a 95-yarder that ended with Olson (43 yards on 13 carries in his first start since returning from a stomach pull) barreling in from four yards out. UMass led, 14-0 after one.

But the lead wouldn't last, as Northeastern took advantage of a couple of Wilkos (three interceptions) errors to tie the game. The first came when Raymond Gee stole a pass at the UMass 21, and Harold Scott punched it in from 10 yards out five plays later.

Then, Wilkos got decked just as he was throwing, and his wounded quail wound up in Russ Russo's arms at the 19. Daponde eventually tied the game on a 2-yard keeper.

"That wasn't Gary's fault. He got whacked when he let the ball go," Reid said.

UMass took the halftime edge, as Marco Gabrielli nailed a 42-yard field goal in the final minute to make it 17-14.

David Mitchell's 13-yard draw play through a gaping hole upped it to 24-14 in the third. The key play turned out to be a defensive holding call against NU that gave UMass an automatic first down just before Mitchell's run.

But just when you thought you had Northeastern all figured out, lo and behold, the Huskies started to pass. Byron Hurt, who replaced Daponde, found a streaking Brandon Tsetsilas from 43 yards to slice it back to 24-21.

With just under five minutes to play, NU set up for a game-tying field goal. Dave Rusk got the kick off from 30 yards out, but Kane got his arms up and gave it a big Mark Eaton-style rejection, what many felt was the play of the game.

"I'd been getting penetration all day," said Kane, who had eight tackles. "I just happened to be in the right place."

Fullback David Mitchell was the leading rusher for UMass in its 31-27 win at Northeastern Saturday.

An even bigger play came after UMass took over. Wilkos finally succumbed to his hurting shoulder ("I went 8⅓ innings today," he said), bringing in Paul Tornatore for a critical third-down pass. Tornatore hit Chip Mitchell for 11 yards and a first down, and MacRae then ran right through a Red Sea defense for a 73-yard touchdown burst to seal the game.

Wilkos didn't have his best day passing, but had several key runs en route to a 74-yard rushing performance. David Mitchell led the team with 77 yards and Blauvelt, backing up Olson at tailback, had 45 big yards on four carries. In all, the Minutemen had 305 yards on the ground, even without top-rusher Jerome Bledsoe.

Field hockey nips UConn, 1-0

By GEORGE AUSTIN

If you don't score, you can't win. It's as simple as that.

The University of Massachusetts field hockey team, with its 1-0 win over the University of Connecticut on Saturday at Totman Field, installed the fourth segment in its shutout streak.

During that time, UMass is 3-0-1 (the tie was a scoreless game with Boston University). Freshman goaltender Phillipa Scott was credited with four shutouts.

Scott had 10 saves Saturday, but she has not been the sole force that has slammed the door in opponents' faces.

"Bernie Martel played great," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "Over the past few weeks she's had to play against the best player on the other team day in and day out. She has been great without any stats."

Martel was switched from the midfield to the left back position early in the season and seems to have found a home.

"If I was to pick one player who has made a difference in the past couple of weeks, without any stats, it would be Bernie Martel," Hixon said.

Beth Thornton provided all the offense that the Minutewomen needed with 31:51 left in the second half when she drilled a Sherlan Cabralis pass past UConn goalie Megan Tiley to score the only goal of the game off a penalty corner.

And the defense, which seems to be gelling just at the right time for the Minutewomen with the Atlan-

Reds split, await tourney selections

By RICK SETO

The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team got some premature trick-or-treating this weekend, and it almost turned out to be one of those holiday accidents.

First, Rutgers came knocking on the Boyden door Saturday and the Reds got spooked, losing to the Lady Knights 2-1 in overtime.

Afterwards, a dejected UMass coach Jim Rudy said, "This is the worst we've played this year. We weren't ready to play today. Rutgers didn't have anything to lose, and they didn't.

"I think if we lose tomorrow, I think we're out [of consideration for an NCAA bid]. We're playing for the tournament tomorrow."

With their backs to the wall, the Reds didn't crumble under the pressure yesterday, downing a tough Brown team, 3-0, and almost guaranteeing an eighth consecutive NCAA bid.

A much happier Rudy said, "I'm really happy for the girls on the bid. I'm tickled pink that they could come back like this."

Rudy was probably close to turning blue after the Rutgers game, the Reds' most lackluster effort of the year.

The UMass eleven on the field looked like a bunch of our state politicians — confused and having no solution.

"Our concentration was horrible," Rudy said. "We lost people and let them run free. Our midfield didn't communicate and we got nothing out of them tactically. There was no sense of responsibility."

After a very sluggish first half, UMass picked up the pace in the second half, getting on the board first. April

Women harriers take second in NE

By JASON GEORGE

The University of Massachusetts women's cross country team placed second in the New England Championships Saturday at Northfield Mountain. In running to their best finish in 10 years, the Minutewomen lost to only Providence College, ranked third in the nation.

The Friars ran and hid from the rest of New England with 33 points, while UMass had 139.

UMass senior captain Shana Smith showed that she clearly belongs in consideration with the finest runners in New England, finishing fourth overall behind Geraldine Hendricksen and Christine Crowley of PC and Lisa Wakem of Connecticut.

"This was definitely her best collegiate race," UMass coach Julie LaFreniere said. "She beat some pretty fine athletes out there."

Smith's performance was particularly key in helping UMass defeat perennial rival Vermont, which finished just three seconds behind UMass in third place. Smith nipped Vermont's Brenda White by three seconds to spearhead the Minutewomen's fine effort.

Freshman Maureen Meldrim turned in a superlative performance for UMass, finishing 19th overall. "Shana and Maureen simply led the team," LaFreniere said. "Maureen beat some upperclassmen who are good runners and have been around for quite a while.

Junior Laura LaVallee and freshman Becky Johnson contributed mightily to the team's effort, finishing 31st and 34th overall. "Laura ran very well, as did Becky,"

Volleyball cut down by GW, 3-0

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Correspondent

The University of Massachusetts women's volleyball team's losing woes continued Friday night as it fell to Atlantic 10 rival George Washington University, 15-4, 15-3, 15-6 at Totman Gym.

Dominating the entire match, George Washington wrapped it up in the third game with tremendous serving and solid defense. With GW up 8-2, the Minutewomen (2-18) tried to stay close, narrowing the gap to 8-6 with four unanswered points under middle hitter Rachel Bredemeier's serving.

But that would be all that UMass could muster as GW turned its defense up a notch, shutting down the Minutewomen's offense.

"I know we can play better as we did against Boston College and Yale," UMass coach Carol Ford said. "I'm going to stay positive."

In the first game, the Colonials jumped out to a quick 9-1 lead, taking advantage of UM's weakness in service returns and poor defense. GW employed outside hitter Allison O'Neill's jump serve to add to the Minutewomen's troubles.

Down 12-3, UMass captain Nancy Sullivan tried to make something happen with a kill, but the Colonials rolled on to take the first game.

"Our blocking hurt us. On the right side, Susan Richardson and Sullivan were not a big block," Ford said. "That jump serve definitely hurt us. Their serving, period, hurt us."

Game two was deja vu for the Minutewomen as GW mounted an 8-0 lead until freshman middle hitter Sharon Panoff came up with a kill. Cinnamon Burnim got one of her six kills of the match, and again UMass couldn't return O'Neill's jump serve as she increased GW's lead to 12-1.

"We didn't have much offense because we weren't passing well," Ford said. "GW played great and deserves the win."

Water polo drowns Notre Dame

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE
Collegian Staff

There was no luck of the Irish Friday night. Rather, there was a lack of Irish talent.

The University of Massachusetts water polo team was all over Notre Dame at Amherst College Friday night, winning 21-10 before close to 200 fans.

"They were a lot weaker than I anticipated," said UMass coach Russ Yarworth.

It took UMass less than one minute before it was up 2-0. At the end of the period it was 7-3. Jon Miller led the Minutemen out of the chute, getting three goals in the period.

Despite lulls in intensity the Minutemen sported wide leads throughout the night. The score at the quarter marks all found UMass ahead: 7-3, 12-4, 19-7, and 21-10.

The scoring for UMass was spread around amongst multiple players. Goals were scored by Miller (four), Jay Peluso (three), Scott Deluca, Alex Yelensky, Brian McIver, G.T. Ladd, Adam Feldman (two apiece), and Scott Reed Craig Siegal, Tom Quinn and Bill Pendergast with a goal each.

What can Yarworth and company gain from this one-sided victory?

"Nothing really," said Yarworth. "After the first minute we didn't play defense because we knew we could get away with it."

Since UMass expended so little energy against the Irish Yarworth greeted his troops bright and early at 8:15 the next day for a Saturday morning workout.

"The kids know they needed this workout," he said. "They got lazy against Notre Dame."

UMass, now 12-9, will spend the week getting ready for next weekend's New England Championships at Harvard.

Tax bill may provide funds to curb cuts

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

The House Ways and Means committee is debating a tax bill that could heal the wounds created by the recent slash of $6.4 million from the University of Massachusetts' operating budget, Associate Chancellor James Leheney said last night.

Leheney, one of the five people who met with Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson, said it is the University's hope that the Deficit Budget Tax Bill, proposed by House Speaker George Keverian (D-Everett) and Rep. Charles Flaherty (D-Cambridge), will give enough money to the state to compensate for the recent cutbacks.

Madson said the University is trying to mobilize the campus to support the committee by organizing telephone and letter writing campaigns to legislators, alumnae, and parents.

"The biggest problem is people don't think their phone calls and letters mean that much, but they do," Madson said.

Student Trustee Eric Nakajima, who attended the meeting, said Chancellor Joseph Duffey said the recent Statehouse rally has played a significant role in advancing the bill.

"The chancellor said the rally, and the effort all the 3,000 students made to get in [to the Statehouse], was instrumental in getting us where we are now," he said.

Madson said if the bill passes through the House, it could be presented to the Senate by Wednesday.

UMass Anthropology Professor and President of the Massachusetts Society of Professors John Cole, who also attended the meeting, said, "I would be surprised if this [bill] doesn't pass through the house."

Cole said that according to Rep. Stanley Rosenberg (D-Amherst), the Senate is lined up to support the bill.

He jokingly added that Gov. Dukakis thinks the bill is "pretty neat" as well.

University Research and Development staff member Steve Kulik, who was at the meeting, said although the details of the

Attorney discusses legal implications of AIDS

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

Attorney Kevin Cathcart spoke last Friday at the University of Massachusetts about AIDS and the legal problems facing people with AIDS and those who test HIV positive.

Because AIDS is often mistaken as a "gay disease,' it leads to discrimination against the gay community, said Cathcart, who is the executive director of Gay and Lesbian Advocates and Defenders, a non-profit organization based in Boston that handles cases of discrimination against lesbian, bisexual and gay people.

"There has been a clear rise in anti-gay violence and this stems from those stereotypes that say it is primarily a gay disease," Cathcart said. "There has been red-lining on insurance policies and there have been individuals turned away from jobs because they test HIV positive."

Red-lining is the practice of turning applicants away for discriminatory reasons.

Cathcart presented an overview of AIDS, and said practicing safe sex is the surest protection against contracting the HIV virus. HIV is a virus that is introduced into an individual's system and a testing for the virus does not necessarily determine whether an individual has AIDS.

AIDS attacks a person's auto immune system, rendering them defenseless to a virus as small as the common cold. It leaves them vulnerable to all diseases, according to the April and July 1989 issues of American Journal of Nursing.

"It is a difficult virus — it doesn't live on doorknobs or Diet Coke cans," Cathcart said. "It is passed through blood to blood, semen to blood contact. When bodily fluids are transferred, there is high risk."

He explained that the concentration of the virus in tears or saliva is very low, but that there are risks if a canker sore or other small cuts are present.

"It is passed through sexual contact, IV drug use, and blood transfusions. The instances of it being passed through blood transfusion usually occur in hemophiliacs since great quantities of it are used," Cathcart said.

However, transmission of the HIV virus through blood transfusions does not happen often, he said.

"There are a variety of AIDS-related syndromes, however the gradations don't follow a smooth order," Cathcart said.

"Education can't be done enough. Information gained from research is constantly shifting, you need to keep up to date. It [education] should be pushed in classes. And if it isn't, you should push for it in your classes," said Cathcart.

"The disease has had an incubation period of two, four, five years. Now we're finding that it has incubation periods of 10-11 years. But the research was begun in 1979, 1980. We don't have 20 years worth of data," Cathcart said.

"There are definite stereotypes associated with AIDS and they are false. It can strike anyone. Aids also brings old problems to the surface, such as having a monogamous relationship,' he said. 'It also addresses racism in its stereotypes, and instances of battered women has been found to be associated with it. There have to be major changes in what we consider indelicate," he said.

"It is very important to practice sex with a condom. It is vital to be honest with your partner. Sure it's hard to talk about, and it's not very romantic, but it needs to be done," Cathcart said.

Men arrested twice in one night

Two men were arrested twice in a two hour period between late Saturday night and early Sunday morning in Washington Residence Hall, police said.

John Cutone, 18, and Chris Francione, 18, both of Watertown, were served trespass notices and escorted off campus at 10:22 p.m. in Washington for threatening a security receptionist, police said.

They were arrested for the first time at 11:48 p.m. after they returned to Washington, police said. The two men then returned to the dorm after being bailed out and arrested again at 2:02 a.m. Sunday, police said. The second cash bail was set at $1,000, police said.

Students fix state flowers

Cleanup eases representatives' bitterness

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

About 25 University of Massachusetts landscape architecture students brought flowers to the State House Saturday in an attempt to subdue hard feelings to state legislators caused during the Oct. 18 rally to protest state budget cuts to education.

David Hancox, a senior who helped organize the event, said the group bussed to Boston at 9 a.m., raked the State House lawn, cleaned dead mums from flower beds and planted 16,000 red and yellow tulip bulbs. The students volunteered because they were upset the press coverage of the rally unfairly emphasized trampled flower beds and unruly students, he said. "The gesture was meant to take care of the flowers, and get the focus off that subject and back to the budget cuts," he said.

He said the public perception of college students was probably enhanced because of extensive television coverage of the yardwork.

"Mr. and Mrs. Jones sitting home watching the six o'clock news were shown students in a positive light which may influence their vote when it's time to decide about new taxes," he said.

The tulip bulbs, which cost about $2,800, were paid for with money raised through donations by UMass students, faculty and alumni. About $4,000 was donated altogether and the University provided the bus. Hancox said the remaining $1,200 will be sent to the State House to defray the cost of other rally-related damages.

Hancox said House Speaker George

Amherst College men learn about women

By JIM COHEN
Collegian Correspondent

Recent events at Amherst College indicate that there may be a growing consciousness among men about women's issues.

In early October, 250-300 students attended a vigil at Amherst College for women who have been victims of rape or sexual harassment. In addition to the large turnout, what made this vigil unique was that more than half of the crowd were men, according to the Amherst Student, the campus newspaper.

Emily Fatula, an Amherst College sophomore, who helped organize the event, said she believes the large male turnout was in part due to the fact that they chose to hold a vigil instead of a demonstration or a rally.

"A vigil would not be antagonistic," she said, "This will allow the group to make a statement that would reach a wider group of people."

Another example of an men's increased awareness of women's issues is a new group called Men Against Rape Combatting Harassment, an organization that "supports women in their activities and problems."

The group was formed by Amherst College students Alec Myers and Bengt Johnson.

Johnson said the group's main goals are to support women and educate men on campus about women's issues. "Each one of us plays a part [in sexism], no matter how subtle. This has been tough to accept," Johnson said.

A lot of men become defensive when the issue of sexism is raised, said Johnson, and many are unaware they may be intimidating or harassing in the way they talk or act because it is an unconscious act. He said that many men are not aware of what constitutes date rape and because of this they may commit rape unwittingly.

The group, now in its fourth week, has had as many as 75 men attending. The meetings, at the Amherst College Campus, are a "time to talk," Johnson said.

Johnson said women have generally been supportive and have helped with ideas for the group.

University of Massachusetts sophomore Brett Jenkins said men are becoming more aware of sexual harassment.

"With all the vigils and gatherings in the area, it's hard not to notice something is going on," Jenkins said. "There is a definite awareness. People will be more careful now — a couple of years ago guys didn't know about date rape."

Jenkins said many men need to learn to behave more responsibly. "It's up to the individual not to get himself into a situation."

Johnson compared date rape with drunk driving several years ago. It wasn't acceptable to tell someone they were too drunk to drive, while now it is encouraged, Johnson said. Johnson hopes eventually it will be more acceptable for men to intervene on behalf of a woman who is being harassed by another man.

New program to place student volunteers

By PATRICK M. MANSEAU
Collegian staff

Amidst the scraps of budget depleted programs, a new student service is emerging. Volunteer Initiative Blending Education and Service(VIBES), a student volunteer placement program, is being implemented with private donations through the School of Management.

VIBES was initiated with the help of SOM Dean Thomas J. O'Brien, who brought the idea of developing a "linkage between student interest and volunteer opportunities" from Harvard in 1987.

Maureen Shagnom, a University of Massachusetts student, was hired last summer to investigate volunteer opportunities at the University and to survey the needs of organizations in the community.

The program discovered that, aside from the Internship Program, no structured program exists to aid students in their search for volunteer opportunities. A list of about 100 agencies in need of volunteers, varying from children's organizations to veteran's groups, was then compiled.

According to Britt Alschuler, VIBES coordinator, there are three general reasons why students become involved with volunteering — not having time, not knowing how to start, and a lack of confidence in their abilities.

However, Alschuler said that having no time is just a myth because "everyone has one to three free hours per week." VIBES is open to all majors and has paid student staff, including Aschuler, Mahmoodur Rahman, and Marnie Solomon, who are there to direct students to existing volunteer opportunities and aid in student placement. The staff also serves as a continuous support system for the students who are placed by VIBES.

To those students who feel they have no special skill to offer Aschuler said, "individual students have a lot to offer even if it's only their time." Many organizations only need students to answer phones for a few hours per week, he said.

Greek organizations and social clubs are encouraged to inquire about special one-time events like organizing a children's Halloween party or working in a soup kitchen for a day.

"November 4th we have an event called Companion Day where you take local children to the UMass football game," said VIBES counselor Mahmood Rahman. "Interested groups should sign up at the VIBES office at SOM room 100 by October 31."

'Shop-off' urges consumer chosiness

By EMILY HAYES
Collegian Correspondent

Choosing one tube of toothpaste over another could help save the environment, consumers learned during the Great Environmental Shop-Off last Saturday at the Stop & Shop in Northampton.

The Shop-Off, sponsored by Clean Water Action, was part of an active campaign to encourage supermarkets to adopt specific measures which would eliminate excess waste and decrease the likelihood of pesticide contamination in the shoppers' groceries.

The Environmental Shoppers Campaign is based on the idea that consumer dollars can tell the area supermarkets that people are concerned about their environment, said Chris Bathurst, the Western Massachusetts Organizer of the campaign.

Bathurst said the campaign is unique because it does not involve legislation, and consumers can actively participate by being more finicky about the products they buy. He said everybody has access to the program and they can show their support by pledging to shop at the market which participates.

Saturday's event surveyed consumers on a typical shopping day to see how they shop.

Susan Nowak Gray, a supporter of the shoppers' campaign, volunteered to go on an environmental shopping spree to demonstrate how shoppers can change their shopping habits. Consumers can support recycling by choosing products with less packaging, she said.

While curious shoppers looked on and questioned her, Gray pulled several items from the shelves including organic fruits, toothpaste in a metal tube, and toilet paper wrapped in paper. She was accompanied by a woman who wore a sign with the do's and don't of environmental shopping.

As Gray picked Mrs. Butterworth's Lite syrup in a glass container off the shelf she said, "I'm trying to watch my waist." Her environmental guide Heidi Klein said, 'in more ways than one."

When it came to purchasing diapers, Gray's baby boy, who sat in the front of the shopping cart, had the answer. On his back he wore a cloth cape which read, "Cloth diapers: the only choice."

Gray asked the gathering onlookers, "did you know those [disposable diapers] sit around in landfills for 500 years?"

Shoppers should stay away from deodorants which are double wrapped, Gray said.

and a juvenile were arrested Saturday near Hampden Snack Bar on charges of being minors in possession of alcohol.

●Randall Schutee, 18, of Coolidge Residence Hall and Stephen Tibbetts, 19, of Osterville were arrested Sunday near the Southwest Tunnel on charges of being minors in possession of alcohol.

●Marc Reardon, 19, of Kennedy Residence Hall was arrested Sunday on North Pleasant St. on charges of operating under the influence of alcohol.

●John Greene, 19, of 204 Pierpont Residence Hall, was arrested Sunday on Fearing St. extension on charges of operating under the influence of alcohol.

The Amherst Fire Department ambulance was called to the scene to assist Dean Graffeo, 19, of John Adams Residence Hall, who was struck by Greene's car as he was crossing the street.

●Everett Longston, 19, of Indian Orchard, was arrested Sunday on Kennedy Drive on charges of being a minor transporting alcohol.

●James Czech, 22, of Eastham, was arrested in Lot 50 Sunday on charges of assault and battery, disturbing the peace and being a disorderly person. Police responded to a fight which continued when they arrived and consequently made the arrests.

VANDALISM

●A man reported his vehicle was damaged while it was parked in Lot 32 Friday. Damage was estimated at $50.

●A man reported the windshield of his vehicle was smashed Saturday while it was parked at Gorman Residence Hall. Damage was estimated at more than $100.

●Police responded to a report of an inscription in fake blood on his door in John Q. Adams Residence Hall.

●A victim in North Village reported his vehicle was hit on the left side while it was parked at North Village. Damage was estimated at around $1,000.

In other police reports:

●Two people carrying a large object in a knapsack outside Coolidege Residence Hall are scheduled to be summoned to court on charges of being minors in possession of alcohol, procuring alcohol for a person under 21 years of age and using false identification.

bill have not yet been worked out, the important point is the administration "is ready to hit the ground running when the bill comes through."

Madson said the bill looks at several revenue-raising possibilities, including a one percent increase in sales tax, and new taxes on gasoline and alcohol.

Madson said he agrees with Cole that the bill looks promising, but stressed the importance of student involvement in expressing support.

"The momentum is there," he said. "Now we want to keep it moving forward."

Keverian (D-Everett), state representative Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst) and an aid to Gov. Michael Dukakis came to express their support for the students and stayed to answer questions.

Rosenberg said in a telephone interview yesterday that he wrote a letter describing the student cleanup effort and their determination to minimize the budget cuts. A copy of the letter, also signed by state representative Timothy O'Leary (D-Melrose), was sent to each member of the House of Representatives.

Rosenberg said most of his colleagues were impressed because the students initiated the effort themselves. By cleaning the grounds the students settled negative feelings toward college students held by some legislators, he said.

"The main thing it did was to eliminate all the ill will and put the system back on a level playing field," he said.

He said budget cuts will be unnecessary if new taxes and a savings program, to reduce state government waste, can be voted in. Students must talk with parents and friends and convince them public education is a top priority and new taxes are necessary.

Every student should contact their hometown state representative and tell them they would support their decision to keep public education at current levels, he said.

"Students who registered [to vote] and will vote in their hometown, should support their legislators with their vote and with volunteer efforts in upcoming campaigns if that is what it takes to make sure the legislator courageously votes for new taxes," Rosenberg said.

Socialists claim victory in elections

MADRID (AP) — The Socialist Party claimed victory in Sunday's general elections, saying it had retained its parliamentary majority by one seat.

With 100 percent of the vote counted, government spokesman Miguel Gil said early yesterday the Socialists had won 176 seats in the 350-seat Cortes, the lower house of Parliament.

The conservative Popular Party, under its new leader and prime ministerial candidate Jose Maria Aznar, remained the leading opposition party, with 106 seats.

Gil said about 70 percent of Spain's 29.5 million registered voters cast ballots, with a heavy turnout in the final hours.

Prime Minister Felipe Gonzalez told supporters in Madrid the "logical consequence of the outcome so far is that we will have to continue to assume the responsibility of governing."

Despite their victory, the Socialists did suffer a setback, They had won 184 seats in the lower house in 1986 elections, down from their landslide of 202 seats in 1982.

Analysts attributed the drop in Socialist support to discontent in the party's left wing with what is viewed as the pro-business position of Gonzalez's government.

Police to probe illegal acts at rally

JOHANNESBURG (AP) — Police said yesterday they were investigating for possible prosecution participants in a rally by 70,000 people in which the outlawed African National Congress' guerrilla campaign was repeatedly praised.

"All that was said and all that took place is being studied," said police spokesman Col. Vic Haynes the morning after the welcome rally for seven recently freed ANC leaders in a soccer stadium outside Johannesburg.

Nearly everything about the gathering violated security laws, but police kept their distance and state television led the evening news with a report on what was the largest anti-government rally in South Africa's 79 year history.

Newspapers, including pro-government media, today called on the government to do away with laws restricting political activity. And the government hinted it may be considering lifting some restrictions on political expression to allow peaceful protests.

"We must be prepared to run risks," Law and Order Minister Adriaan Vick said on government-run television Sunday night, adding that maintaining the status quo is riskier than allowing mass protest.

The government granted permission for Sunday's rally as part of an attempt by new President F.W. de Klerk to promote black-white negotiations. But a magistrate had warned organizers that speakers should avoid promoting ANC aims.

"We refused," said Cyril Ramaphosa, a union leader and one of the main rally organizers. "The ANC lives. It is amongst us."

"Today, the ANC has captured center stage in South Africa," declared Walter Sisulu, 77, the group's former general secretary, in the main address Sunday to the cheering, singing, dancing throng which filled most of the seats in the recently opened stadium.

Police and soldiers set up roadblocks nearby and searched vehicles, but few security force personnel were visible at the stadium itself.

From a podium erected beneath huge banners of the ANC and the South African Communist Party, Sisulu appeared with six ANC colleagues freed unconditionally from prison Oct. 15. All but one had spent at least 25 years in prison.

Deafening cheers arose when Sisulu and his colleagues slowly circled the playing field, each walking under an umbrella, behind an honor guard of 20 young militants, clad in khaki uniforms and marching in military style.

"ANC, ANC," shouted the crowd, many dressed in the movement's green, black and gold colors, or wearing T-shirts with the slogan, "ANC Lives" and names of the freed prisoners.

The crown included white South Africans and diplomats from at least 15 countries.

GOP making gains in voter registration

BOSTON (AP) — For the first time in years, new Massachusetts voters are registering Republican more than Democrat, registration figures show.

Even though Republicans are still outnumbered by nearly 1 million in the state, they have been out registering Democrats by a more than 2 to 1 ratio since early 1988, The Boston Globe reported Sunday.

The trend has encouraged Republican Party leaders.

"This is a clear sign that young people are moving into the Republican Party. "It also shows that some of the urban inner cities are tired of the ultra liberal policies of Michael Dukakis and they want a party that will push for a death penalty and get tough on drugs."

Tennant said he believes the increase in GOP registration is significant because much of it occurred during a presidential campaign when the governor was the Democratic nominee.

"These figures are without question the most encouraging number the party has seen in decades," Tennant said.

Veteran political consultant Daniel Payne downplayed the Republican gains.

"When you have a small base, any increase seems large," Payne said. "They are looking at everything they can get. The Republicans are so desperate for positive news that they're going to highlight anything that's positive. But they can't even get a candidate into most of the races of this state."

EDITORIAL/OPINION

The opinions on this page are those of the individual writer or cartoonist and do not necessarily reflect the views of the Collegian or the University unless otherwise noted.

Story's importance, guesswork

This is my ninth attempt to write this (I usually go with my second effort) without sounding wrong.

The following is not so much an apology as it is a statement of fact that stories have mistakes, some with greater ramifications than others.

David R. Mark

This semester, members of the Collegian, including myself, have done things wrong. Given a second chance, no doubt many of these wrongs would not have occurred.

Paul Cameron's visit Thursday was his third in four years. In his previous visits, he delivered anti-gay speeches that upset a high percentage of the campus, leading to homophobic incidents and causing related acts of harassment and violence.

When the decision was made to put the story on page one of Friday's Collegian, the expectation was that his speech would evoke the same responses again. What did occur was what Cameron deserved — no audience, no room and no one caring — but unfortunately, the Collegian anticipated the opposite.

I think the result was a less-worthy story on page one.

When a major incident occurs, the people in budget, the daily 5:30 p.m. meeting of the managing editor, news editor, photography technician and layout technician, decide to place the story on page one. If a story occurs in the daytime, the above people can quickly determine the story's importance. If the story occurs at night, however, determining the story's importance is more guesswork.

MINI-EDITORIAL –1: People keep misplacing things down here (read: stuff gets taken). In one week, one of our staff members lost a wallet with IDs, two sets of keys and a sweater. What do we have to do, wear human velcro suits?

MINI-EDITORIAL –2: George Keverian, the current speaker of the house, is planning a run for state treasurer. The man is one of the biggest anti-education people in the Statehouse. Should we trust him with our state's money? Remember this slogan: "A vote for Keverian is a vote against education."

MINI-EDITORIAL –3: Has anybody noticed this relationship: The more people become openly pro-choice, the more states pass pro-life legislation. I don't understand this one, unless state representatives aren't listening to their constituents in other areas besides education.

MINI-EDITORIAL –4: Remember the anti-pornography protesters from last semester? Strange how those who picketed the Amherst Newsroom dropped from the scene so quickly. What's more interesting is that our local cable company, Dimension, has not been the site of a protest.

Among the channels on Dimension is Showtime, which shows foreign (somewhat edited) X-rated movies after midnight. Check your cable guide. Anything with nudity, adult sexual theme qualifies. This stuff is as bad, and more readily-available, than anything you'd see in a pornographic magazine.

A 'home away from home?'

I lived in one of the most violently dangerous cities of the Philippines for 16 years before coming to the United States. I would go to bed every night listening to the scary crackling of gunfire and wake up wondering if today some gun-toting idiot will accidentally shoot me. When my family decided to move here a few years ago, I thought the nightmare was over.

Anna Regina Santiago

Several days ago that illusion was finally shattered. Those 16 years spent cowering in fear, frustration and anger are back.

Fourth floor in Brett House is the Social Diversity corridor. It's been the source of tension and conflict and given the most derogatory titles since the semester began. "Isn't that the gay floor?" someone asked me once. I preferred not to dignify his query with an answer.

Students sign up for this hall to be free of harassment, whether or not they are gay. Students sign up for any hall expecting that freedom. Some people just don't want to hear it, I guess. Tenants must now carry that burden of ignorance.

Saturday at 4 a.m. I was awakened by the pounding of footsteps. It's happened before. Some people were probably having their weekend drinking binge, I thought. I was about to reach for the door when my roommate warned me not to leave.

"Oh my God," I thought, "was the Philippine Army coming to get me?" I remember being lulled back to sleep by angry voices hurling more ugly epithets. Later that morning we woke up to posters, broken bottles and blood stains. Strangers had come to show their dissatisfaction with our lifestyles.

I'm one of many who were assigned to live on this floor. I am as heterosexual as one can get, but I'm being subjected to the same prejudices directed at those who aren't. It's unfortunate that many go through their entire lives never giving others the benefit of the doubt.

My friends on this floor are the closest I have to family. They're funny, gregarious. Many of them make beautiful music. Some of them speak languages I can only dream of speaking one day. They calm me when life gets too hectic. They order take-out food with me when I'm hungry, even when they really have no money to spare.

I listen to heated debates among them night after night, from feminism to the magical properties of yams. I don't know if some or any of them are gay. I've never given a damn about their sexual preferences nor will I ever.

It doesn't change a thing.

Being a foreigner in a university that can't seem to accept differences has its frustrations. Living in a dorm where my race is the first excuse for being disliked seems strange, but it's a feeling I'd rather not get used to.

It's human nature to have our ideas of right and wrong. But we complicate our lives by imposing upon others our illusion of bad and good.

That's how wars start and never end. I'm no do-gooder by any stretch of the imagination but, believe it or not, there's more to life than deciding for others what they have the right to decide for themselves.

My roommate and I shudder and stare nervously at each other every time we hear loud voices in the hallway. I stand by my door for five minutes before I finally muster the courage to go to the bathroom. This is ridiculous. This is my home away from home. I feel the gun-toting idiots nearby once again.

Rock was no role model for anyone

I was in the lobby of Gorman the other day and saw one of the most disgusting things that has passed my eyes recently.

There was a display of posters profiling gay individuals among which I was shocked to find Rock Hudson.

The only thing Rock Hudson ever did for the gay community was die. His death from AIDS was the single event that most shook public opinion and brought attention to the crisis.

However, he never acknowledged his sexual preference while living or as he died. The information that he died of AIDS was released contrary to his wishes after he lost mental competence.

While he could have used his prestige and fame to help acceptance of the gay community, he instead chose to stab the community in the back and lie about what he was.

Using Mr. Hudson as a model for gay rights is like calling Amos and Andy civil rights leaders. It is disgusting.

No more premature decoration

Well, today is Halloween.

Yes, it's October 31st.

Maybe someone should tell the retailers that it's Halloween — that it's only October 31st . . .

Meredith O'Brien

Last week I went to the Hampshire Mall to pick up a new coffee pot. (You know, it's midterm-time and people in my house need caffeine. I accidentally cracked our coffee pot during one of my many late-night study sessions — but that's another story.)

Anyway, while I was searching for this pot, I noticed something peculiar. The atmosphere of the store was definitely not one of Halloween, autumn or masquerades. The atmosphere was unmistakenly one of Christmas.

Did I mention today's date yet? It's October 31st.

I can understand, somewhat, that some shoppers want to get their Christmas shopping done early. My own mother called me up over two weeks ago to ask me for a Christmas list! (I hate Christmas lists, by the way. They are so artificial and completely destroy any element of surprise on Christmas morning. I know, they serve the purpose of preventing those unwanted purple sock-hat-scarf-mitten sets that an aunt might give you. But still . . .)

In spite of the benefits of shopping early — no lines, better selection, a gradual depletion of your bank account — it still takes the fun out of Christmas.

But shopping early could mean shopping in mid-November, or right before Thanksgiving, not in mid-October! Obviously, the retailers believe that if they cover their stores with tacky Christmas decorations in October, they will promote earlier Christmas purchasing. Christmas will be on people's minds in October, not November.

And because of the great time gap between mid-October and December 25th, maybe people will gradually spend more money. (It certainly looks better in a checkbook if your money disappears gradually, rather than going from $300 to $.68 in one week.)

Maybe these retailers believe that they can eventually con us consumers into doing our Christmas shopping in June, then they'd really make more money! Just picture those bathing suits, July 4th Americana decorations right next to Rudolph and Frosty . . .

So there they are, those yuletide decorations, looking so damned out of place in the Hampshire Mall — and in many an American mall as well.

Why?

When I was younger I used to get upset when I'd see Christmas wreaths being put up on shopping mall lamp posts a week before Thanksgiving. I was always looking for turkeys and Pilgrims and saw Santa instead.

"It's too early," I would whine to my parents.

With the recent marketing trend growing more popular, does this mean that I will be telling my kids to stop whining when they see St. Nick and his sleigh instead of bunnies for Easter? Instead of cupids and hearts for Valentine's Day?

The commercialization of the Christmas season has always been something that I've despised. It cheapens the real meaning of the holiday. It ruins the ambiance of the season, of giving and being together with family and friends.

It's Halloween. Today. Not Thanksgiving. Not November.

Masterful discourse of normalization

As a protester who was arrested several times last spring for demonstrating against Department of Defense-sponsored research, I found Darren Garnick's column, ("PSRU: Peacemakers, or tie-dyed thugs?" Oct. 25) to be remarkably successful in painting the PSRU with the brush of "hooliganism."

One can only wonder if Garnick has been browsing the East German and Chinese state presses. But of course, Western journalists have long been known for imitating their counterparts in the East. Those of you who protested budget cuts at the Statehouse saw that in the chiding editorial of the Boston Globe.

A brief review of the inaccuracies and false innuendos in Garnick's masterful discourse of normalization could be edifying:

●Garnick claims that the protesters (the "PSRU" was an umbrella for student activists, not an organization) talked "at" the administration, not "with" them. But the administration never sent anyone except lower-level bureaucrats for dialogue, then insisted that the protesters end their occupation as a condition for further dialogue. When protesters participated in public debates, I felt that we displayed a great deal of intelligence and concern.

●"The PSRU. . .is not a group of dissenters modeled after Andre Sahkarov. They are shameless, self-promoting, imbeciles . . ." I suppose I am guilty of self-promotion, but I often experience shame. I feel shame right now for Garnick's need for models (is he a physicist or something?) and his need to feel intellectually superior.

●His characterization of the hunger strike is demeaning and inaccurate. On the 7th day the hunger-strikers negotiated an agreeable settlement with Chancellor Duffey, or so they thought. After they ended their strike victoriously, Dean Vanin reneged on the agreement. Garnick's gratuitous "tofo-burger" remark reminds me of the tactics of the Rothman gang, whose chants often focused on taunting the hunger-strikers.

Garnick certainly is right to question the tactics of protesters. But if he shares their goals, then why devote so much spleen to castigating their styles? The only people who were actually injured due to last spring's protests, were the protesters themselves, at the hands of the University of Massachusetts and State police. Why have so many commentators ignored and made light of that fact? "Facists?". . . Maybe. "Foolish?" . . . Yes.

Has the state been consistent with the nation's ideals?

John O'Leary

Education is a wonderful thing. It is justifiably a top national priority, and an informed populace is the cornerstone of a healthy democracy. It is clear that recent reductions in state funding have deleteriously impacted the quality of education here at UMass. But the response these reductions have generated on campus has caused me to reflect on the desirability of state controlled higher education. I have chosen to use the term "state controlled" because it accurately describes the essence of the situation. Decisions at UMass are made by government functionaries such as Dukakis, Tsongas, Duffey, etc. . .Through a nexus of responsibilities, they control the education process at UMass in a manner similar to that in which Donald Trump controls Trump Enterprises.

Having the state control certain functions is not necessarily a bad thing. For example, the state is in the best position to administer and control a legal justice system, and it does a splendid job of collecting revenue through taxes. A lack of economic incentives, of course, do tend to make government institutions inefficient. To assure yourself of this, visit the Post Office, the Registry of Motor Vehicles, or the Soviet Union.

But it is not the inefficiencies in the state administration of UMass which most concerns me. Nor is it the fact that unfair competition for students (unfair because of tuition subsidies) has caused many private college to perish. Nor is it the injustice of the arbitrary redistribution of wealth which results in an automobile mechanic from Roslindale subsidizing the education of the child of wealthy lawyers from Dover.

The most alarming aspect of state controlled education is the fact that the state becomes the caretaker of ideas. The state has been given the medium through which it can influence the minds of the young.

Forget for a moment the specifics of the topic involved and consider whether the administration has taken a particular stance on a political question. Proof abounds:

The letter from Chancellor Duffey to the University Community which urged protest and advocacy on behalf of an idea! which he espouses, the plaintive sign which hangs in front of the Tower Library, the in-class rallies of Oct. 2nd, held by various faculty members, and the teachers who cancelled classes and accompanied students at the Oct. 18th demonstration.

Everyone has the right to hold and express political views, but some members of the administration and faculty at UMass have abused the power of their positions as public servants and compromised their integrity as educators by advancing a political agenda in which they hold a vested interest.

Ever mindful of the lessons of history, I urge you to critically consider events in this light. Decide for yourself, regardless of your opinion on the budget issue, if the actions of the state and its agents at UMass this fall have been consistent with the ideals on which this nation is founded.

John O'Leary is a UMass graduate student

". . .dry sober and at home with his wife."

The question of where was George, was first used by a bum senator, D-Mass, who cannot relate to the opening quotation.

After reading the article, "But where is George now?" (Oct. 24), I feel a response is required. I am amazed that the Collegian would allow an editorial to be printed which, by its content, shows that the author is uneducated and obviously biased. The above mentioned article has several misleading statements.

Meredith O'Brien first makes statements about Civil Rights, and how President Bush is not taking any action to stop the Supreme Court decisions on them. If O'Brien would have someone read her the U.S. Constitution, she would realize that an Amendment to the Constitution is required to overturn a Supreme Court ruling. Does "supreme law of the land" sound familiar?

The next attack on the President is about abortion and women's rights. O'Brien talks about "Republican cronies," and their efforts to change the party platform on abortion. Anyone who had any sense would realize, abortion is not a party issue, but an ideological issue. Common sense, what's that?

Two other uneducated statements were made in regards to China and Panama. The author criticizes the President's stance, but what is her recommendation for this situation, an armed attack? In regards to Panama, does the author suggest we subvert foreign governments because we don't like them? What war monger would suggest we use armed intervention?

I do credit the author on her statement about Hurricane Hugo. The reaction to this disaster was late, but nonetheless, it was there.

The final and most uneducated statement makes reference to "the rejection of the capital gains tax." Its rejection was made possible by mass numbers of Democrats realizing the negative aspect of the tax. If we are to blame President Bush for the capital gains reduction, he deserves great praise.

Thank you, President Bush for a job well done.

Will Gayle Long explain to my children why they cannot go onto college and make lives better for themselves?

Her piece on the Boston rally against budget cuts ("Rally in Boston: Not a Reincarnation of Kent State," Oct. 24) exemplifies the elitist pseudo-aristocratic narrow-mindedness that has allowed government and media alike to write off the needs and wishes of students and youth. Evidently, George Kevarian, Mike Dukakis, a slew of columnists and a host of other pencil-pushing pinheads cannot seem to understand how the budget cuts, a direct assault on the very future of many students, might insight rage.

Politicians bemoaned the lack of politeness on the part of a "minority" of demonstrators. It is interesting how this "minority" of several thousand students can be considered insignificant the moment they cease kowtow to incompetent and abusive political leadership. The fact that those behind the pencils cannot, whether they be politicians or tunnel-visioned columnists (or editors), identify with anger and hopelessness produced by the budget cuts, reveals their extreme incompetence.

The federal and state government proceeds, in an orderly and "civil" manner, to shatter the dreams and place obstacles in the paths of thousands in this state. All that can be said to those with power rather than sensitivity, is that it is too bad that students won't march like sheep into a stolen future.

It's too bad that certain people, a loud minority, cannot understand the rage felt when all that you have worked and hoped for is stolen. Mark my words, even though a minority may continue to "tsk, tsk" the sensitivities and values of students and their supporters, those misrepresented by government and slighted by the media, shall always resist. We need to — our future depends on it.

ARTS & LIVING

Questions and answers about question books

By DARREN GARNICK
Collegian Staff

Socrates was the first to effectively nurture the art of asking annoying questions. His work, however, was not appreciated by humorless Athenian leaders. The only way to shut Socrates up, they surmised, was to kill him. And kill him they did.

Socrates may be long dead, but the endless mental havoc he sparked still thrives. Questions are powerful, yet ambiguous tools. Extracting attitudes and information, questions can simultaneously badger and entertain their target.

Dr. Gregory Stock, author of The Book of Questions, is a blessing for Socrates fans. His hypothetical question packages for children and adults come at a time when people would rather interact with their radio headphones than each other. Our society is in dire need for conversation stimulants.

"These questions can be an avenue for individual growth," Stock writes in his book's introduction, "a tool for deepening relationships, a quick way to get to know a stranger, or merely a pleasant amusement."

Stock's questions force us to confront ourselves.

For $1,000,000 would you be willing to never again see or talk to your best friend?

"Absolutely not!" is my gut reaction.

However, after reading Stock's follow-up question, honesty kicks in.

If you were offered a much better job in another city and knew you would, over the years, drift away from your closest friend if you took it, would you go?

ART ATTACK

My career dictates where I plan to go after graduation. Although my intent is not to sacrifice my friendships . . . I honestly have no guarantees that they will survive.

According to Stock, the way a person reacts to a question (sarcasm, frustration, avoidance, embarrassment, seriousness) often says more than the answer itself.

With the help of Dr. Stock's questions, I now submit myself to public therapy. I invite any amateur psychologists out there to analyze my responses. Send any interpretations to me in care of the Collegian Arts Desk. A prize will be awarded for the most flattering evaluation.

If you were offered $100 to kiss someone you liked in front of your school class, would you do it?

No. Taking into consideration the "over-justification phenomenon" of the Cognitive Dissonance Theory, such a move would be foolhardy. If I am financially rewarded for a pleasurable activity — that is if my fun is manipulated by outside forces and is not performed for its own sake — that activity will no longer be enjoyable.

Do you like your name or would you rather have been named something else? If so, would you consider changing your name now?

Although "Darren" is a clutch name, I have been toying around with a legal switch to "Susan" for quite some time now.

At what age do you feel your active life will be over and you will be more an observer than a participant?

Twenty-one.

On a scale from one (awful) to ten (exceptional), how would you rate yourself as a lover? How confident are you of your answer and on what do you base it?.

Clearly, a ten. I base this rating solely on pure rumor.

If somehow you could save a thousand people from death by causing the complete eradication of a great work of literature, for example, Hamlet, would you do so?

Saving the life of a single goldfish would be enough justification for me to forever discard all of Shakespeare's work. What three personal qualities are so important to you that anyone you would consider as a mate would have to possess them?

1.) A deep appreciation for the animated arts (i.e. Saturday morning cartoons). 2.) The ability to read. 3.) A Pro-Zionist viewpoint.

In all seriousness though, Stock's questions provide an opportunity to discuss issues which usually don't surface in routine conversations. Whether the questions are dealt with in a humorous or serious slant is irrelevant, for the result is the same. Interpersonal communication flourishes under the Stock system. And interpersonal communication is the joy of our existence.

The socialist brags about politics and love

Billy Bragg/Exene Cervenka/Oyster Band
John M. Greene Hall
Sunday, Oct. 29

"As a musician, I'm pretty average. But I believe it's the content that's important. I know I don't hit all the notes, but the message gets across."

The words of Billy Bragg ring true. The self-proclaimed "loudmouth English folk punk singer" is no Jeff Beck on guitar, but his comically bent, "politically correct" socialist preachings and love songs never fall upon deaf ears.

Running onstage in an Exene Cervenka concert shirt, Bragg broke right into his anthem, "Help Save the Youth of America," into which he inserted the line, "Is Manuel Noriega an enemy or a friend of mine?"

After awhile, Bragg took on his persona as "Rambling Billy Bragg," and his playful yet po?ant anecdotes captured everyone's attention. Topics ranged from football and soccer to the support of the Irish Republican Army.

After ripping apart American football ("In England, we call it football because we play it with our feet. Yours is more like 'dressing-up-like-a-dickhead-ball.'"), Bragg went on a tirade defaming his least favorite person, English Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, for not divesting and for not supporting the common market. When he then broke into "Ideology," the crowd let out a resounding cheer during the first lines, "When one voice rules the nation, just because she's top of the pile/It doesn't mean her vision is the clearest."

"The Price I Pay," a song, Bragg told us, about "love in the capitalist system."

A new song, "Tank Park Salute," a moving ballad about his father that was inspired by the recent death of Democratic Socialists of America (DSA) founder Michael Harrington, offered the most touching moment of the evening.

There were some surprise fillers as well. He performed an angry yet sultry version of "I Heard it Through the Grapevine," and covered the Smiths' hit "Ask" (about "love and thermo-nuclear weapons"). For the encore, Bragg shared the stage with the Oyster Band, his friend and tourmate Wiggy, and pianist Cara Tivey. They performed a series of covers which included

Pearls and malaria

Halloween Bash featuring
The Malarians/Fifth Business
Pearl Street
Saturday, Oct. 29

Now I know what Mal Thursday and Slater Awn of the Malarians meant when they said in a recent interview that they were going to rock Pearl Street. This five-piece rocked the house and brought a good part of the audience to its feet dancing.

Lead vocalist Thursday was smiling before the show, noticeably worked up and ready to play a crowd that came specifically for them. And they weren't disappointed.

REVIEW

The Malarians started the night as promised, with an old favorite, "Hexon Blood Beat," a short guitar and drum led piece. It got the crowd dancing, but it did not set the path for what would be a much more vocally moving night. While people upstairs shook in costume to mindless club music, the crowd down below was obviously in for a concert treat.

Thursday, who had complained of a sore throat earlier in the week, shared some of the vocals with bass guitarist, Slater Awn. Bedecked in sunglasses, Awn sang strongly yet simply, with little embellishment in his finely honed voice. In his first vocal of the evening, "Astral Plane," his voice complemented the slightly less driven than usual song perfectly. And his voice managed to cut through the overpowering yet otherwise energetic drums of Steve Healey.

But the worked-up lead vocal Thursday was impressive. Introducing "Get Out of Dallas" with perhaps the most violent romp on a harmonica I have ever seen, the band and Thursday, for the first time in the night, took shape and got the house out of their chairs.

"Action Woman," with Awn's smooth voice, was particularly good. But the following piece, "Brightness," which he shared with Thursday, was bold and bracing. Peter McHugh on rhythm guitar and Mike Sewell on lead guitar accompanied Thursday's strong voice well but tended to envelope Awn's. Healey's drum solo introduction to "–1 Hit Song" will please drummer-wanna-be's everywhere.

Awn said earlier that the band's style is "killer sex rock." That sounds more like a title of a song than a style of rock, but it fits this band. They have been called a fun rock band, and that's what they are. They get the crowd happy and moving. But for a band that's been in it's present form only since last May, they are tight and professional.

The Malarians were in good company with the opening band, Fifth Business, which was as hard rocking as the Malarians. The four member band shares the vocals and have a more mainstream sound. However, they seem to suffer a bit from Malaria: an overwhelming drum beat which drowns out the vocals.

But it's worth whatever the cover is to hear "Steps in the Rain," "Miss You Bad," and their cover of "Gloria," which drew loud hoots.

The band, which contains some past and present UMass students, occasionally suffers from Mike Flood's excessively drawn out guitar work, still presented themselves as one of the few up and coming local bands that may have a future in music. The few smart people who showed up early enough to catch them were not disappointed.

the infamous "I Fought the Law," the Kinks' classic "Victoria," and Bob Dylan's "The Times They Are A-Changing." Somewhat unusual for a Billy Bragg show, the encore brought the crowd to their feet for an energetic dance fest. The highlight of the evening was "A New England," in which Bragg, after going off on an amusing tangent on the merits of the British word "prams" versus the American expression "baby carts," forgot the lyrics to the song, and ran off stage to find Wiggy to help him remember them. He followed this by running around on stage, impersonating a heavy metal star, and pulled off a few riffs from Deep Purple's "Smoke On the Water" (Yes, he's done it all before, but it's still damn funny.)

The mystical Exene Cervenka, formally of X, was the perfect choice for a Halloween show. Dressed in a wrinkled black dress, she fidgeted about distractedly on stage. Her wonderfully eerie songs dealt most often with death or Jesus; however, she threw in some country-influenced ditties as well, and ended with some crunching numbers reminiscent of her X days.

REVIEW

Englishmen The Oyster Band, opened the show with their traditional dance music. Their songs, littered with much of the political ideology that Bragg espouses, came complete with accordian and violin solos (they seem to be the trendy instruments these days), and was so much fun that the dancing masses demanded an encore.

Author speaks on AIDS, commences lecturer series

By THOMAS A. GEORGE
Collegian Correspondent

Last Thursday, University of Massachusetts professor Richard A. Goldsby took an in depth look into the tradgedy of AIDS, and the immune system that it defeats.

Goldsby, the latest recipient of the Chancellor's medal for distinguished service, kicked off the Distinguished Faculty Lecture Series with his lecture titled, "A Sense of Self: Recogniton in the Immune System".

Goldsby's most recent work has centered on extending hybridoma technology, which allows the immune system to work more effeciently. He concentrates his work on the immune system of large animals, particularly cattle.

Goldsby began his speech with a general layout of the immune system. "The immune system is a complex and interacting network, yet it is disarmingly simple, " he said.

Goldsby is the co-author of a new book, Thinking Aids, with Mary C. Bateson.

'Thinking AIDS was one of the greater intellectual endevours of my lifetime," said Goldsby.

"To the resource hungry world of micro-organisms, our bodies represent El Dorados of stores for growth and reproduction,'writes Goldsby in his book.

"Fortunately, we are protected from unchecked colonization by the immune system,"Goldsby said.

According to Goldsby, people are realizing the important function that the immune system plays in this age where AIDS is manifesting itself.

"A look at AIDS, a virus induced failure of the immune system, provides a sobering example of the importance of immunity, and a perspective on society's response to a new disease," said Goldsby.

Goldsby attacked the author of the "irresponsible" book, AIDS: The HIV myth. "It is very important that people recognize HIV as the cause[of the AIDS virus],"he said.

"I'm somewhat pessimistic about modifying human behaivor," Goldsby said. "We have told students again and again about barrier contraception. We needn't waste our time telling students not to have sex, we might as well tell them not to breathe."

When asked to estimate the number of AIDS cases in 50 years, Goldsby quoted a figure of 100,000 cases.

"Taking a worst case scenario, it could reach 20 to 30 million globally,"he said.

"AIDS is moving into areas such as the Phillipines and Thailand. The soldiers stationed in the Philipines and the 60,000 IV drug users in Thailand will bring AIDS in a major way," he said.

Between 1986 and 1988, funding for AIDS research has been increased by nearly $775 million, according to Goldsby.

"The amount we learn, and how fast we learn it is equal to the amount of money available for research," he said.

Goldsby equated the expenditure on health care to Stealth Units, an amount roughly equivalent to 500 million.

"AIDS research is equal to one and one third squadrons of stealth bombers, while all other health care expenditure is around one squadron," he said.

Goldsby reminded people that the financial burden of AIDS can be a severe problem.

"The cities will be hardest hit in the pocketbook. All will and should get together to help impacted areas."

Goldsby concluded his lecture with a strong message. " We must supply needles, and eliminate clandestine drug use through decriminalization. Barrier methods of contraception along with spermicide must be provided to ensure safety," he said. "We can't let social asethetics get in the way."

Students urge bus stop at Health Services

By WILLIAM FLEISHMAN
Collegian Staff

Improvements to the transportation system to the University of Massachusetts Health Services may soon occur, according to a UMass Transit official.

Since 1980, the Student Health Advisory Board, a liaison between health services and students, has collected thousands of signatures petitioning UMass to provide better tranportation to the facility, located in the Central Residential Area.

"We've been collecting signatures; students and professionals as well,"said Scott Aronson, co-chair of the board. "The major excuse the University had been giving us is that it would cost too much to redesign the roads [leading to Health Services]."

Alan Byam, operations manager for UMass Transit, said he has received petitions for a closer bus stop, but the tight turn in front of the Newman Center as well as the horseshoe-type turn in front of the facility makes the idea an impossibility.

"Our organization has since proposed other alternatives to solving the tranportation problem," Aronson said, adding, "One alternative would be to utilize the escort service on campus – making it act as a type of feeder system from the bus stop to Health Services."

A letter is now being drafted by board members, inviting UMass Transit officials to a meeting to discuss possible solutions.

The world of realities awaits in the garden

By WILLIAM J. GEORGIADES

The Torture Garden
Octave Mirbeau
Re/Search Publications

"You're obliged to pretend respect for people and institutions you think absurd. You live attached in a cowardly fashion to moral and social conventions you despise, condemn, and know lack all foundation. It is that permanent contradiction between your ideas and desires and all the dead formalities and vain pretenses of your civilization which makes you sad, troubled, unbalanced. In that intolerable conflict you lose all joy of life and all feeling of personality, because at every moment they suppress and restrain and check the free play of your powers. That's the poisoned and mortal wound of the civilised world."
— excert from Mirbeaus' "The Torture Garden."

Once described as "the most sickening work of art of the nineteenth century," The Torture Garden, newly published by Re/Search, received what is probably the single highest compliment any attempt at art can receive. It not only challenged the established order of things, it affected it.

The Torture Garden deals with the act of torture as an artistic process; the application of pain as being the activity of a creative soul. But this isn't what is so "sickening." The imaginative acts of violence that fill the pages, while certainly gruesome, graphic and affecting, are as nothing when compared to the themes that run throughout the book. The implications inherent in the narrative are a little close for comfort.

Still, the violence rivals the mind of De Sade, while avoiding his journalistic approach to expressing philosophical thoughts. There is a definite note of eroticism, even as we read of the possibilities rats pose to the anatomy.

This is, and was, nothing new. De Sade, Masoch, and later works, such as the Story of O, and even the works of Anne Rice (under a pen name) have long been fascinating fixtures for a society too afraid to actually act on it's collective wishes, expressing the theory that sexuality in the absense of fear and pain is akin to eating food without taste.

What's really disturbing is the fact that, although the book is set in China, over a hundred years ago, everything in it could be applied to today, as the quote leading this piece shows. Without launching into some ranting it must be obvious to even the most conservative (i.e. repressed) soul that civilized society is exactly as Mirbeau described it in 1899.

That you're only reading a book is a forgotten fact after a while. One cannot help but be affected. And in an age when good literature is supposed to be the flabby stunted mental growth of folk such as John Updike and his ilk, to actually be affected by the written word is a change, an almost violent change.

Written in a poetic, almost dreamlike way, the book softly draws one in, massaging the consciousness, so that the reader is accepting of most anything the writer has to say, within a few pages of the book. The work is graced by photographs (by Bobby Neel Adams) that accentuate the soothing viciousness of the prose, giving visions of some of the more intense scenes of the novel. The layout and design of the magazine is also excellent, providing the perfect backdrop for the words to caress and strike.

The woman of the novel is, by leaps and bounds, a stronger character than the man. She represents the unlimited potential of the world, of people and society as a whole to actually live out their desires rather than their thoughts, repressed by supposed moral obligations. The male character turns out to be a stunted person, truly indicative of the way society is, believing himself to be "worldly," and sharply discovering just how wrong he is. He discovers, with the reader, that there is a world that most could never conceive of, a world so extreme that it is completely outside of the realm we consider reality.

Taking the quote at the beginning of this piece as the truth that it undoubtedly is, one must accept that change must occur if anything is to occur. To accept this is to accept the horrors of The Torture Garden as just, in the eyes of life and in the eyes of all people who believe in it.

Re/Search publications is a magazine (for lack of a better description) that reprints classic works, such as The Torture Garden, as well as work on everything from industrial culture to tatooing to the punk movement to most anything that you always wanted to know more about, but could never find any good material on. Copies are available at Main St. Records in Northampton or by writing to them at Re/Search Publications, 20 Romlo St., Suite B., San Francisco, CA 94133.

Battle of the UMass bands

By JIM COHEN
Collegian Correspondent

Saturday, October 28, was the tenth annual Southwest Battle of the Bands in the Southside room in Hampden Building. Five local bands competed in the contest. According to Southwest Area Government, which sponsored the show, "bands are compensated by a great time and a colossal exposure." The winning group also gets top spot in Southwest Week concerts during the Spring.

One Eyed Jake were to open the show, however an injury to lead singer/bassist Bob Mullins forced organizers to reschedule them to play last.

Zen Arcade, billing themselves as a rock and funk band, began the show. They performed a smoking half hour set, opening with a Pat Travers cover. Their set included both original material, such as "Funk Thing in E minor," and covers like "Precious" from the Pretenders, which turned into a rocking jam session.

They were followed by the 60's improv group, Rainmaker, which performed a very inanimate set including "China Groove" by the Doobie Brothers and the Doors' "L.A.Woman." They were for the most part a capable band and they did some clever segues, but they lacked incredible stage presence. They had one more song to do when their time ran out, but the officials had to relent and let them play because the crowd wanted more.

Exit Rainmaker, enter progressive metal band, Kyruss, an energetic if not necessarily an innovative group. They proved their ability with a mostly original set which was made of songs like "Behind the Black" and "No Vision." The one cover they did was a metallized version of Led Zeppelin's "Whole Lotta Love." On hand to view Kyruss was the pre-fabricated metal crowd, which left when Kyruss came off the stage.

competition, but that ended Saturday in an upset to Rutgers.

The Reds have had to fight a slew of new personnel in the starting lineup, position changes, and injuries but have received exactly what they deserve: postseason.

"We've had a really nice season," UMass coach Jim Rudy said. "Our only goal was to get into the playoffs."

Rudy felt the team's strength of schedule weighed heavily with the NCAA's selecting committee. "Our schedule was rated in the top five," Rudy said. "We had something like 12 of 18 schools ranked in the top 20 when we played them and a third of our schedule made the playoffs, too."

UMass has a better draw compared to a team like Connecticut. For being the top-rated team in the New England region, the Lady Huskies have the unenviable honor of being placed in the same bracket as the team: North Carolina.

UConn will play at home against Hartford, the third-ranked team in the region, and the winner will have to play at Carolina. Oh, UNC has only won six of the seven championships since the tourney's inception in 1982, compiled an astonishing 164-5-7 record (.951), and owns the nation's longest unbeaten streak — 89 games spanning over four years.

In the other two brackets, William and Mary will play the winner of George Mason-North Carolina State and Santa Clara will face the winner of Cal-Santa Barbara and Wisconsin.

Playing the 16-4 Cavaliers in the first round might be a lot to handle, but assistant coach Lisa Gozley feels differently.

"Psychologically, I don't think we could have drawn a better team. Our girls knew we could have beaten [Virginia] and this game is going to be big payback."

UMass harriers cruise to fourth at New Englands

Smith, Corso, Livorsi, Davis pave the way as UMass outlasts PC

By JON REIDEL
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — The University of Massachusetts men's cross country team had a goal of finishing as high as fifth place at the New England Championships on Friday at Franklin Park in Boston.

They met that goal and then took it a step further with a surprising fourth place showing.

"I thought we could finish fifth," said coach Ken O'Brien. "But we had a tremendous day and ended up beating some quality teams."

Even without their number one and two runners, Providence College was still the pre-meet favorite. The Friars, however, ended up in fifth place, thus leaving room for the Minutemen to sneak into fourth.

The only upset bigger than UMass' was that of the University of Connecticut.

With Boston University and Boston College easily taking the top two spots with scores of 49 and 76, Northeastern was expected to be the next team in. Instead, the Huskies finished in a dismal sixth place, switching with where UConn was expected to finish.

UConn's score of 129 was enough for a comfortable win over UMass who ended up with 146.

Leading the UMass upset was senior Art Smith. Smith, who was running with the leaders until mile three of the five mile course, finished just about where he expected he thought — seventh place in a time of 26:00.

He was obviously more pleased with the team's overall finish than his own.

"I thought I had a shot at third or fourth," said Smith. "But I'm not upset over my finish. Our team did really well. We went a long way with what talent we have."

Running in his last New England Championship was senior Joe Livorsi. Also finishing just about where he expected in 25th place in a time of 26:46, this always competitive veteran had similar comments about the day as Smith.

"I was hoping for a top 25 finish," said Livorsi. "So I just made it. I'm just glad that the team did so well."

Finishing behind Livorsi in 37th place in a time of 27:08 was James Chute. Chute also finished just about where he was expected to.

Finishing out the Minutemen's scoring was promising Vermont freshman Mike Davis who powered his way to a 67th place finish in a time of 27:45.

Not far behind Davis were two other quality freshmen in Pat Ryan (74th; 27:51) and Matt Simon (82nd; 27:58).

So with Smith, Livorsi, and Chute doing what was expected of them and Davis running only a little ahead of schedule, what was the reason for the fourth place upset finish?

The answer is workhorse Jon Corso.

Corso's extremely rugged summer of training obviously payed dividends as he finished in a very impressive 12th place with a time of 26:14.

"I knew he was good," said Smith. "But he really shocked me."

Not only was O'Brien very pleased with Corso's finish, but with the teams ability to put together a performance that he knew they were capable of.

"Everyone hit the places we'd hoped for," said O'Brien. "But Jon just ran incredibly. As a team I just wanted seven guys to run really hard and I Knew that the score would take care of itself — and it did."

"I think we played very well against two very tough teams last week so if we can come out and play well and have some fun, make some things work for us, we should be able to win this game," Hixon said.

The one bright spot in Dartmouth's season has been junior forward Laurie Khelokian. Khelokian, with 12 goals this year, is just one shy of the Dartmouth school record. This will be her last chance of the year to get it.

But the Minutewomen cannot worry about records. The Atlantic 10 and NCAA tournaments are looming. UMass cannot afford to have a pitfall now.

"Every game from this point on becomes important," Hixon said. Its been important for the last three weeks of the season. petitive pressure. I'm really pleased with We've been playing under a lot of comour competitive mentality. If we can get some breaks here and there, put the ball in the back of the net, I think we're well on our way."

The Minutewomen will be on their way to New Jersey this weekend. But today may be the last time UMass plays in Amherst this year.

Oakland thinks dynasty but must pay

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — The rest of baseball hasn't been able to break up the Athletics. Now it's up to the A's management to keep them together.

Oakland's future looks as bright as its immediate past, with depth, age and farm-system talent on their side. But, yes, spring training is less than four months away and the World Series champions have some pressing business to take care of soon.

Will Rickey run to another team via free agency? Should the A's gamble on losing Dave Parker by rejecting his demand for a two-year contract? How much should be spent to keep the somewhat disgruntled Storm Davis in the rotation?

Those questions must be answered before all this dynasty talk can be taken seriously.

"I can see us winning a few more, maybe five or six more," World Series MVP Dave Stewart said after the A's concluded a four-game sweep of the San Francisco Giants Saturday night. "But you don't know. Egos become involved. If this team stays together and doesn't get a big ego, we can do anything."

"The only team that can beat the Oakland A's is the Oakland A's."

Intramural notice

Field hockey to wrap up regular season

Collegian photo by Susan Corneliussen

Junior sweeper Kerri Fagan and the University of Massachusetts field hockey team plays their last game today before heading to post season play.

May be last home game for Minutewomen

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

First the bad news: Today's game with Dartmouth College (2 p.m., Totman Field) may be the last time this year, that the University of Massachusetts field hockey team plays at home.

Now, the good news. Though it is the last regular season game of the year, it will not be the last game for UMass. Yesterday, the Minutewomen were given word that they will be the No. 2 seed in the Atlantic 10 tournament this coming weekend in New Brunswick, N.J. at Rutgers.

UMass, the defending Atlantic 10 champions will play the No. 3 seed, Temple, on Saturday at 1 p.m. with the No. 1 seed, Penn State playing Rutgers at 11 a.m. The finals are scheduled for Sunday at 1 p.m.

"Temple can be dangerous. I think Temple can be more dangerous than Rutgers on any given day," UMass coach Pam Hixon said. "Rutgers is playing at home and they have something to prove so I don't know. I'm just glad we don't have to play Penn State right away."

The Minutewomen, ranked No. 8 in the country, lost a 1-0 game to Penn State back on Oct. 1. UMass beat Temple, 2-0 on Oct. 7. The Minutewomen, 12-4-2, are 3-1 in the conference.

"This is going to be a war," Hixon said. "We've got two teams that are fairly solid as far as getting into the nationals. We've got two teams that are really on the fence. I think the competition is going to be fierce."

Which may be different than today's game with the Big Green. Dartmouth has hardly raised an eyebrow in New England at just 4-9-1 and 1-5 in the Ivy League.

The Big Green have no post season tourneys to look forward to but an unthinkable win over UMass would do serious damage to tge Minutewomen's national tourney hopes which at the present time seems quite secure as the top 12 teams in the nation will make the NCAA's tourney.

"We got to win, that's the bottom line," Hixon said. "We're not going to do anything different than we've been doing. I'd like to match our playing performance that we had against UConn and against Boston University."

The Minutewomen have not allowed a goal in four games. Goaltender Phillipa Scott's streak includes a 0-0 tie against Boston University and a 1-0 win over the University of Connecticut last Saturday.

Gaudette brings experience to playoffs

Junior forward leads women's soccer to Virginia

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Correspondent

Sunday afternoon, the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team will take its 11-3-4 record and Top 10 ranking into Virginia to do battle with the Cavaliers in the first round of the NCAA tournament. As the Minutewomen prepare for the contest, they must hope for a big game from their co-leading scorer, Sue Gaudette (nine goals, 10 assists).

Gaudette has been there before. She saw the Minutewomen's chance for a national championship just barely slip away two years ago when UMass fell in the final game of the NCAA tourney. Last year Gaudette was one of the many shocked at the Hill as UMass was upset by the University of Wisconsin in a quarterfinal game of the tourney. Gaudette knows when the Minutewomen take the field Sunday, anything can happen.

"Anything's possible, we have to have a great tournament, but if we play well, we can beat anyone," Gaudette said. As for Gaudette's personal aspirations, "I want to play my best and win the national championship."

Gaudette seems to be in good spirits and who can blame her. The sport management major has earned high praise from UMass coach Jim Rudy. Rudy credits Gaudette with being "skillful, exciting, and versatile," who has made the transition from defense to forward exceptionally well.

"Each position is different," Gaudette said. "I concentrate on what I'm doing at the specific time. You do what you need to do to improve the team."

"Gaudette stands out, she puts pride in what she does," Rudy said. "You're never wanting more effort from her. She typifies the UMass attitude. She plays hard, she trains hard, she's just a great person to have around."

Sue Gaudette is tied for the team lead in scoring for the University of Massachusetts women's soccer

Gaudette was recruited by former UMass coach Kalekeni Banda, who resigned two years ago to take a job at Amherst College. But the addition of Rudy has been a welcome one to her and the rest of her teammates.

"He is like a father figure," Gaudette said. "I have great respect for him. He presents a good atmosphere to work in and I wouldn't change a thing."

Gaudette smiles off the compliments of Rudy, by simply saying, "I've only done what he has expected," Gaudette said.

While playing soccer continues to be a priority to Gaudette, she realizes that some day day soon, she will no longer be playing the game that she excels at. "I'd like to be remembered by teammates as a good person who worked hard while on the field."

But Gaudette is not quite done with soccer, for now, the NCAA tournament is four days away, and for the future, "I would like to be the captain of next year's team." With a great smile and some impressive statistics, it is hard to imagine that Gaudette will not be the captain of next year's squad.

For the next week and hopefully more, Gaudette will concentrate on soccer, and then the focus turns to, "social life," a part of Gaudette's life that is, "slow during the season, because weekends are taken up by soccer."

Reds get tourney bid from NCAA

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

The Road to the Final Four has been paved and it seems like the University of Massachusetts women's soccer team has a rare chance to avenge one of the blemishes on their 11-3-4 record.

UMass received an invitation to the 12-team NCAA tournament late Sunday night after the team's 3-0 win over Brown in the regular season finale.

The Reds will play at the University of Virginia Sunday (1:30 p.m.) in the first round. The winner will go on to play at Colorado College the following weekend.

In the season opener for UMass, the Cavaliers handed the Reds one of their three losses in a 2-0 game. At that time, UMass was a young team and they still are, but the difference lies in maturity and experience.

The Reds started off on the wrong foot against UVa, defeated Colgate and were upset by Vermont. UMass then ripped off a 13-game unbeaten streak, including four ties against stiff, top 10

Football notebook

Minutemen stuck in the concrete at Northeastern

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

We interrupt our regular football notebook programming to bring you a special edition of Update from the local M*A*S*H unit.

Brought to you by "AstroConcrete," that wonderful substance that has been popping up all over the world and causing more injuries and headaches than it's worth.

OK, enough melodramatics. But this week's injury list was a particularly brutal one. Joining the cast of the bumped, bruised and generally banged up were three different University of Massachusetts starters from Saturday's game against Northeastern at lovely Parsons Field.

The most serious one appears to have sidelined center Al Pogarian for the season. Pogarian went down with a broken ankle and was operated on Sunday afternoon.

Also sidelined are linebacker Chris Tenkin, whose injured shoulder has him out of Saturday's game against Richmond, and fullback David Mitchell, who sprained an ankle late in the game and probably won't play Saturday, either.

Others ailing are defensive tackles Drew Comeau (shoulder), Chris Colclough (turf toe) and John Creamer (knee) and split end Lamar Newsome (foot). Ouch.

'Right now we're really struggling to compete physically with our opponents," UMass coach Jim Reid said.

A lot of substitutes filled in admirably Saturday, and are listed as starters against Richmond. But that depletes what little depth UMass had at certain positions, if there was any.

And will it be lined with peanut butter?: Quarterback Gary Wilkos, whose recurring shoulder injury took another pounding on Parsons Saturday, has a suggestion to replace AstroConcrete.

"This turf isn't beautiful stuff," Wilkos said. "When I get into the sports scene, I'm going to invent a marshmallow field. That'll be the new thing."

AstroFluff, anyone?

Aruba, Jamaica, ooh I'm gonna take ya . . .: At best guesstimate, the conditions at Parsons compared to the last visit UMass made there were . . . well, there's no comparison.

Those who braved that 1987 game (this keyboard operator included) and survived know that it was at least 70 degrees warmer this time around. Wind chill factors dropped to about five degrees below zero on that November trip to ArcticVille, while the mercury touched 78 degrees Saturday. Still, the '87 freeze was the hot topic on Game Day.

"It was brutal," nose guard Joe Cullen recalled.

"The ground was a little softer today," said linebacker George Karelas, only because two years ago it was like playing on solid ice. "But that was awful. Today was a good day to play."

A member of the Northeastern stats crew quipped, "We went inside to the hockey game to warm up."

Let's Make a Deal: Was it coincidence that Mitchell went down with his sprained ankle the play before his replacement, Duncan MacRae, bolted for a 73-yard game-clinching touchdown?

"We'd worked it out beforehand," Mitchell said.

"I had some family in the stands," said MacRae, who hails from nearby Shrewsbury.

For the record, Andre the Giant may have gone untouched through the hole that MacRae had.

"I knew there would be a hole. The linebacker was in motion and I thought he'd come out of it, but he didn't," MacRae said.

"It was the same play as my touchdown," said Mitchell, who scored from 13 yards out in the second quarter.

Around the YanCon: You knew it would come down to this. The Sports Illustrated jinx went up against the "Tubby Factor" Saturday, and Maine came up on the short end.

The Black Bears, unbeaten and barely challenged into the weekend, were featured in last week's SI, which was an immediate kiss of death. And given the fact that the strangest things seem to happen when Harold "Tubby" Raymond is patrolling the opposite sidelines, it comes as little surprise that Maine lost to Delaware, 35-28 in Newark, Del.

With that loss, the door is open for Villanova. The Wildcats spent the weekend eating spaghetti in Milan, Italy, and beat Rhode Island, 28-25 on the second-annual YC goodwill tour. The game was played in a stadium that wasn't big enough for football, so the goalposts were only two yards deep in the end zone.

Elsewhere, BU continues to ride a loop coaster, losing to New Hampshire 38-35. Richmond (1-7), which comes here this weekend, lost to Connecticut, 13-3 for its fourth straight setback.

Duke is a Muppet!

AP photos (Sorta)

The Duke of Muppets yuks it up with some of his hairy friends!

Presidential flop Michael Dukakis lied during his kooky 1988 campaign about his family heritage! Although the Massachusetts Governor claimed to be the son of immigrants, an INQUIRER investigation revealed he is the offspring of Muppets!

"I guess the gig is up," moaned Muppet creator Jim Henson. "It was fun while it lasted."

Henson confessed that the entire Dukakis candidacy was a joke. "I wanted to see how far I could go," he quipped. "The media criticized Michael for his stern facial expressions and his lack of emotion. Well, that's my fault. From a technical perspective, foam rubber is difficult to manipulate."

The political puppeteer added that the Duke was a composite creation inspired by the features of other Muppets. "The eyebrows," Henson howled, "are taken straight from Oscar the Grouch. His jaw structure was molded from the same cast as Ernie's and the hairstyle, is of course, Grover's."

"Quite frankly," sneered White House Chief of Staff John Sununu, "it doesn't surprise me. Someone's pulling the strings behind the Democratic party, and it sure as hell isn't the American voters."

Sununu also asserted charged that Mass. Lt. Gov. Evelyn Murphy was a Muppet too. "She has beady eyes," Sununu stammered, "little beady, button eyes."

Muppet Michael dismissed Sununu's allegations as "pure, unrefined Muppet-bashing."

Kitty the Frog, the Duke's wife, called attacks on her husband, "mean and not fair."

Meanwhile, INQUIRER reporters have seen Muppet Mike socializing with with the likes of Big Bird and The Count.

"Mike's a real good guy," said Big Bird. "He's my best friend since Snuffleupagus (you try to spell that) and Barkley. "You can go out and have a drink with Mike. He's a real hip dude once he loosens up his tie and lets his eyebrows down."

Said The Count, "I love the Duke. He'll keep me busy for years counting the money he's cut from higher education.

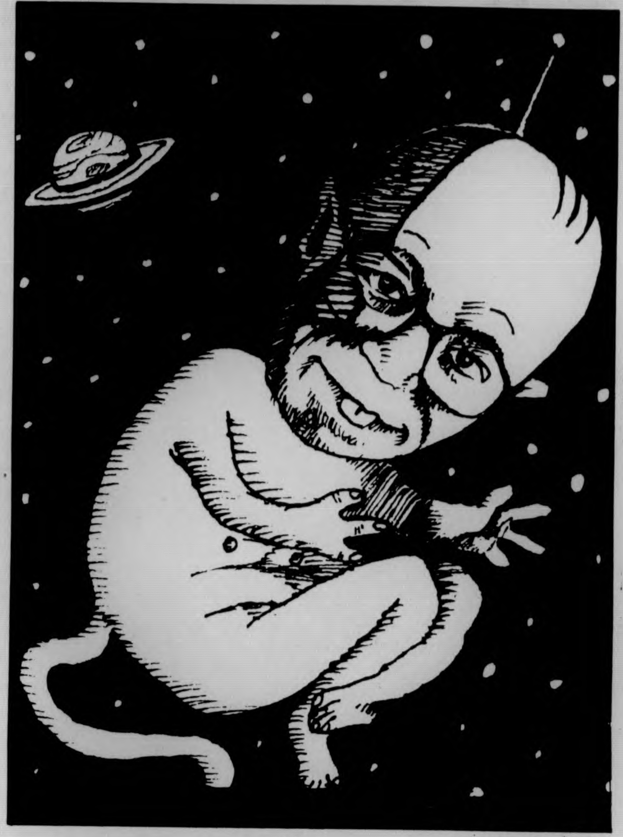
Duffey is space baby!



Inquirer fictitious art by Andre Busi

An artist's quasi-accurate depiction of Chancellor Joe Duffey as a baby! This may be inaccurate in that he may not have been born (hatched?) wearing glasses. But the rest is definitely pretty darn close!

Scientists in some small Eastern Bloc nation that you never heard of, have discovered that UMass Chancellor Joseph Duffey is indeed a space cadet.

Amid feet of rubble, relentless and tireless scientists uncovered a space ship that contained Duffey's Martian parents and Duffey's adoption papers, complete with antennae prints.

"We knew we were onto something special when when we saw the huge metal object sticking out of the ground," said Dr. Xzxqyj, through an interpreter. "But when we got inside . . . whoa nilly! We never expected to find adoption papers, just maybe some decomposing spacemen or something. Stuff like this should make me Time Man of the Year!"

It seems the Martian Mom and Dad were coming to Earth to get their son back. Evidence inside the ship contained a letter, part of which read, "Dearest Zlipred, we were wrong to let you go. You were born a Glerqt and you'll always be a Glerqt, no matter how successful you become on another planet."

Dr. Xzxqyj said, "It's a good thing these alien things write in English, or we would have never been able to translate the darned thing."

Really sneaky crafty undercover INQUIRER reporters have since found out that, upon his immigration to Earth, Spaceman Duffey underwent top secret plastic surgery to hide his scales, flippers and antennae. Dr. Maekme Muchmoni, performed the deed.

"He was a very good little patient," said the good doctor. "And I'm glad I could be part of such an Earth shattering event. Stuff like this should make me Time Man of the Year!"

When the INQUIRER asked Joseph Duffey about the situation, he said, "That's the first I've heard of it. It's all news to me. Besides, even if I were an alien, there's no laws that say aliens can't run universities."

Since then, the INQUIRER, the relentless defender of truth, has uncovered evidence that proves that Duffey is communicating with beings from a far off galaxy. During the usual sifting through garbage and peeping in windows, we discovered Duffey talking into a highly technologically advanced thing with a lot of knobs, buttons, lights and a big antenna.

Duffey claimed it was a short wave radio, but we know better.

Becky Hackles is going to have a tough time buying clothes at the Hampshire Mall!

Woman becomes a giant instantly!

A bizarre accident occurred at the Morrill Science center last Tuesday causing this poor woman to grow to nearly fifty feet in height as she passed by a lab experimenting in other dimensional energies.

Becky Hackles, a junior French major, said "It was the weirdest thing. I was just going to my class, Astronomy 100, last Friday in the big auditorium, when I saw these neat lights coming from inside this lab. So, like, I went inside to check it out. I didn't see anyone but I felt like there was this surge of energy going through my body. Then all of a sudden I began to grow."

The INQUIRER sought out the aid of Dr. Jane Jetson who is associated with the astrology department of WATS AMATTA U. Dr. Jetson believes "It may be that she came into contact with an energy that caused her body to release huge amounts of the growth hormone. It will be hard to tell until we can find Dr. Sterling."

Dr. Jetson was referring to Dr. Rod Sterling, the scientist who was leading the project. He was working for the private foundation called the United States Other Dimensional Studies and Neat Stuff Like That Team. (U.S.O.D.S.A.N.S.L.T.T.)

Dr. Sterling was last seen the day of the accident about two hours before it was scheduled to occur. A close associate who wished to remain anonymous said "He was acting a little strange, like he was tripping on some kind of hallucinogen, but other than that he seemed normal."

Authorities believe that he fled the laboratory after seeing the woman start to grow.

But the INQUIRER has discovered that Dr. Sterling actually was drawn into another dimension by the energies he unleashed during his experiment. Dr. Fred Flinstone, who is a former member of the U.S.O.D.S.A.N.S.L.T.T. told the INQUIRER "The experiments he was performing were insane. He didn't even begin to think about the possible consequences of his actions. He's probably trapped in some dimensional limbo. At least I hope so."

But what does this mean for poor Becky Hackles? "Well the administration has been so nice to me. They have arranged for me to use one of the towers in Southwest, Coolidge, to live in. They knocked out a bunch of floors so that I could be inside with out having to crouch over. They also decided to give me a 4.0 for this semester so that I don't have to worry about school, so now I just hang out all day and watch T.V."

Scientists from U.S.O.D.S.A.N.S.L.T.T. believe the effects are only temporary. Said their spokesperson Mr. Magoo "Imagine that she is a rechargeable battery, and she has been recharged. When it first occurred she was at full power, but now she is expending energy. We have already noticed about a three percent loss in height, which is roughly equivalent to about one and half feet."

Becky says she doesn't mind, "It has been kind of neat to be the center of attention for a while. Who said 'Everyone has fifteen minutes in the spotlight?' Well I have had a few days already."

—Pierre McLeonard

Tower Library abducted by aliens!

The Tower Library can not complain about lack of funding anymore, for there is no longer any Tower Library!

Late last night, on the ball INQUIRER photographers managed to snap the exclusive front page photo of the heralded Tower Library being beamed up by aliens.

The aliens left behind a message saying they would return the library after they had read its contents to see if there is any intelligent life on our planet, and after they fixed all the loose bricks. They estimate the reading to take five hours, but repair work to take upwards of twenty years.

The aliens also left behind the library's back issues of the Collegian, stating the paper was of no value whatsoever.

Reaction to the library-napping was mixed. Gov. Mike Dukakis was so excited he peed his pants. "Without a library, I can really cut their budget!"

Ina Haze, an undeclared senior asked, "What library?"

Many first year students reported missing the library because they use it as a landmark to find their classes. "I can't find any of the buildings anymore," reported I.M. Lost.

For the time being, students who actually did use the Tower Library have been asked to go to the Amherst College Library. However, all men must wear sweaters, and the women must wear flowery skirts.

Crackpot scientists who make their living by selling fantastic stories such as this to us, have informed the INQUIRER that UMass has the distinction of being the first university to have its library beamed up by aliens, but this may not be an isolated case.

Dr. Quackers stated, "Who knows how many libraries they'll want? The best thing to do is to stake down all the libraries and make sure nobody goes in any. You never know when those spacey little devils could strike again."

Out of work librarians have taken jobs at the Collegian filing hate mail for the various columnists and editors. "I've never worked this hard in my life," said one librarian. "Barry Manilow doesn't get this much hate mail!"

— HAROLD KAUFPERSON

Stones to Roll in Hatch!

Stating that, "I've always wanted to go to college," Mick Jagger told the INQUIRER that the Rolling Stones will be playing a free concert at UMass in the Hatch.

"I've always had a soft spot for the speedie burgers there," said Mick.

While lying down for his daily blood transfusion, a sedate Keith Richards said, "We thought this could be our way of giving something back to our fans. I mean, we're a bar band. I was getting sick of playing in these huge stadiums where nobody could see us and we could just fart and walk offstage and the whole crowd would go bloody nuts."

"Right, we're not in this for the money you know. We only did those commercials because we happen to truly like Budweiser," said Jagger.

Only bassist Bill Wyman was against putting on the show because he feared his 18 year-old wife would not be able to get in. But he okayed it when the Hatch told him she could stand upfront, in the under 21 section.

"The Hatch has been real cooperative," said Mick. "It's just too bad our stage is bigger than the room, because we really would have liked to have brought it."

The Hatch has been very cooperative, and with good reason. "This is the biggest event we've had here since Comedy Night," said Hatch spokesman H. Ratt. "We've really pulled out all the stops. We checked the sound system, fixed the broken stage lights, and even rented a porta-potty in case the crowd gets too big. This place holds 200 people you know, so we think we might get a sell-out."

Right now the gig is scheduled for November 21, but that may change. "We may have New Horizon booked for that night, and they're a good draw," said Ratt. "Since the Stones have never played here before, we can't be sure they'd attract a large audience, so I'd rather have New Horizon."

Gov. Michael Dukakis is very upset about the whole situation. "You guys are constantly bitching about the school not having enough money. You're always whining, gimme more, gimme more. Then you get a band like these Rolling Rocks and you don't even charge people!"

Siamese triplets at UMass!

The Commuter Area Government recently revealed why Governing Board members (and senators) Robb Smith, Ted Chambers and Brian-James Crawford always hang around together—they're Siamese triplets!

"Yes, it's true, those guys are attached at the brain," CAG president Clarinda Rose-Turner sighed. She said she had only been informed about the connection last week!

Paul DelGallo, a fellow member of the governing board, was also surprised about the revelation. "It's really shocking to think of these guys as actually having a brain," he said.

"Yeah, well, let's see if they know how to actually use one of those things," W. Matthew Whiting, editor-in-chief of the Minuteman, said.

Whiting may have a point. According to Dr. Ihave A. Headache of Health Services, the boys' collective brain is only the size of a squirrel's brain! "How do they manage to function?"

Simple, said Chambers, as his co-triplets sank into a virtual coma. "We divide the work. I do the drooling, Robb grunts all the time and Brian just stares at you."

"Shut up, Ted," the effusive Robb said.

Brian said their condition has had a negative effect on his social life. "Women avoid me because of these guys hanging around making wisecracks," he said.

"Speak for yourself, Crawford," Robb said. "I pick up a lot of women this way."

"I don't have a problem either," Ted said. "Maybe it's just because you're too UGLY!"

Inquirer photo By Joel Solomon

Robb Smith, Ted Chambers and B.J. Crawford. Proof that three heads just aren't better than one!

They then started laughing, and Chambers actually started foaming at the mouth!

Attorney General Robert Fadel said he was "really pissed" when he found out about the triplets.

"They would do this to keep co-senators in the Student Government Association," he said.

Relatives of other members of the loosely-defined Progressive Coalition said they were skeptical of the triplets.

"It's a power grab," they said.

Seriously, what do these guys do when only one of them has a hot date? "We list reasons why the woman should not be dating him," Brian-James said.

"Tell me about it," Robb growled. "Crawford's done that to me at least twice in the past month!"

"Yeah, but remember the time we did it to him?" Teddy giggled. "It took at least six hours to list everything that was wrong with him."

"The woman left after a half-hour of your list," BJ glowered.

OK, so what's happened to the boys' mother? A unidentifiable source told the ENQUIRER she is in hiding in Lee Atwater's house!

"She's a registered Republican who's embarrassed by their liberal tactics, so she won't talk to them."

Robb said that while he had the impression their mother was actress Jane Fonda, he really didn't care.

"If you're embarrassed by your own kids, who cares?" he said.

"I blame Crawford for this," Teddy Bear Chambers said.

"It's always something!"

Eric Nakajima, a respected member of the University community, has been seen prancing around his office in a big fuzzy wig!

Close sources to Mr. Nakajima said that he has been buckling under the pressure of his position. "He constantly is trying to make a point by saying 'Like my fatha always used to say. . .'"

He seems to be adopting the personality and characteristics of Roseanne Roseannadanna, the famous fictional character portrayed by the late Gilda Radner on Saturday Night Live.

The situation has been deemed serious by his aides who have begun to take up the slack, and limit the number of public appearances he makes.

Dr. Elmer J. Fudd, a Doctor of psychology at Wats AMATTA U., was contacted by the INQUIRER, for his expert opinion.

He believes that, "It sounds like he is having a schizophrenic comic attack. It is quite common with people of public office. You probably remeber that President Reagan thought he was actually a Conehead from France. He would invite the Joint Chiefs of Staff and Don Regan to 'consume some mass quantities' with him."

The INQUIRER was able to secretly observe Mr. Nakajima during a committee meeting, in which the budget cuts were discussed. He said repeatedly:

"It's always something. If it's not one thing it's another. If it not budget cuts then it's dental floss. You know I hate it when you get some stuck in between two teeth, and you have to pull at it and pull at it. Then when you actually get it out there's a big chunk of that stuff on it, and it's got blood on it too, because you haven't flossed in months!"

"Eric, that is disgusting!" said Chancellor Duffey.

"Oh SORRY, JOE!" he would respond.

This problem may be minor now, but studies show that if not checked, the problem could snowball. Mr. Nakajima could well end up in a mental rehabilatation and retraining center.

Other campus officials are irate that this has been allowed to go on so long.

Speaker of the Student Senate, John Dunlap, said "I think this has become a much more serious problem, and so I have decided to form a committee to decide whether or not we should allow Eric to continue in his capacity as Student Trustee."

Attorney General Robert Fadel added, "The guy has obviously gone bonkers. I should be the acting Trustee."

Supporters of Mr. Nakajima came to his defense. Robb Smith, a commuter area senator, said, "It is just a minor problem. He has these times when he's not himself. It isn't serious. It's not like he isn't doing a good job."

Brian-James Crawford, another commuter senator, said, "Eric is fine. He has to let steam off some how. This is just his little eccentricity."

This bizarre behaivor has boggled the minds of many, but most hope that eventually he will get well, or at least find a character of whom he can do a decent impression.

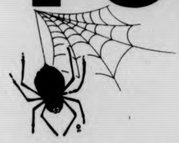
Your Horrorscope

By I. Lye



PISCES (FEBRUARY 19 - MARCH 20): Your mate is most likely not telling that they have lost their job, wallet, and mind. This should not upset you because you were probably about to break it off with the person anyway. Take the plunge, dump your mate and go to some tacky single's bar to find your dream mate, (It's the one under the table). Your stocks will fall drastically on the market even if you sell the ones you have now so find rich new mate.

CANCER (JUNE 22 - JULY 22): Moodiness causes your friends to avoid you at all costs. Your mate is thinking that you actually have been taken over by a body snatcher. Your mate is right which throws you into the depths of an identity crisis, are you alien or human after all? Science is no help but spirituality will solve your problems. Commit a felony and get sentenced to the same prison as Jim Bakker, so you can hear and follow his teachings.

AQUARIUS (JANUARY 20 - FEBRUARY 18): Solutions for personal problems can be found at work by developing intimate relationships with co-workers and employers. Use leverage to get foothold to better position. This will solve economic woes which you incurred by maxing out every credit card you have. A stranger will annoy you this week also, tell the stranger to kiss off.

SCORPIO (OCTOBER 23 - NOVEMBER 21): Crankiness will lead you to decide not to get up this month. This is a good idea because your life is in shambles. You have been convicted of drug dealing, your mother has thrown you out of the house, and your special someone turned out to be the NARC that squealed on you. Your cell mate tries to cheer you up, but is a Gemini and can't decide how to. Next month take up aerobics where you meet a great spiritual leader and his followers. Join them, you got a six year sentence and have nothing better to do. Drink lots of liquids.

ARIES (MARCH 21 - APRIL19): Anger and frustration will definitely be the motivating factors for you to quit your job and run off to a foreign country to find the true meaning of the universe. Of course most people know the answer is "44", but since you are so stubborn we will just have to wait the eight years for you to get back. When flying remember: Fly Quantas.

LIBRA (SEPTEMBER 23 - OCTOBER 22): Everything is out of balance at the momnent. Don't worry. It is just the stars letting you get a taste of what regular people go through every day of their lives. Be happy it will end at 3:46 p.m., Thursday. In the mean time don't try to do anything, lie in bed and enjoy the misery. Call other Libras, they're miserable, too. Come Friday, the simple life returns, and you will get to be the balanced person you think you are. You will annoy someone this week, but don't feel bad. That person never liked you anyway.

GEMINI (MAY 21 - JUNE 21): You are as always at odds with yourself and have trouble making decisions. You are so confused that you think you ought to reconsider having read this. Your life is at odds with yourself, you are working two jobs which you hate and are now thinking about quitting both in favor of becoming a psychologist. Go for it!

SAGITTARIUS (NOVEMBER 22 - DECEMBER 21): A sudden death in the family occurs far away and angers your sense of justice. You are going to start a hunt for the killer of your departed relative, who you met once at age five at one of those family gatherings everyone hates. Your search will lead you to discover that it is a local politician who caused the untimely demise of this loved one. You will destroy this person's political career by proving that they once used a forged I.D. to purchase alcohol. Andy Warhol contacts you in dreams to give you clues, but you'll only remember it for 15 minutes.

VIRGO (AUGUST 23 - SEPTEMBER 22): Once again you have attempted to get involved with someone and your casual advances have been mistaken for friendship. If you really want to get intimate with someone it is time for more obvious tactics. Invite the special someone for weekend in the Pokinoes, rent a cheesey tacky cabin with fake pink bear skin rug on the floor, a vibro-matic heart shaped bed, and mirrored ceilings. If that special someone doesn't take the hint they aren't worth the effort, so strand them in the Pokinoes.

TAURUS (APRIL 20 - MAY 20): Your easy temper will lead you to rash decision which will eventually prove to you that the way you lead your life is not to your liking. So skip all of this, quit school and get a real job, you make money, not just spend it. You have your own apartment, not one with 8 people in 3 bedrooms. You will also meet the mate of your dreams, and stop dating people you find obnoxious. Wear unmatching socks.

CAPRICORN (DECEMBER 21 — JANUARY 19): Christmas comes early for you when you receive a gift from Vacu-Phlegm industries. But to take advantage of this wonderful gift you will end up buying a pig ranch. This of course will lead to an enormous amount of debts, and put you into the poor house. Luckily there you will meet someone who has a great shoe collection and billions of stolen dollars. Imelda rings a bell. P.S. get a haircut!

LEO (JULY 23 - AUGUST 22): Pleasure is yours only after you have had a long talk with your accountant to find some more tax loopholes to keep your dummy corporation from becoming known. Keep in mind that the IRS is also having to cut back and is probably doing so on its corporate investigators, so hide lots of money in the dummy corporation. You at present have no love interests but soon a person will come into your life and suck most of your money out of you, but you will be madly in love and end up in jail for debts. Turkeys will play a role in your sentence.

Tax package delayed; UMass still lobbying

By SARAH DEMASTER
Collegian Staff

House Speaker George Keverian's decision Monday to delay a proposed $855-million-a-year tax package dampened enthusiasm but the University of Massachusetts' administration vowed to continue its lobbying efforts, said Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Dennis Madson in a meeting yesterday.

Keverian's package would have first raised money for the state through taxes and then have introduced a $100 million savings plan, but now Keverian, D-Everett, said he is supporting a package that would first look at areas to cut.

"One of the rallying cries that unifies us is 'no more cuts, enough is enough,'" Madson said. "We need to keep saying that."

He said although the recent student rally at the Statehouse "showed political muscle," phone calls and letters to legislators are an effective mode of attack as well.

"Two dozen phone calls is a landslide of support," he said.

He added that students' votes are important as well, and mentioned that non-traditional students and MASSPIRG will be co-sponsoring a voter registration drive Nov. 14 through Nov. 16.

Rep. Stan Rosenburg, D-Amherst, in a phone interview last night, said he agreed with Madson about the influential role students can play in stopping the proposal for more cuts.

"It is absolutely critical that in the next few days, any student who lives in the district of a member of the House Ways and Means Committee phone them," he said. "They need to hear from a significant number of people."

Rosenburg said he and other legislators are trying to persuade the House Ways and Means Committee to pull the $100 million savings plan before it reaches the House floor sometime next week.

"We could end up with a vote for a savings package, and end up with cuts," he said.

Madson said further cuts could result in a $300 fee increase for UMass students next year, or the lay-offs of over 150 faculty and staff.

Anthropology professor and president of the Massachusetts Society for professors John Cole, also in attendance, said administration, students and faculty need to tell legislators:

"We will support them to get re-elected if they support us."

Associate Chancellor James Leheny, who also attended the meeting, said the original tax package would "not only bail us out, but it would provide sufficient support for next year."

However, Leheny said this plan also includes $100 million in cuts, which could mean the elimination of the Board of

Petitions propose budget cures

By BETH O'TOOLE

Advocates of tax reform collected signatures for two different petitions at the University of Massachusetts yesterday as part of an effort to balance the state's budget.

The petitions, which aim to relieve some of the tax burden from the Commonwealth's underpriviledged, were distributed by staffers at separate tables in the Campus Center's concourse.

"We looked at the budget crisis (in Massachusetts) and we came to UMass because it is hard hit," said one of the staffers, Irwin Spigelman, a member of Citizens for Fair Taxes, an Amherst based organization. "We think we will get

UMass student enters Northampton mayoral race

By NATHAN KRYSTALL
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts student Rob Skelton announced his candidacy for mayor of Northampton yesterday, one week before the election.

Skelton, a senior who is double majoring in journalism and music, said he decided to be a write-in candidate for mayor to offer an alternative choice and vision to voters.

"I'm seeking the true protest vote. The current mayor, David Muscante, has been in office for 10 years, and his only challenger is Michael Ahearn," said Skelton, who is taking this semester off from the University.

He said both Ahearn, the city council president, and Muscante are "pro-status quo" politicians.

"Ahearn is a shadow of the mayor, he's nothing different," said Skelton, a Northampton resident since 1983. "You buy one, you buy the other.

"They're both for economic growth, but I think they give short shrift to the consequences of that growth," he said.

Skelton said these consequences include gentrification — richer people displacing poorer people from their homes — and environmental pollution, Skelton said, adding that other pertinent issues are education and fire and police protection.

Neither Muscante nor Ahearn could be reached for comment yesterday.

Skelton said that although he has no specific platform for his campaign, he represents people, like himself, who are politically and economically disenfranchised.

"A lot of people in Northampton are trapped in a cycle of poverty," he said.

"My campaign is a visceral campaign stemming from a gut feeling of alienation," he said.

A fact sheet distributed by Skelton lists his political affiliation as independent.

"The democrats and republicans no longer deserve the full support of the people," the sheet said. "The two party system does injustice to the breadth of political opinion."

The sheet also said Skelton is opposed to homelessness and government overregulation in private lives, and in favor of converting the Northampton state hospital into affordable housing.

Skelton said there will be a rally in support of his candidacy outside the city hall in Northampton at 2 p.m. Friday.

The mayoral election is scheduled for Nov. 7.

FASTER THAN A SPEEDING BULLET? — Traffic cruises on Commonwealth Avenue yesterday afternoon.

Minimum wage to be hiked to $4.25

WASHINGTON (AP) — The White House and congressional leaders today agreed to raise the minimum wage to $4.25 an hour by April 1991, ending a lengthy political stalemate and clearing the way for the first boost in the base wage since 1981.

Both sides made significant concessions to reach the deal, which for the first time would create a sub-minimum wage for teenagers with little or no job experience.

The compromise was struck between White House Chief of Staff John Sununu and House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash. Other lawmakers who have in the past been involved in the issue agreed to it, although some complained of being kept out of the discussions.

One last language problem was being worked out, but all sides said the compromise measure would be drafted today and put to a House vote Wednesday. Senate approval likely would follow rapidly.

"No side will get the victory for this," said Rep. Augustus Hawkins, D-Calif., chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee. Hawkins, the House author of a $4.55 minimum-wage bill President Bush vetoed earlier this year, said he was not involved in the talks that led to the deal.

Rep. Austin Murphy, D-Pa., author of the latest Democratic proposal, said he would reluctantly support the compromise.

"I think we could have done a little better if we'd held their feet to the fire," he said.

The deal was reached even as Bush said at a morning news conference he would again veto the Democratic bill if it was not changed to meet his standards.

Correction

Due to editing errors, a story in yesterday's Collegian on a student volunteer placement program had several inaccuracies.

A paragraph in the story should have read: "According to Britt Altschuler, VIBES coordinator, there are three general reasons students do not become involved with volunteering — not having time, not knowing how to start, and a lack of confidence in their abilities."

The Collegian regrets any confusion the errors may have caused.

AT TASC, JUST ABOUT ANYTHING IS POSSIBLE

Over and over again, the mind has proved that anything is possible. Talented people with vision have taken ideas, explored them, and extended their applications beyond anyone's dreams.

At TASC, we seek new graduates who share these goals, who can learn to solve complex systems problems with technical know-how complemented by imaginative approaches to understanding and using scientific and business systems.

Here, top-notch analysts provide government, industry and commerce with practical answers to real-world systems questions. It happens in an environment where imagination is uncluttered by conventional wisdom, and where creativity is encouraged, not merely tolerated. The TASC environment is conducive to thought, achievement and professional growth. We use state-of-the-art analytic techniques and the latest in computer hardware and software. Small, multi-disciplinary teams foster a true exchange of ideas. Above all, we provide the freedom to create, to visualize, develop, test and implement ideas original to our technologies.

TASC offers endless possibilities to those ready to expand the potential of their analytic capabilities and ready to make real changes in the worlds of science and business. If you can meet our standards and want to know more about a company where just about anything is possi[illegible], please see our campus representative on November 8th.

Areas in which TASC has become a leader include, but are not limited to, the following:

- Artificial Intelligence
- Economic & Management Sciences
- Integrated Logistics Support
- Physical & Mapping Sciences
- Signal Processing
- Embedded Computer Systems
- Guidance & Control
- Image Processing
- Information Sciences
- Navigation Systems
- Sensor Technology
- Commercial Information Systems

TASC's professional opportunities exist in Reading, MA, Reston, VA, Arlington, VA, Dayton, OH, and other locations throughout the country. If you are unable to see our campus representative on 11/8, and are interested in any of our locations, please write to Steven C. Cyr at TASC, 55 Walkers Brook Drive, Reading, MA 01867.

Umina lashes out at 'patronage'

GOP gubernatorial hopeful vows to trim state payroll

By RONALD J. AGRELLA
Collegian Correspondent

Len Umina, republican candidate for governor of Massachusetts, said last night that the government can solve its financial problems and become more efficient by stopping the practice of patronage.

In addressing his solutions to the problems created by the state's current fiscal crises, Umina said patronage is the act of giving government jobs to people who have done political favors, thereby burdening the government payroll and causing overtaxation.

"The mismanagement of government is causing waste everywhere, including education," said Umina. "Cuts are being made where they hurt the most. People can't afford to pay any more taxes."

Umina graduated from the University of Massachusetts in 1974 with a degree in electrical engineering. He currently resides in Marlboro with his wife and six children.

Umina would like to make government more efficient and accessible by computerizing it as many businesses do.

"The computerization of state government would make it more open to the public so they can call in and have access to state government," said Umina.

By making government more efficient with computers and removing patronage-created jobs, the state could solve its financial problems, even creating a surplus of revenue that would mean lower taxes, according to Umina.

"I'm the only candidate that says not only will there be no tax increase, but there will be a tax decrease," said Umina. "By getting government under control, taxes will be lowered."

He said that he is against abortion except in cases of rape or incest, and said he disagreed with President George Bush's recent veto which blocked federally funded abortions in these instances. Umina also supports the death penalty for convicted murders, and said he believes it should apply to all murderers, not just those who kill policemen. He added that people should be cautious in its use.

According to Umina, education and jobs are the best way to stop drug abuse and crime in the state. He disagrees with Boston Mayor Ray Flynn's policy of random police searches of suspected gang members, alleging that it is a violation of the First Amendment.

"The answer is to decrease the desire for drugs," said Umina. "We need to give people economic opportunity. This will relieve the problem. Education is the answer to crime and drugs."

Computer audit to help students choose classes

By MORGAN BITTON
Collegian Correspondent

A new computer system that provides students with a list of their major requirements and their general education requirements is slated to be in use at the University of Massachusetts next semester.

The Computerized Degree Audit, which is being experimentally used on a pilot group of students, is similar to a transcript.

It shows students all the classes they have taken, with the grades received and degree requirements satisfied.

Requirements that have not yet been met are also noted.

The audits, designed to aid students in choosing their classes, will be mailed out two weeks prior to the pre-registration period each semester.

One of the new system's goals is to decrease the number of students withheld from graduation because they were unaware of unfulfilled requirements, said associate registrar Cecilia Trachy, who is helping to coordinate the project.

The pilot group consists of 650 students, randomly selected, from the class of 1990. Trachy said pilot students will receive their audit in the mail this week, a letter explaining the program and a questionnaire to be used in improving the system for next semester.

Members of the project team will meet with students who received audits to answer any questions or discuss any problems.

For the past two years the project team, consisting of members of the Registrar's Office and Data Processing Office, has been working on the system, Trachy said.

The team's efforts have included coding all University majors, minors and general education requirements, she said.

They have included exercise science, management, nursing, computer systems and electrical engineering, sociology, history, math, and veterinary and animal sciences majors in the pilot, she said.

The audits ease registration by eliminating the need to count courses and requirements before picking classes, she said.

The audits enable academic advisors to spend more time adivising students on career goals and post-graduation plans, and less time instructing students on courses, credits, and degree requirements, Trachy said.

First-year student Debra Rivera said she thinks the audits are a "great idea." "Checking my requirements is a problem and confusing," she said.

Senate debates time use

Crawford urges peers to distribute petitions

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

Sen. Brian Crawford said he plans to forward a motion to adjourn tonight's Undergraduate Student Senate meeting in an effort to get fellow senators to canvass a petition aimed at reforming education in the Commonwealth.

Instead of the senate spending the three hours in session, Crawford (Commuter) said he thinks the time would be better spent distributing the petition, which is a broad plan to establish new standards in public education.

However, Student Attorney General Robert Fadel said he is in opposition to Crawford's planned motion.

"Why should we use the one night we have for the senate when they could pass the petition around the other six nights?" Fadel said.

If Crawford's motion fails, the first item on the agenda is scheduled to be a motion following up on last week's decision to continue to allow co-senators. The motion would insure that each co-senator meets the individual requirements for SGA membership, as stated in the SGA Consitution, before their names are allowed on the ballot.

The next proposal would create a committee to act as a public relations group for the SGA. The SGA's by-laws already provide for such a committee, and one of the duties of the committee would be advertising of future elections.

Celebrating Halloween in the Student Government Association office, a group of workers from the Student Activities Office dressed in 60s garb and held a mock protest in the Treasurers office by holding Halloween signs. Among demands being made were more SGA coffee hours and the end of Roberts Rules of Order (the text used by the SGA in deciding protocol). According to Fran Hanafee, the SGA secretary, the group sang songs and John Dunlap participated in the activities.

Police chief says that half of arrests are related to alcohol

By TARA L. SMITH
Collegian Staff

Amherst Police Chief Donald N. Maia told students in a recent civility week forum that more than half of the departments' arrests are alcohol related, and that raising the drinking age to 21 has helped save lives.

In a forum titled, "What Public Safety Has Been Doing to Ensure a Safe, Civil Campus," Maia said that more than half of his arrests are alcohol related. He said about 75 percent of UMass students are minors.

"The University of Massachusetts is a great institution but there's a small minority that scars its reputation," he said.

When the legal drinking age was 18, it was "like heaven in Amherst," he said.

Maia said the legal drinking age of 18 had positive and negative aspects. He said the lower age limit made his job a lot easier because students could just walk into a bar and have a drink, instead of buying a case and carrying it back to the dormitories.

However, Maia agreed that changing the drinking age to 21 was a good decision. "There were a lot of accidents with young people dying," said Maia. "There were 14 deaths in one 13-month period." He added, "The new legislation saved a lot of lives."

Jack Luippold, of the UMass Police Department, said he agreed with Maia that, "statistics reflect positively on what I consider a good law."

Maia said, "Kegs are a big problem. If kegs were outlawed it would be a lot safer.

Library changes closing time to midnight

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The tower library, which has been closing at 11 p.m. Sunday through Thursday, will be open until midnight on those days beginning Sunday.

Richard Talbot, the director of libraries, said after staying open until midnight in past years, the decision to close at 11 p.m. was made at the start of this semester because of questions about meeting student payroll. During the semester, a small amount of money was accumulated in the library's payroll account because more government subsidized work-study students were hired than expected, Talbot said.

He said the library has a full-time staff and hires students with work-study and non-work-study classifications.

Talbot said the library will keep the same hours next semester if many permanent employees do not quit. Talbot cannot hire permanent staff because of a hiring freeze. "We try to keep the library open about 100 hours a week," he said. "That is in the best interest of everybody."

a lot of signatures at UMass because of the budget cuts."

Spigelman said the budget crisis stems from wealthier people paying less taxes and private businesses finding loopholes in the state's tax laws.

He said the goal of his table's petition, which is sponsored by Massachusetts Organization of State Engineers and Scientists, focuses on increasing tax rates for corporations and the wealthy who aren't paying their share.

Another goal of the petition is to slightly decrease the tax rate for people in lower income brackets, Spigelman said.

The proposed changes include lowering both the income tax rate and the sales tax rate and also increasing exemptions for the elderly and blind.

The capital gains tax on homes would decrease to 4 percent, while other capital gains tax would increase to 9 percent. Also, a sales tax would be extended to certain business services.

The other petition, sponsored by state Sen. John Olver, D-Amherst, is named Tax Equity Alliance for Massachusetts. TEAM proposes changes in state taxes and depositing net revenues from these taxes in a "Massachusetts Future Fund."

The fund would be used for public education, environmental clean-up and protection, meeting basic human needs, as well as safe, secure roads and neighborhoods, said Mark Epstein, a UMass graduate working for Olver.

The reforms would also require major corporations to disclose what they pay in state taxes, Epstein said.

Madson said the Board of Regents has almost full legal management of the entire Massachusetts higher education system.

Rosenburg said elimination of the board is a "definite possibility." He added that if the Board of Regents is eliminated, and no structure is put in its place, it could result in "mass confusion in the system."

University Relations and Development staff member Steve Kulik, also in attendance, said the administration's current objective is to identify potential allies in the legislature.

"This week, we want to find out key swing votes," he said.

Madson said one of the problems with mobilizing a campaign to support the tax bill is UMass does not know how much of the money will go to public higher education.

"We have to have a bigger pie to slice up," he said.

Then if you are going to consume that much alcohol, you're going to have to carry a lot of cases."

The officers also mentioned the importance of respect. "We are not going there to make arrests," Maia said. "We are going there as peace keepers to protect the public quiet."

He added, "Police officers live in a fish bowl. There's not one occupation where people are as closely evaluated."

"I'm here to enforce the laws," said Maia. "I'm doing my job as I've sworn to do it, with a sense of pride. Hopefully you are also civil to me."

Looking behind the scenes of Evita

Students coordinate gala production for FAC showing

By MICHAEL T. PUOPOLO, II
Collegian Correspondent

The orchestra strikes up the first notes, and the lights on the stage dim to a woman standing on a balcony above the adoring crowd of the citizens of Argentina.

Eva takes a deep breath and soulfully sings, "Don't cry for me Argentina . . ."

This scene is from the pop opera/musical, Evita, which will appear at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Dec. 7 through Dec. 9.

But before the general public views Evita, many hours are being invested behind the scenes.

From the more than 100 people who auditioned for Evita during the third week of September, a 30-member cast has been chiseled.

Prospective cast members had to perform a singing piece from the show as well as a dancing piece to the show's music. After two nights of auditions, the director, producer, choreographer and music director met and chose the cast.

Rehearsals began one week later. For the first three weeks, the cast only had to be there for three nights of the week. But during the next four weeks, the cast was needed four nights a week, and for the last three weeks, the cast will be present Sunday through Thursday nights.

The actual week of the show, the cast must be there every night, for the rehearsals that typically run from 7 to 10:30 p.m.

> "The way I look at it, I'm not trying to create a political vehicle..."
> – Bill Stewich, director of Evita

"It's worth commuting and I have a car so it's only a 20 minute drive, so it's not that bad," said Melissa Benton, who portrays Eva Peron.

Benton is a student at Mount Holyoke College. She is one of several students from three of the five colleges in the area. Students from Smith College and others from Mount Holyoke are also in the musical.

The step-by-step process the cast undergoes is to learn the music first. Then the cast learns the lyrics and combines them with the music.

Once the cast is off-book (music and lyrics memorized), the blocking, or movement on the stage, is added to the show. The final piece that falls into place is the dancing to enhance the blocking.

Put all this together and put it on stage with the props, costumes, sets, sound and lights and Evita is complete.

Evita is a pop opera, meaning that there is singing from beginning to end. The songs encompass a wide range of emotions.

The song most attributed to the show is 'Don't Cry For Me Argentina,' sung by the leading lady, Eva.

The show is the creation of musical theater composer Andrew Lloyd Webber and lyricist Tim Rice. The musical was originally presented in London in 1978.

In 1979, Evita was moved to Los Angeles, and after 16 weeks, to Broadway. Several changes were made in the score before it was presented on Broadway.

The show is the musical biography of the life of Eva Peron. She was a strong political woman with amazing reserves of energy, who gave money from the aristocracy of Argentina to the poor natives in need.

Director Bill Stewich said he does not want to preach to the audience but rather wants to entertain the audience.

"The way I look at it, I'm not trying to create a political vehicle because I don't think that's what Lloyd Webber was trying to do. . . . I'm more interested in examining the characterizations of Eva and Juan Peron as seen through the eyes of Che Guevara [a political soldier who narrates the musical]," Stewich said.

Evita has a large chorus, so most of the cast is present at all rehearsals. At rehearsals, a vocal warm-up is done. Stewich explains the scenes and answers questions. JoAnne McDoungh, the vocal coach, and music director Jonathan Smith work on getting the music correct with the cast and the computer.

"The music is very challenging and really tests your range," says Benton.

Marc Clermont, who plays Che Guevara in the musical said, "As difficult as the music is, it isn't as difficult as acting Guevara. I'm always thinking about it and it's always in the back of my mind."

Evita is the largest musical that the University of Massachusets Music Theatre Guild has ever presented.

The guild originally began in 1935 by presenting Broadway musicals in Bowker Auditorium.

The last two productions the guild had in Bowker were Little Shop of Horrors and Godspell.

Last semester, the guild was invited to perform in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. At least 3,700 people saw the Leonard Berstein/Stephen Sondheim musical West Side Story, which the guild produced. It hopes to top itself with Evita.

Just a few weeks after the success of West Side Story, the guild had a meeting for nominations for the 1989 fall musical. Out of about 40 musicals nominated, the executive board of the guild had to choose five musicals to bring back to the membership.

The process of elimination to get the five musicals were based on four criteria: the space where the show is to be performed, financial cost of the show overall, marketability and technical difficulty.

Based on these criteria, the five shows were chosen. At the next meeting of the guild, only members were allowed to vote on the musical to be performed.

Evita was chosen.

The executive board held interviews for the key production staff positions. For two weeks, applications were accepted for director, choreographer, and music director of the show. The positions were filled by the end of May.

The executive board and the production staff had pre-production work to do over the summer for the musical. Stewich is the director as well as the technical director.

He not only had to research the history of the show and its characters, but also had to begin the blocking and designing the lights, set, props, and sound.

Smith, the music director, had to form his ideas on the pit orchestra. He decided to use a computer to simulate the orchestra. He started programming the music on to the computer and finding the right computer program for the enormous job.

"In general, I feel that the music is extremely strong musically and lyrically," Smith said.

Marie Gosselin, Peter Fernandez, Sheila Cushing and Julia Sabol (left to right) are the actors for the aristocrats of Argentina.

Kris Golembowski, the choreographer, had to research Latin dancing styles and audition material.

"Compared to a lot of other musicals as big, dance-wise, there is a lot more movement that's to music and not a lot of out and out dancing," said Golembowski.

The publicity staff had to begin designs on the audition notices, actual production posters, and media contacts.

It was the producer's job to check and make sure everyone was doing what they were supposed to be doing. The producer also had to purchase the rights to perform the pop opera from Music Theater International.

All of this work took place before the fall semester even began.

> "It's a lot of hard work and frustrating, but the end result is all worth it."
> — Melissa Benton, actress in Evita

While all the rehearsals are taking place, the media is informed of the musical. Costumes and props are being built and the set is being constructed and painted.

The most difficult week of the show is the actual week of the show itself.

Evita will be moving to the FAC Concert Hall the Monday before the show opens. The crew has two days to hang all the lights, move the set on stage, and set all the necessary cues for the show.

"Working with the FAC, it provides a tremendous learning experience that you have professionals working on your show and supplying advice, and not only teaching, but being taught by students. They support us tremendously in giving us what we need to develop the show," Stewich said.

The cast has two days to become familiar with the space they are performing in, knowing where and when their entrances and exits are, finding their light specials and moving with the set.

It is a large adjustment period that must take very little time.

Dress rehersals will take place for most of the days before the show. Tickets for the show go on sale Monday, Nov. 13.

Clermont said, "I'm ecstatic and very, very excited.'

Saturday night after the show, the set must be disassembled, the lights taken down and all material belonging to the guild must be removed from the FAC Concert Hall.

Evita is late in the semester this year. The executive board has decided to hold nominations and voting for the spring of 1989's musical next week. So even while Evita is rehearsing, the whole tedious process of presenting a piece of musical theater will begin again. These musicals are entirely student run.

The guild is an RSO and receives no faculty or staff support outside of its faculty advisor, Judy Gagnon. The guild is not affiliated with the FAC or the departments of music, dance or theater. In fact, most of the cast does not major in any of these areas.

Benton said, "It's a lot of hard work and frustrating, but the end result is all worth it. Between the cast bonding and performing it's an incredible feeling and makes it all worth while."

• Hungarian parliament votes on election referendum

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Parliament voted yesterday to hold a national referendum on when and how to elect someone to fill the new post of president.

The house voted to hold the referendum Nov. 26, the date that had tentatively been chosen for a popular vote to select a president under an agreement signed by the ruling Socialist Party and most of the major opposition groups.

But two opposition groups, the League of Free Democrats and the League of Young Democrats, had opposed that. They collected more than 200,000 signatures on petitions calling for a referendum on the method and timing of such elections.

The groups want the president chosen by parliament after the general elections, which are to be held by June. They say they need more time to organize an effective campaign to make their candidates better known.

The agreement between the Socialists and most opposition groups had called for a one-time popular vote to select a president, with parliament choosing all subsequent presidents.

If Hungarians vote in favor of electing a president before the parliamentary elections next year, the presidential balloting would be conducted Jan. 7, the lawmakers decided yesterday.

The presidency was created by constitutional amendments adopted two weeks ago and the office's respon-

• Krenz, Gorby to talk reform

BERLIN (AP) — East German Communist Party chief Egon Krenz headed to Moscow yesterday to discuss reform proposals with the architect of perestroika, Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The official news agency ADN reported yesterday afternoon that Krenz had flown to the Soviet Union but it did not specify when he departed.

He was scheduled to meet with Gorbachev this morning and hold a news conference in the afternoon before leaving the Soviet capital, ADN said.

Krenz's first foreign trip as East Germany's leader began after night demonstrations in nine cities. About 500,000 East Germans took to the streets to demand democratic reforms in the largest protests in East Germany's 40-year history; about 300,000 people marched through Leipzig.

East Germany's largest opposition group today sent a message of support to human rights activists in Czechoslovakia.

The statement from the New Forum opposition group, which counts more than 15,000 members, reflected the growing feeling that Krenz's leadership is serious about loosening restrictions on free speech.

"We are convinced that new times will come to you, too, and that the Prague Spring will finally have its summer," New Forum said in a letter sent to Czechoslovak human rights activists. The letter was made public in West Berlin.

Mutant Ninja Barbie cereal?

When the Ralston Purina Company decided to dig their pet food paws into the cold cereal market, they ushered in the bleakest era in breakfast history.

Ralston Purina funded the innovative research behind Cookie Crisp, the cereal with authentic chocolate chip cookie taste. With this product as a frame of reference, I thought that creating a more absurd cereal brand was an impossibility.

Darren Garnick

But that was before Breakfast With Barbie cereal — the most blatant misuse of the complex carbohydrate to date — crashed the scene. Its inspiration is the Barbie doll, a toy embedded in the American culture. Presumably targeted at pre-teenage girls, the pink and yellow cereal is shaped in bite-sized bows, hearts, and stars.

The packaging of Breakfast With Barbie suggests an interactive element. Barbie eats breakfast with you. To comfort lonely eaters, her larger-than-life photograph makes direct eye contact.

Barbie is pictured at her vanity, putting the final touches on her blonde mane. For her, even breakfast is a formal occasion. Decked out in a satin pink evening gown with sequinned stars, Barbie stretches out her other hand (the one not glued to a hair brush) towards a bowl of Barbie cereal.

Babs has taken a lot of heat from her critics — and rightly so. Her ridiculously exaggerated hip-waist-bust ratio perpetuates an unrealistic body image for women. Barbie is also a shallow female role model. Clothing is her obsession, the latest fashions her only concern. (Do we ever see an "Electrical Engineer Barbie"?).

In terms of cereal quality, though, these criticisms are irrelevant. Breakfast with Barbie is objectionable on aesthetic grounds alone. The box is a sickening cotton-candy pink, summoning up the image of oat nuggets coated in nail polish. The taste — similar to bland cherry cough syrup — fulfills all expectations.

But the text is even more offensive than the taste.

"Breakfast with Barbie is in fun shapes of your daughter's favorite Barbie things," the box's side panel reads, "with just enough sugar and fruit flavor to taste great. Make New Breakfast With Barbie cereal a part of a nutritious breakfast for your daughter!"

If my child ever took a liking to this product, I would have no choice but to reprogram her (or, God forbid, him). Barbie cereal applauds materialism and conceitedness. Skeptics need look no further than the back panel, which contains instructions for converting the cereal box into a "Superstar Barbie Vanity Table."

Barbie's case is closed. Not content to insult one population segment, Ralston Purina came up with another zinger: Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles Cereal — "Crunchy, sweetened Ninja Nets with Ninja Turtle Marshmallows."

The Ninja Turtles are good guys in the comic books. However, without any background narrative on the box to set a positive context, the pictures have violent connotations.

In terms of role models, a masked vigilante turtle is not any better than Barbie. The lead Ninja reptile, drawn in the foreground of the box, wields a spoon the size of a pitchfork. No longer is the spoon an innocent eating utensil. It has become, thanks to the turtles, a means to maim and to kill.

Equally disturbing is a Ninja Turtle video offer on the side panel. The video's premise — "a canister of mutagen ooze goes astray in the Everglades, resulting in Mutant Frogs" — is a callous celebration of the horrors of hazardous waste.

Could Ralston Purina outdo themselves with a more ludicrous product? I fear that Mutant Ninja Barbie cereal is only a matter of time. Purina should stick to pet food.

When will they kick me out?

The University has recently taken the trouble to inform me that I may no longer be welcome here, though not for the reasons regular readers of this page might suspect.

It seems I will soon be on academic probation, although my GPA is 3.14 and rising.

Al Arpad

See, last semester and this semester I inconsiderately neglected to apply for a change to part-time status during the pre-registration period. I foolishly believed that, since the registrar knew how many courses I was taking, the registrar would be able to form a relatively accurate hypothesis as to whether I was attending classes full time.

I was wrong. I did not carry a full course load for either semester, and now I'm in trouble, so I made an appointment to see my college dean.

The dean gave me a short lecture on my responsibilities as a member of the student body, her voice oozing with all the supercilious unction of a bureaucratic functionary in a position to abuse members of the public, and told me there is no way to arrange for a reduction in course load after the end of the add/drop period.

I thanked her for her generous assistance and ended the conversation rather abruptly.

She said as I was leaving, "that attitude is what put you in this situation." And she's right.

That attitude has driven me to work a full-time job, go to classes, write for the paper and go to National Guard drills on weekends for the last three years. I probably should have made my parents pay for school instead.

But when I leave here, that attitude will be intact, whether or not I have a degree.

Not that I care, although academic probation appears on official transcripts, but I wonder why it should be difficult for anybody to become a part-time student during a semester when classes have been cut back drastically. The students who got into the classes I dropped would probably thank me.

I'm not even asking for a tuition refund.

Nevertheless, I don't expect to pursue the matter. I'll just keep going to classes, writing to the Collegian occasionally, and waiting for them to find an excuse to throw me out.

It has occurred to me, however, that the way students are treated here, from the restrictive dormitory rules to the indifference of some employees, it might have something to do with their support for the University after they graduate.

Make no mistake, the University needs the support of its alumni. My wife is a UMass alumnus, and she gets all kinds of mail asking for money. They even offered her a University VISA card with a picture of the Old Chapel on it.

Maybe if they started acting like a liberal arts university instead of a machine for turning young people into obedient tools, the subsequent UMass alumni would be more inclined to generosity.

If you think that arbitrary policies and abuse of authority are a problem that might affect your eventual inclination to donate money, write to me, c/o the Collegian. I'll pass it on to Chancellor Duffey.

Al Arpad is a pending UMass student

Time is now to halt homophobia

I am writing to express my absolute outrage and disgust at the Collegian for presenting on the FRONT PAGE, an article about Paul Cameron, "No room for Cameron?!,"(Friday, Oct. 26). The Collegian has seen fit, during Civility Week no less, to cover this event which drew a crowd of four people, while a scheduled Civility Week event, the Jane Sapp, Barwa and Amanala concert drew over 1,000 people!

This is not an isolated incident. The Collegian chooses with alarming consistency, not to cover most well attended lesbian, bisexual and gay events. The invisibility of lesbian, bisexual and gay news coverage in our college newspaper is homophobic and leads to more homophobia.

The continued refusal to present lesbian, bisexual and gay news events allows the perpetuation of the myth that there are not many of us. This is simply not true! There are at least (by conservative estimates) 3,000 lesbian, bisexual and gay students at UMass, the largest minority on campus. Some questions come to mind:

Why did the Collegian send a reporter to interview Paul Cameron? Why did the interview appear on the front page? Why is it so difficult for the lesbian, bisexual, and gay community to get our events covered? Why are our news items excluded from the Multicultural Affairs page? What is going on here?!

Cameron's past appearances at UMass have led to a dramatic and documented increase in the number of reported violent verbal and physical attacks on people who are openly gay, lesbian, or bisexual or are heterosexual but are mistaken for being gay.

Cameron is a homophobic crusader who travels about the country spreading hatred and fear of lesbian, gay and bisexual people. Although he has no medical degree, he has become famous as someone who claims to be an expert on AIDS. Cameron was stripped of his psychiatric credentials by the American Psychological Association for "violating its ethical principles."

It is past time for the Collegian to take responsibility for its important role in bringing about change on the UMass campus by making significant improvements in the interest of "civility."

I can speak for much of the lesbian, bisexual and gay community in demanding that the Collegian make responsible changes.

We will not go away.

Participate in food and clothing drive

With the effects of recent budget cuts and the threat of more on the way, students are becoming more concerned about their future. Beginning today and running through the 20th, the Michele Cocuzzo Human Kindness Project with the cooperation of volunteers across campus, will be conducting a food and clothing drive.

What is asked of each student is not much — one article of clothing or one canned or dry food good. If one stops to think of the enormous amount of goods that can be collected by a campus-wide effort, the contribution we can make to the homeless and the poor is staggering.

Throughout the 20-day effort, two boxes will be placed in each residence hall. One box will be designated for clothes, the other for food.

With the help of volunteers, the items will be distributed to local shelters and food banks. These shelter include the Amherst Survival Center, Jesse's House, the Amherst Youth Shelter and the Western Massachusetts Food Bank. For those students who live off-campus, there will be a drop-off table at the Campus Center during the week of November 13-17.

As the holidays approach and with them the harsh weather of winter, let us not forget those who dread this time of year, those who do not have the necessary clothes, food, or shelter to brave this season.

If each student makes the commitment to give one article of clothing or one food good, these people will be receiving a tremendous gift from the students of this University.

Appalled at the Woman's page

I am outraged at the Collegian and especially the editors of the Women's Issues page for the articles printed on Tuesday, Oct. 24. Not only were two of the three articles on the Women's Issues page about men, but one was mysongynist and anti-women ("Students for life tackle new agenda, addressing morality issues as well.")

I understand and respect the Collegian's concern for covering both sides of the abortion issue. However, I do not think that the Women's Issues page is an appropriate place to discuss a group which is intolerant of other people's values.

What does Ted Maravelias mean by adding "traditional values" to his agenda? His "values" as a White, Judeo-Christian, heterosexual, privileged-class man are surely not the same values of Native Americans, women, Muslims, Afro-Americans, working classes, lesbians, feminists, etc.

He was also quoted as saying, "there is an importance of understanding our Judeo-Christian heritage . . . separation of church and state has gone too far."

Is he so ethnocentric that he believes that he is unaware and intolerant of those of us who reject and denounce our Christian heritage — one which has been responsible for the deaths of hundreds of thousands of women who were executed as witches, i.e. lay-women, mid-wives, healers, lesbians and feminists.

I was doubly shocked to see a picture, a rather large one, of a man, again Ted Maravelias, on this page. I cannot remember seeing pictures of any women there. This page is sacred ground. The articles do not have to be by or about feminists, but they should be by and about women.

We desperately need a safe, separate place to share our stories. Furthermore, with only three articles every other week, I hope that the editors of this page will find someone, a woman please, more interesting to write (and read) about other than someone like Ted Maravalias. I also hope that the editors of this page receive a response to their plea for help by the time the next Women's Issue page is printed.

Newman sparkles in a fat bomb of a movie

By GEORGE LENTZ
Collegian Correspondent

THE SCREENING ROOM

Roland Joffe is a director of images, building his films upon the strength of one opening shot. In the opening to Joffe's 1986 film The Mission, a Jesuit priest, tied to a cross made of tree trunks, is sent over a raging waterfall by the natives of his South American mission. The image of the crucified priest, plunging into the mist and rocks below was as awesome as it was horrifying, setting the stage for a magnificent epic that would justify the director of The Killing Fields as one of the premiere directors in the business.

Joffe's latest film, Fat Man and Little Boy opens with what could be the most powerful image captured on film this decade. The screen fades in to a magnificent yellow-orange sky, partially eclipsed by a huge black orb. The film credits, colored an angry red, slide across the image as the camera begins to pull back, slowly taking in the full view of an atom bomb hanging by a thick chain like a nightmarish "catch-of-the-day."

Academy Award winner Paul Newman plays General Leslie Groves, a gravelly-voiced bulldog of an officer who is handed the mission of rounding up a team of the nation's best physicists and engineers to develop the world's first nuclear weapon. Groves enlists the aid of brilliant Berkeley physicist J. Robert Oppenheimer (Dwight Schultz) to lead the $2 billion Manhattan Project in a remote section of Los Alamos, New Mexico.

A driving force in the construction of the Pentagon building, Groves takes the Manhattan Project to heart, molding it into an obsession. After being wired about Germany's surrender, Groves snaps at an officer asking if the project is still necessary: "I want this country to have the best damn swing on the playground."

Oppenheimer himself is out to prove something as well. A highly acclaimed genius by his peers, his reputation and ego demand nothing less than perfection despite a nagging conscience and the relentless demands and expectations of Groves. The two don't like each other at all. Oppenheimer wants more time and less regulations. Groves wants results without excuses. There is a definite element of tension existing between the two, and Joffe introduces it well. When Groves addresses the scientists for the first time, Joffe shoots him from a low floor angle, cast against the rays of sunlight coming in through the window behind him. What makes this sequence of shots particularly interesting is Joffe's intercutting of shots of Oppenheimer, sitting off to the side by himself, casually smoking a cigarette. In doing so, Joffe creates an interesting statement about the two men; one is a domineering figure of authority and American Bravado, the other a quiet dissenter and underminer of that authority.

Paul Newman stars in Fat Man and Little Boy

The film is ultimately about the internal struggles of these two individuals and the battle waged between them to see who's got more control over himself and, in consequence, over the project.

Newman and Schultz are perfectly cast here and turn in fine performances, but Joffe never lets their characters fully interact, stripping the film of its full impact. Their conflict is critical to the story's structure and yet it is never completely explored. Instead, Joffe tempts us with brief spurts of tough dialogue and pained, tense expressions from his actors, but he never allows them to convey their feelings to the audience. Everything is kept under perfect constraint.

Fat Man and Little Boy (the nicknames of the bombs dropped on Nagasaki and Hiroshima, respectively.) promises so much and serves so little. Joffe was able to evoke stronger feelings from a single shot of the two bombs than he is from the entire film. The bombs, either by mere mention or physical presence become the genesis of all emotion in the film. The opening two minutes are the most powerful, leaving the remainder of the film to flounder, failing to sustain everything Joffe so brilliantly captured in that one image.

Submissions for best movie of the decade are being accepted until Dec. 1st. Send all submissions to the Arts Dept.

Ululators utilize Twister's stage tonight

By NICK OSTIS
Collegian Correspondent

"We've been called everything from the Urinators to the Ovulators to the Gladiators," mused guitarist Paul Thurlow of the Ululators, Martha's Vineyard's musical ambassadors with the multicultural, highly percussive sound. Thurlow noted, when asked about the origin of the band's name, "It's in the dictionary. It's what a screech owl does. It's a battle cry used at funerals, dances and celebrations all over the world."

I don't know if they've played any funerals lately, but the Ululators (pronounced "yool-ya-lators") have been igniting audiences to dance and celebrate in the very best clubs all over New England — from Newport to Cambridge, Boston to Burlington, Worcester to Portland. Whether these audiences are aware or even care that many of the lyrics accompanying their festive music are politically incendiary is moot. What is certain is that they are responding with enthusiasm and spirit to the beat in its various tempos and ethnic origins.

Touring in support of their 1989 U-Who records release, New England's first ever digital recording, the Ululators will perform tonight at Twister's in Amherst.

The quintet, together for almost four years now, borrows from reggae, ska, African, Latin and Celtic rhythmic traditions, combined with some blues and rock, all of which serve to offer an ambitious and impressive fusion. As of late September, their album has sold nearly 1,000 tapes and more than 200 CDs.

In democratic fashion, each of the band members writes material, sings lead and back up vocals and contributes percussion. Paul Thurlow plays lead guitar, piano and synthesizer. James Parr is on bass, Steve Hart does the drums, Rick Bausman plays guitar and Sam Holmstock plays the congas, bongos, shkere and bodhran. On some numbers Holmstock, who has a classical music background and has toured with a jazz big band, introduces his trombone. In addition, Parr occasionally adds the sunshine of the steel drum.

Thurlow, Holmstock and Bausman also form a portion of the Vineyard-based Die Kunst Der Drum, an African drum ensemble.

Because of their willingness to explore and create hybrid sounds, the Ululators is a band with unlimited potential.

Cosby speaks on budget, civility

By AUDREY DEANNA LLOYD
Collegian Staff

The multi-talented Dr. Bill Cosby was a special guest at the $100-per-plate banquet on behalf of the University of Massachusetts Fund for the Future, in the Student Union Ballroom last Sunday. Proceeds from the banquet are intended to launch a three-year outreach campaign to improve the University's budget situation.

The reactions to alumni Cosby's appearance were positive from some staff and student representatives. Tracy Davis and Eric Nakijima both agreed that Cosby's appearance at the banquet proved that he cared about the future of the University.

Randolph W. Bromery, former Chancellor of the University of Massachusetts at Amherst from 1971-79 and African-American said, "I think its a shot in the arm that we needed from Bill Cosby who took the time out from his busy life to be with us tonight because he cares about the University."

Bromery was also one of the five founders of the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and Minority Students and is currently President of Westfield State College.

Professor Michael Thelwell of the Afro-American Studies Department said, "I thought Cosby's speech was splendid."

In a press conference held at the Duke's room of the Campus Center, Cosby entertained some questions.

Thomas Mambande, an African-American UMass student, asked Cosby how he felt about Civility Week and the racial tensions that exist on campus, Cosby declined, at first, to address the issue. At the close of the conference, he shared his views.

"It was disturbing to me when I heard about African-Americans and Caucasians after each other. There should be no reason for someone to beat up or chastise someone in the state of Massachusetts who is trying to get an education," said Cosby.

On the topic of Civility Week, Cosby said, "I don't think there should be a Civility Week, there should be 24 hours of respect for individuals." Cosby also commented that Black students who walk alone stand the chance of being attacked. On the other hand, when Blacks walk in groups, they are perceived as "looking for trouble," Cosby said.

Cosby donated $20 million to Spelman College, a Black Women's school in Atlanta Georgia. However, during the conference he said he was not planning on donating any money to the University of Massachusetts.

A spotlight on the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity

By SCOTT C. HILL
Collegian Staff

Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Incorporated was America's first Black fraternity, founded on December 4, 1906, at Cornell University in New York.

According to Brother Evon Walters, the founders of Alpha Phi Alpha wanted to create a social and literary organization where minority students could get together and aid each other through the academic process.

Walters identifies Alpha Phi Alpha as primarily a service organization in keeping with their motto: First of all, service to all, we shall transcend all. Their principles are Manly Deeds, Scholarship, and Love for All Mankind.

Alpha Phi Alpha has a membership of over 150,000 men in over 700 undergraduate and alumni chapters in the United States, Caribbean, Africa, Europe, and Asia. Its colors are black and gold and their traditional hand-sign is a fist with thumb and pinky extended.

ΑΦΑ

On a national level, Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity started the Go to High School, Go to College program which is designed to motivate Black students to continue their education. Project Alpha is a drive to control Black teenage pregnancy.

The chapter active in our area is the Springfield city chapter Alpha Kappa, which presides over Westfield State College, Springfield College, American International College, Amherst College, and the University of Massachusetts at Amherst. Alpha Kappa chapter, founded in 1922, has an active membership of twelve.

According to Brother Kevin Walters, chapter historian, Alpha Kappa chapter's service activities have been based in the Springfield area, involved in their own Project Alpha for the prevention of Black teenage pregnancy primarily by the education of high school men.

Brother Keith Jernigan, president of the chapter, is a senior Business Administration major at AIC. He is captain of the AIC football team and a member of Pride, a Black service organization. Vice-President Vince Jackson is a junior Business Administration major at AIC and is also a member of Pride.

Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Alpha Kappa chapter, has two members at UMass, brothers Evon and Kevin Walters, both members of the track team. Brother Evon is a graduate student in the Education department who pledged in Spring of 1987 on a line of four. Bro. Kevin is a sophomore sports management major and pledged in Spring of '89 on a line of four. Professors Bill Strickland of the Afro-American Studies department and Horace Boyer of the Music department are also members of Alpha Phi Alpha Fraternity, Inc.

As a future goal, Bro. Evon hopes that the Alphas at UMass can start their own chapter sometime in the next two years.

A few famous Honorary Alphas are Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., Thurgood Marshall, W.E.B. DuBois, and Andrew Young, mayor of Atlanta.

New Puerto Rican cultural TV show to begin

By CLAUDIA CARVER
Collegian Correspondent

WGBY-Channel 57 will air the first episode in the five-part series Poco a Poco at 7 p.m. on Saturday, Nov. 4. Produced by independent producer Luis Boscho, Poco a Poco will present a variety of cultural, historical and economic issues concerning the island of Puerto Rico. It is produced in Spanish with English subtitles.

"One half of the Puerto Rican population lives in the United States, and most of them are concentrated in metropolitan areas in the Northeast. Yet, there is next to zero Puerto Rican television programming," says Luis Boscho, producer of Poco a Poco. It is precisely this lack of programming that prompted Boscho to produce the series.

However, he points out that the series is also geared towards the Anglo-American audience. He states that an overwhelming number of Anglos don't realize that Puerto Ricans have been U.S. citizens since 1917 and thus don't understand why they came to the United States mainland. He hopes that the series will make Anglos understand these issues by making them aware of the Puerto Rican historical, cultural, and economic background.

Boscho started the Poco a Poco project in 1985 with the help of Mercedes Chinchilla, who hosts the program, Millie Ortiz, a sixth grade teacher in Holyoke, WMTJ-TV in Puerto Rico, and others. Boscho was bothered by the tendency to separate North, South, and Central America into different social class distinctions and envisioned Poco a Poco as "programs to make bridges between the Americas."

"In order to understand the origin of social problems that exist in the Latino community, we need to understand the culture of the Latino people," said the program's producer.

Boscho, a native of Cuba, came to the United States in 1967 and graduated from the University of Massachusetts with a master's degree in Public Health in the late 70's. Believing that video should be a medium for social change rather than for social control, he worked on several documentaries about UMass while still in school. Boscho said that while others were raving about the entertainment possibilities of the rapidly expanding video medium, he was more concerned with its potential to transmit important news and information critical to the functioning of a democracy.

Boscho stresses that Poco a Poco's purpose is both to entertain and educate. It is "a variety show with a mash of things," Boscho said. He chose the title (meaning "little by little" in English) because he recognizes that increasing the public's awareness of the Latino community will not be an overnight process.

Boscho would like to continue Poco a Poco with a series of programs on Cuba and is currently awaiting travel clearance from their government. Until then, Boscho, a Holyoke school teacher, will continue to work with the local Latino community to affect a change that will come "poco a poco."

Poco a Poco is presented in part by a grant from the Heritage Program and the Massachusetts Council on the arts and Humanities. It will premiere Saturday, Nov. 4 and continues Nov. 11, 18, 25, and Dec. 16.

Eyes of different angles

By ALEXANDER NGUYEN
Collegian Staff

"This Sunday will mark the first united Asian semi-formal, hosted by the Asian American Students' Association," said AASA president Tom Truong. "The theme of our gathering is Eyes of Different Angles," said Marissa Melliza, AASA's inter-collegiate representative. This theme depicts the diversity among Asians, how we have different outlooks on our culture, she said.

Students of the Cambodian Students's Association, the Chinese Club, the International Students' Association, the Japan-America Club, the Korean Students' Association, and the Vietnamese Students' Association, as well as the Five-College Asian students have been invited to join AASA in this gathering, said Shilan Yang, AASA's intercollegiate representative. This will be a good beginning event, after our United Asia House opening, for us to meet one another and socialize," said James Troung of ACCESS. "Due to the United Asia House effort, we have become familiar with each other's faces, and this semi-formal will give us the opportunity to get to know one another," he said.

Thomas Ly of the Vietnamese Students' Association said, "I think we're all eager to meet each other and AASA is taking the right step in that direction. I would like to learn more about the Cambodian and Korean cultures."

"The Asian students from Amherst, Mount Holyoke, and Smith College are very excited about this so it'll be a gathering of Asian students from all the schools, not just the University of Massachusetts," said Melliza.

The semi-formal is this Sunday at 7:00 on the the tenth floor of the campus hotel. Tickets are available at the AASA office, from all AASA officers, or at the door, said Eddy Chin, AASA treasurer.

Party for Amherst kids

By SCOTT C. HILL
Collegian Staff

Monday night, a Halloween Party was given for Black children of the Amherst Area at the Malcolm X Center. The Party was sponsored by the UMass National Pan-Hellenic Council, the composite organization of Black fraternities and sororities on campus.

About 30 children ages 1 to 11 participated in this special event, which participants said was joyous and heartwarming. The children were invited to come dressed as Black heroes, to instill the youngsters with a sense of racial pride.

"The Black fraternities and sororities on campus are trying to take a pro-active role in developing the Black community. This year, we're concentrating on Black children predominantly from single parent households to help the kids develop a positive cultural identity," said Tony Walker, president of the National Pan-Hellenic Council.

Patricia Bumpus of Amherst had two children at the party - Namandje, 10, who was dressed as Nefertiti, and Tia, four, costumed as Shirley Chisolm, complete with a pair of oversized glasses on her little face. "I'm glad to see that so many Black college students are becoming involved in the community. We need things like this because Black children are so isolated in Amherst," said Bumpus.

Kimberly O'Shields, correspondent secretary of the UMass Pan-Hel, did the majority of groundwork for the event, soliciting Price Chopper Supermarket and the Office of Greek Affairs for food donations. "Stop and Shop initially agreed to donate candy, but pulled out on the kids at the last minute. Luckily, the Office of Greek Affairs picked up the slack," said O'Shields.

A variety of party games were played to the happy children's delight, including an educational game to teach them some Black history. A few of the costumes the kids wore were Malcolm X, Michael Jordan, a Black Panther, Benjamin Banneker, and the Queen of Sheba.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: You will not have to travel far to reap new financial gains in December. That special someone you meet in March is likely to stay around for a long time. A social affair in midsummer will give you a surge of confidence. You will be ready for a change in lifestyle by early fall. Family ties deepen even as new alliances are formed. Do not forget your old friends.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: columnist James J. Kilpatrick, Rep. Nicholas Mavroules (D-Mass), actress Betsy Palmer, golfer Gary Player, L.A. Dodger Fernando Valenzuela, country singer Bill anderson, basketball's Joe Caldwell, TV actress Marcia Wallace.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): Partners are motivating you in several ways. Do not agree to merger unless it is what you really want. The popularity or behavior of a loved one could affect your own standing.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Senior citizens can drop years from their appearance in spite of critical or fussy relatives! Making a new beginning at home or place of employment will help secure your financial future.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): New employment opportunities are on the horizon. Check them out. A conference is necessary to cement an important agreement. Romantic partner may reveal doubts about making a permanent commitment. Do not press.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Imaginative ideas are an important part of your success formula. You find a solution to a financial problem. Messages, calls and increased local travel are part of the picture. Delays complicate matters.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Once an agreement has been reached in principle, it would be a grave mistake to act arbitrarily. Follow prevailing customs to avoid being chastised by those in authority. Romance holds new promise.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Play it safe. Follow sound advice instead of giving in to a personal compulsion. The tempo at work quickens. An incorrect analysis of recent trends could lead to financial problems. Be cautious.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): The more contacts you make, the better the prospects of getting somewhere. Do not underestimate the value of your partner's efforts. There is a need for absolute secrecy when negotiating contracts.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Friends who take an interest in what you are doing may wish to pitch in and help. A TV show may give you an idea for boosting your income. Follow up.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Continue to keep your emotions under strict control. Refuse to be baited into saying something you will regret. Work offers the best escape from an unpleasant person or situation.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): Someone who has always been reliable could behave oddly now. Withhold judgement. It is impossible to know what strains this person might be under. Continue to extend the hand of friendship.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Ill-advised actions could lead to a cash shortage. The devotion and friendliness of a key associate is a tremendous asset. Do not alienate those who are likely to help you. Heed their advice.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Obey your conscience and go out of your way to do a good deed. Make amends if you have been at fault. Visit someone you may have neglected in the recent past.

command of the armed forces and calling elections.

The Socialists Party is the successor to the Communist party, which dissolved itself at a congress this month. The Socialists promise to end one-party rule and replace it with constitutional democracy.

Hungarian legislators today also planned to discuss and vote on government proposals on a suspended Danube River hydroelectric project with Czechoslovakia. Hungary has been increasingly at odds with that Warsaw Pact ally over the project's suspension and Hungary's path of reform.

Czechoslovakia's Communist leaders have refused to ease their tight control of society and allow any degree of power-sharing.

■ changes for E. Germany

Czechoslovakia began a sweeping program of liberal reforms under Communist leader Alexandr Dubcek, but the so-called "Prague Spring" was quashed by the Warsaw Pact invasion of August 1968.

The current Communist leadership in Prague has strongly rejected the need for reforms and has dealt harshly with dissent.

About 10,000 people demonstrated Saturday in Prague for more democracy. Protesters were beaten by police and more than 300 were arrested.

Monday's protests in East Germany took place in Leipzig, Halle, Schwerin, Karl-Marx-Stadt, Cottbus, Magdeburg, Dresden, Poesseneck and East Berlin.

Fun and frolic in forest of fairies

By MICHAEL PUOPOLO
Collegian Correspondent

Into the Woods
Fine Arts Center Concert Hall
Monday, Oct. 30

Into the Woods is everyone's dream come true, all of our favorite fairy tales rolled into one delightful musical comedy.

Kevin Wright in Into the Woods

Act one introduces the characters, and weaves them into the common goal of all fairy tales — to live happily ever after. The first act is light and humorous, filled with physical, verbal and lyrical humor.

In act two, the audiences saw that happiness depends on one's responsibilities in life, and deals with the delicate balance that is maintained between parents and children. Act two moves from the world of make-believe into the cold, cruel world of reality. By Combining the two aspects of act one and two, Into the Woods becomes a fantasy with moral themes.

Into the Woods is the third musical created by Stephen Sondheim and James Lapine. The way in which Sondheim and Lapine intermix the characters, the story lines and the humor make for a great evening of laughter and music.

THEATER

This particular touring company was just in Boston and received good reviews. The acting is consistent, the singing is great, and the cast moved easily on stage, which was filled with various trees and stumps. The special effects were also effective.

However, an annoying problem with the show was the lighting. The actual on stage lights were adequate, but the man operating the spotlight had a great deal of trouble finding the actors. Sometimes there was a cast member completely in shadow, and the spot was bouncing all over the stage.

The highlight of the evening was the performance given by Betsey Joslyn, who played the witch. It was amazing to watch this woman perform. She was used a falsetto voice during act one as the old, decrepit witch, while during act two, she used her full voice, which was beautiful. Joslyn also did a great job of imitating other character's voices and actions while still maintaining her own character. She is a wonderful comedic actress and did justice to this difficult role. It was a pleasure to watch her.

Tonight is the last night to catch Into the Woods, good seats are still available, and tickets are available at the Fine Arts Center Box Office.

Art from the earth

By MAUREEN WOOD
Collegian Correspondent

The art exhibit From the Earth: Stone, Clay and Fiber is in the Student Union Art Gallery through Nov. 10. It features artists Virginia Bailey Brown, Beth Epstein, and Laura Rothage. The artists' styles fit together well, and the exhibit gives off a down to earth feeling through the earth tones shown in the art.

Virginia Bailey Brown's work consists of tapestries and sculptures. Her tapestries seem to make the walls disappear with its strips of triangles of earth tones intertwined, while the sculptures give off a different effect. One piece that absorbs one's attention is the sculpture Three Dragon Heads. Covered with great detail, it has a Chinese art feel.

Virginia Bailey Brown talks about her art in the form of a poem. She wrote, "I confront my creative process in an abstract manner." She speaks of imagination and of using the unconscious. "Art is opening doors inside ourselves."

Laura Rothage also presents clay sculptures. One called Reve D'Egypt, consists of several towers painted a dull brown with little brushed mark imprints, and is hollow inside. Another sculpture consists of delicate statues shaped like columns, called My Father's House is Fallen.

The intention of Rothage's work is, "Most history lessons focus on western civilization." She believes western civilization began with Ancient Greece, whose art was their religion.

Beth Epstein presents smooth, rounded, marble sculptures. From The Earth is composed of a few tall, round open-topped, vase-like sculptures. There are circles and lines painted in greens, pinks, and white covering the clay.

Epstein is known as a "versatile sculpter." She uses geometric and organic forms. Her work is a brilliant array of agate like designs. She also does oriental ceramic sculptures, whose soft indulations reflect a Moore-Amp sensibility while remaining unique to her own creative style.

Jake is Band's winner

In yesterday's article on the Southwest Battle of the Bands, the Collegian neglected to report that One-Eyed Jake, a blues cover band, won the event. The Collegian regrets this error.

Field hockey hoses down the Big Green

Philbrick scores game-winner in 3-1 OT win

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Correspondent

Make no mistake — this game was ugly. When the University of Massachusetts field hockey team took the field against the Big Green of Dartmouth yesterday, all those who once had clean uniforms, left with wet, muddy black jerseys. Totman field resembled a mud bog more than a field hockey lawn.

In what may be the last home game of the season for the eighth-ranked Minutewomen, junior forward Nancy Philbrick netted the game winner just 30 seconds into the overtime period, giving UMass a 3-1 victory over Dartmouth.

"Getting in the overtime was really important; we needed a win," said UMass coach Pam Hixon. Hixon went on to say, "So far this season, we've had no losses to teams and no ties to teams out of the top 20, which is a fantastic stat, and we did not want to break that today."

UMass clearly controlled the ball in the Dartmouth half of the field throughout the first half but was denied a goal for the first 23 minutes of the game by the Dartmouth goalie Karen Hartwig. If not for the superb play of Hartwig, this game would have been a laugher for UMass.

"Their goaltender gave them a good performance; we had a number of one-on-ones with our kids right in front, but we couldn't convert," said Hixon.

It looked as if UMass would take this 1-0 lead into the halftime, but Laurie Khelokian slipped a goal through the pads of UMass goalie Philippa Scott to knot the game at 1-1, with 4:13 remaining. The goal broke Scott's shutout streak which had reached four games going into this affair, and also tied Dartmouth's school record for goals in a season.

As the second half started, Mother Nature was determined to play a part in the outcome of this game. The rain started as a drizzle, but quickly turned to a steady rain, making playing conditions awful.

"We were concerned about the conditions; last year we played them in the pouring rain and we didn't get the game in. This year we got another miserable day, which I think is a great equalizer for them, so it makes it more difficult for us," said Hixon.

The second half saw a determined UMass team swarm the Dartmouth end, assaulting Hartwig with numerous shots. Once hitting the side of the net, once sending two players right in front of the net, where they each were robbed of a goal.

Later, UMass was awarded five straight penalty corners in the span of two minutes. But again, Hartwig turned back the home team without a goal. UMass dominated the first 30 minutes of the half, but received a scare in the final five minutes when Dartmouth came to life, firing three of their four shots in the period on Scott. The last five minutes were the Big Green's best of the game.

When the game was tied at the end of 70 minutes, Dartmouth had gained a moral victory. To be tied with the much superior Minutewomen would have been just reward in this weather, but the overtime proved to be a much different story. Philbrick scored immediately and UMass was well on their way to their 13th win of the year. Mara Frattasio scored with 21 seconds left in the overtime period to seal the victory for the Minutewomen.

"We scored two goals in the overtime; we knew they would go down, it was just a matter of time." said Hixon.

Volleyball bitten by Lady Huskies in three games

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Correspondent

In the beginning, it appeared as though the University of Massachusetts women's volleyball found its winning style Monday, but failing to hold on to two leads crippled the Minutewomen (2-19), as they lost to the University of Connecticut 15-13, 15-6, 15-13 at Totman Gymnasium.

"I think losing to Boston College and Yale is taking a toll. It really hit us," said UMass coach Carol Ford. "One minute we're up and the next minute we're down."

UConn dominated the second game and finished UMass off quickly. Committing costly errors in the beginning of second game, the Minutewomen buried themselves in a 7-1 deficit from which they would not recover.

But UMass rebounded in the third, mounting a 6-0 lead as their offense fell into sync. Like the first game, the Minutewomen could do no wrong as there was a total team effort.

However, UMass lost a bit of their composure, allowing the the Lady Huskies in and out of the game. The Minutewomen gave up four unanswered points but two UConn errors and one of Sharon Panoff's 13 kills put UMass back on top, 9-4.

Terrific defense from both teams seesawed the game back and forth, until the score was knotted at 13. Outside hitter Julieta Santiago (6 kills, 8 digs) gave UMass the serve back with a kill down the middle, but that was lost to a UConn kill by Chris Steneck, allowing the Lady Huskies to finish the match on their next two serves.

"We're lacking something," Ford said. "There is no reason for the ups and downs. [UMass] always comes back, but we still don't like losing."

In the first game, the tenacious play of Panoff and captain Nancy Sullivan brought the team together. UMass came out in gangbusters, piling a huge 8-0 lead. Following two UConn scores, Panoff came up with consecutive service aces to push the Minutewomen lead to 10-2.

UMass would score three more times, then suffer a severe turnaround. A well-balanced Huskie scoring attack, headed by Mary Amicucci and Donna Cordeiro, shut down the Minutewomen, and ran off 11 unanswered points.

Ford feels her team's comeback in the third game from the second is an indication of her team's character. "This was a test of how strong we are as a unit. We'll make it if we get through this," Ford said.

UMass definitely came out of the game knowing they didn't lose one to a weak team. "UConn is playing very well right now. They beat Providence," Ford said.

UMass will certainly take that into consideration as they take on PC tonight at 6 at Totman Gym.

Minutemen to finish against Fairfield

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

After hitting a bump (Rutgers), the University of Massachusetts men's soccer team is looking to roll over Fairfield University today on the Hill at 2 p.m.

Starting all seven seniors, the Minutemen are eager to wrap up their 6-9-2 season with a win. For the Atlantic 10 Conference, UMass has tied for third with St. Joseph's University with a conference record of 1-3-0. Rutgers University (4-0-0), Temple University (2-2-0) and the University of Rhode Island(2-2-0) finishing respectively.

Sophomore midfielder Dan Lawrence tries a ball-balancing trick against a Scarlet Knight player in Saturday's 3-2 loss to Rutgers.

Seniors to start their final game against Fairfield include Evan Buxner, Steve Cesnek, Louis Hollmeyer, Doug Karet, Bill Kousmanidis, Tom Skiba and Gael Sullivan. Teammmates rounding out the lineup are freshman Steve Armenti in goal, junior Carl Hanks, sophomore Dan Lawrence and junior Pete McEvoy. Sophomore Darren Stone may be in to substitute for Skiba who has intermittently been bothered by a bum knee.

"We're concerned about not having an emotional letdown, getting a win," said head coach Jeff Gettler. "We need to impress ourselves on them, and if we do so we can win."

Last year's matchup against Fairfield ended in a 3-0 home win. "They have a much better organized team — defense especially — than last year," said Gettler. "This is their coach's second year; they weren't cohesive last year — he's doing a good job."

Fairfield is also coming into this game on a down note. This past weekend Fairfield met Lasalle University, both of whom were tied for second place in the Metro Atlantic Conference. Both teams were 3-1-0 in the MAC, with Lasalle victorious in a 1-0 game. Fairfield finished third in the Southern Division of the MAC.

The game today will also be Fairfield's final game of the season. They are currently 5-8-2 for the year, having had ties with non-conference teams: St. Joseph's (2-2) and URI (1-1). Their only regular-season tournament was the Loyola-Maryland Invitational in which they opposed Loyola (L, 4-0) and Fordham University (L, 1-0), and finished last. Sophomore Tom Graziano made All-Tournament Team for Fairfield.

Senior Scott Samele leads the team in scoring with two goals and two assists. Junior Jack DiNicola is runner up with two goals and one assist, having been honored with MAC All-Academic.

Eason released after refusing cut

FOXBORO (AP) — Tony Eason, who sank from starting quarterback to fourth stringer in just 19 days, was released yesterday by the New England Patriots after he refused to take a substantial pay cut.

Owner Victor Kiam contended that he had agreed last spring to pay $1.1 million this season and $1.25 million in 1990 on the basis that Eason would be the starter. When that changed, Kiam wanted Eason's salary to change, too.

But Eason, as expected, balked, preferring to go on waivers. If he is claimed, his new team would have to pick up the remainder of his two-year contract. If he clears waivers, he would be free to make his own deal at what probably would be a lower salary.

Despite injuries that limited Eason to six games in 1987 and 1988, his agent, Leigh Steinberg, is optimistic that he can have a productive career for another five years.

The Patriots, meanwhile, get nothing for the promising player they took in the first round of the 1983 draft who led them to the 1986 Super Bowl.

With quarterbacks Steve Grogan, Marc Wilson and Doug Flutie also on the roster, Eason was expendable but untradable. His huge contract and the uncertain health of his right arm, which underwent surgery that kept him out of the first 14 games last season, made teams wary.

Eason, frequently booed by home fans, did start the first three games. But he was hampered by occasionally erratic passes, the absence of an injured John Stephens from the running game and the presence of Flutie, the local hero from Boston College who the fans wanted as the starter.

There will be no "Avoiding the Noid" this week as the Progressive Organization for Women's Rights [POWER], helps to organize a boycott of Domino's Pizza from Nov. 1 to Nov. 7 on college campuses across the nation.

The boycott, coordinated by Students Organizing Students, a pro-choice group from New York City, is an effort to unify the pro-choice contingency of students, said Laura Cohen, co-action chairperson of POWER.

"The sole owner and stock holder of Domino's, Thomas Monaghan, has donated at least $100,000 to anti-choice, anti-abortion groups," said Cohen.

There has been considerable debate recently regarding Monaghan's involvement in the anti-abortion movement.

Pro-choice activists question his financial support of the Michigan Right to Life "Committee to End Tax Funded Abortions," and his membership in the Word of God cult, which believes "women are the 'handmaidens of men,' " according to a flyer distributed by the Democratic Socialists of America.

When students buy pizza from Domino's, 3 percent to 5 percent of the franchise royalty goes to Monaghan, Cohen said.

"[Monaghan] can choose to spend his money as he pleases — but so can we," she said.

Cohen said the purpose of the boycott is not only to make a financial impact on the Domino's Corporation, but to also raise awareness about Monaghan's anti-abortion activities.

"Someone asked me, 'Oh, is he in South Africa?,' " Cohen said. "People don't know what's really going on."

According to Cohen and a flyer from SOS, Monaghan is anti-gay, anti-poor, anti-abortion, anti-union, and anti-women — and by his actions, he has implicated his company, Domino's Pizza.

"He is advocating his choice through Domino's," Cohen said, "and we're using our power of choice by boycotting them."

However John Gesauldi, the franchise owner of the Domino's franchise on Route 9, said it is wrong for Domino's to take a stand on any political issue.

"[Monaghan] is an idiot, he's hurt a ton of drivers, and people have been affected across the board," Gesauldi said.

But he added that the boycott will only affect student drivers and his business.

"It's not fair to the local franchise owners," Gesauldi said. "I pay a very low franchise fee — not so much of this money is going to Monaghan. In the long run, [the boycott] is only hurting me and the drivers."

Gesualdi said his business doesn't deserve the boycott — even if it is nationwide. "I've done so much for the University and for the community, and now people are saying 'we're getting Tom Monaghan back, so screw you,' " he said. He also said the boycott will not affect Monaghan, who intends to sell Domino's. "He's stepping down and the company is going to be sold," he said. "They aren't going to be making a point."

But Gina Gombar, co-president of POWER said, "Monaghan has not stepped down yet, and the money from Domino's pizza is still going into his pocket. As long as he's still the owner and the profits are going to him, we will continue the boycott."

Faculty, students to campaign to fight more cuts

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

In response to House Speaker George Keverian's proposal Monday to cut $100 million from state programs, students are mounting a Universitywide campaign to convince legislators to raise taxes, said the faculty coordinator of the Leadership Coalition.

The Leadership Coalition, which consists of faculty unions, campus governments and concerned students, is organizing a campaign that is scheduled to begin Monday.

Sara Lennox, also vice president of the Faculty Union, said the group is following the advice of comedian Bill Cosby, who spoke at a recent fund-raising dinner at the University of Massachusetts, and taking the campaign to the people.

The Leadership Coalition hopes to organize a forum in conjunction with the Board of Trustees to persuade the board to listen to the arguments of students and faculty against fee increases, she said.

Lisa Nelson, student senate chairperson for the committee on public policy, said it is imperative to get the Board of Trustees to listen to the student body's voice before their meeting on Nov. 9.

"The Board of Trustees is responsible for fee increases. We need to focus our energy around their meeting," Nelson said. "We need to push ahead a tax package which will give more support for [public] higher education."

Annual GLB Awareness Week kicks off today

By CHRIS MACEK
Collegian Correspondent

The eighth annual Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Awareness Week kicks off today with Stand With Pride, a rally against homophobia to be held on the Student Union steps at noon.

In years past, this event was held in the spring, and attracted thousands of people to the week-long series of cultural events, speakers, concerts, workshops and films aimed at educating the campus community about gay, lesbian and bisexual concerns.

This year the GLB Awareness Week Planning committee, a group of undergraduate and graduate students, faculty and staff in conjunction with the Program for GLB Concerns and the LBGA, will offer two Mini Awareness Weeks, one each semester, to "meet the growing needs of the campus community," said Felice Yeskel, coordinator at the Program for GLB Concerns.

"The purpose of GLB Awareness Week is to educate and raise the consciousness of the entire university community about gay, lesbian and bisexual issues," said Brad Robinson, planning committee member. "This supports the university in living up to its mission of being a multicultural campus."

The Program for GLB Concerns is sponsoring a Five-College GLB Student Leadership conference as part of UMass transit will keep on truckin' at full throttle

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Although federal funding to the University of Massachusetts Transit Service was slashed by 8 percent and state aid is almost certain to be cut, a $1.3 million reserve in University coffers will ensure that service will not suffer, the transit system manager said.

"I have full confidence that the transit service will hang in there, no sweat," Allan Byam said. "Creative funding may be needed down the line, but the system will not change."

Byam said the Town of Amherst pays about $50,000 a year to fund 50 percent of three routes and all of a fourth. The town will have to raise money to keep the routes running next year, he said.

He said some fund-raising ideas are to: assess businesses on the bus line, seek private donations and instituting a pass system.

Last summer, Amherst Town Manager Barry Del Castilho asked the Public Transportation Committee to recommend at the Spring 1990 Town Meeting the elimination of the Bay Road route.

Thomas Hutcheson, the public transportation committee chairman, said the committee is now looking for alternative funding sources for the Bay Road, West Street, Pine Street and Gatehouse Road runs. The town fully funds the Bay Road route, he said.

"Some people thought it was a quick and easy way to save $25,000. The (public transportation) service we are getting is fantastic and we pay relatively little for it," he said. "We are also looking for ways to enhance service."

Hutcheson suggested putting put bike racks on buses so residents of outlying areas can bring their bikes to campus.

"D.H. Jones (an Amherst realtor) presently pays $5,000 to help support bus service to one of its apartment complexes," he said.

The UMass service operates 40 buses on 14 routes carrying 2.8 million passengers a year, Byam said. The $1 million budget for the 1989-90 school year is composed of $311,000 from the Department of Transportation; $290,000 from the state and $400,000 through fees collected from: UMass students, five colleges incorporated, parking services and the town. Over 85 percent of the riders are students, he said.

Byam said if the program was given no funds for next year enough money would be available in reserves to operate all year. If federal and state money decreased drastically, discussions would be held with the student government, town and five college officials before any alternative funding decisions were made, he said.

The UMass Transit Service is in the third year of a five-year financing plan in which students are charged $10 per semester. The fee will increase to $15 for the next two school years, Byam said.

Both Hutcheson and Byam said it is next to impossible that a fare system will be implemented because 15 cents of every 25 cents would go to run the program.

Fire alleged to be intentionally set

The Department of Environmental Health and Safety and the University of Massachusetts police responded to a fire in Coolidge Residence Hall yesterday morning which police said was intentionally set.

A chair was set on fire in a stairwell on the 22nd floor, police said. The person who put the fire out was questioned by police. The Amherst Fire Department did not respond to the incident.

In other police reports:

- Two women in the Northeast Area reported they received several annoying calls late Thursday night.
- A woman reported to police her purse was stolen yesterday from Boyden Gymnasium.
- A mountain bike was stolen from a rack near Kennedy Residence Hall yesterday. The bike was valued at $400.
- A woman in the Northeast Area reported annoying calls were left on her answering machine yesterday.

Amherst votes against parking excise tax

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

Amherst Town Meeting members voted 98-35 against an article that would have town officials step-up efforts to collect excise payments from college students who park automobiles in Amherst most of the year.

Vincent O'Connor, a town meeting member, said he wanted to make sure the town vigorously pursued all alternative revenue sources before raising property taxes. Massachusetts residents who park cars for a majority of the year in Amherst are required by state law to register them and pay automobile excise tax to Amherst, he said.

"This proposal does not cause people to pay out any large additional funds and it's better than charging local fees which might cause a backlash to town government," O'Connor said.

O'Connor gathered 200 signatures from registered Amherst voters to get the article on the Special Town Meeting warrant.

Nancy Maglione, finance director for the town, investigated the plan and in an Oct. 20 report, stated the proposal could generate between $108,000 and $317,916, but may cost the town up to $250,000 in staffing and enforcement.

University of Massachusetts and Amherst and Hampshire college administrators did not support the article because of added burdens, the report stated.

Richard Minear, a Select Board member, said the board voted 5-0 not to recommend the article to Town Meeting members.

"We have pursued, are pursuing and will continue to pursue all available means (of funding)," he said.

John Eysenbach, a finance committee member, announced the finance committee also voted 5-0 against the article.

Edgar Bisson, a town meeting member, said town officials seemed angry with O'Connor because he recruited signatures and asked for a Special Meeting instead of waiting for the Select Board or finance committee to recommend it to Town Meeting.

"Being criticized comes with being a town official, that goes with public life," he said. "This article should be decided on its merits not on whether it hurts someone's feelings."

Jonathan Hite, the Town Meeting member who introduced the proposal six months ago, said he voted against it because he did not realize the collection and enforcement process would be as complex as it turned out to be.

Howard Ziff, a Town Meeting member and UMass professor, said he thought it was a good idea for Amherst officials to intensify their plan to collect excise tax from students.

"We need the money," he said. "I can't think of a better reason than that."

Debra O'Connell, a UMass student and Town Meeting member, said she voted against it because, "Although I understand the need for new revenue, the University is not the place to look for it."

Senate demands apology

By NATHAN KRYSTALL

The Undergraduate Student Senate voted overwhelmingly last night to demand an apology from Provost Richard O'Brien for calling students "wards" of the University.

"We are not wards of the University," said Owen Broadhurst (Field), who proposed the motion to the senate. "We are adults. We think for ourselves, we decide for ourselves, and we should be given decisions in matters that affect us."

O'Brien, who oversees academic affairs at the University, made the statement last spring at a Faculty Senate meeting in the wake of student protests against Department of Defense-funded research at the University, Broadhurst said.

Campus recycling campaign proves successful in beginning stages

By PRESTON P. FORMAN
Collegian Correspondent

In its first five weeks in operation, the Housing Services Recycling Program has made a substantial impact on reducing the amount of wasted paper at the University of Massachusetts, said the recycling program coordinator.

Sherill Baldwin said the program is responsible for recycling 8.35 tons of newspaper, an approximate 13 percent recovery rate.

"It's a very good rate of recovery for the program so early in the semester," Baldwin said. "It's also exciting because the total each week is increasing dramatically.'

The program, operated out of maintenance and operations at Housing Services, is managed by five paid coordinators. Four oversee residential areas, and 13 students receive credit for their participation, she said.

Some 370 tons of paper waste is produced campuswide, of which newspaper makes up large percentage, according to a report done by a consultimg firm hired by the University.

She said UMass is working with the town of Amherst to look for a way to stop some of this waste and reduce reliance on the town's landfill.

According to Housing Service figures, the consulting firm estimated that 60 percent, or nine tons, of the paper waste could be recycled.

Baldwin said the Orchard Hill Residential Area has recycled more newspaper than any area on campus by a wide margin, collecting more than 5,000 pounds of paper, the equivalent of about 55 trees. More than any other, Field Residence Hall collected more than five pounds per person, equal to about 21 trees.

The Central Area was second with more than 4,000 pounds, or about 44 trees. The Northeast, Southwest North and Southwest South Residential areas each gathered more than 2,000 pounds, she said.

Baldwin said the Sylvan Area collected the least amount of paper, with more than 11,000 pounds, or the equivalent of 12 trees.

UMass hang gliders soar

By BRIAN PURCELL
Collegian Staff

Members of the University of Massachusetts Hang Gliding Club are urging students to get involved with the sport, said Chad Margolin, president of the club.

"It doesn't matter if you're only a few feet off the ground or soaring to high altitudes — it's unlike any other experience," said Margolin.

The sport has gained popularity in the last few years. The introduction of gliding schools, the mass production of gliders, and the newly formed United States Hang Gliding Association have attracted new people to the sport, Margolin said.

"Safety is always a big factor with hang gliding," he said. He added that gliding is much safer now with the use of scientifically designed gliders and better knowledge of the weather.

"The only people who get hurt in hang gliding are the people who push it," said Margolin.

Margolin, who became president of the club in 1986, said membership has increased steadily each semester. One barrier in entering the sport is the expense of gliders, about $2,500. Currently the club owns 9 gliders, which makes learning the sport feasible.

"The purpose of the club is to get people to hang glide as cheap as possible," he said.

The club holds two or three weekend lesson sessions each semester at Morningside Flight School in Claremont, New Hampshire.

Once the beginning student has completed the lessons, he can fly at Morningside with one of the club's instructors. The next step in learning is to Unite against homophobia

Today's noon rally against homophobia marks the beginning of Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Awareness Week.

The purpose of this week is to raise the level of awareness in our community and to bolster pride within the lesbian, bisexual and gay community.

Awareness and understanding of these communities has been severely lacking in substance here at UMass. Homophobic incidents run rampant on this campus, as well in society as a whole. These incidents need to be dealt with, whether it be through education, awareness weeks, through the social rejection of homophobic behavior, or all three.

Last week, the Massachusetts State Senate passed a bill addressing discrimination against gays, lesbians, and bisexuals in employment, credit and housing.

The success of this bill should prove as a further incentive to the gay, lesbian and bisexual communities to continue their fight against discrimination.

As a university — as students, faculty, and administrators — we should all support the efforts of the gay, lesbian, and bisexual communities, and strive to create a campus free from homophobia.

The future is overrated

The future, that's what we have all been waiting for. The time is coming when life will really begin. Sometime in the future, life will be better and more exciting.

Since we were kids, we anticipated the future when we could be like our older brothers or sisters, or when we could act like mom and dad. We would play house and pretend that we had our own families who often consisted of our stuffed animals like Winnie the Pooh, Curious George and Piglet.

Minu Sebastian

If you are a girl, you would often receive toys like little stoves and sinks, so you could act like mom or dad does in the kitchen. If you are a boy, you would get toys like lawnmowers or a tool kit, so you could act like mom or dad does in the yard or around the house.

Then you started school and you enjoyed yourself, but there was something about the older kids that amazed you. On the bus, they all sat in the back and made a lot of noise. You couldn't wait to be like them.

You're finally in junior high and you can sit in the back of the bus. You are happy about this, but you really don't enjoy it very long. The high school kids have started to drive cars and you can't wait to get a license.

While in high school, you are having a good time driving your car to school. But now the focus is on what you are going to do once you graduate. Better start doing well in school and join some clubs because you want to be a well-rounded student so you can get into a good college.

As your junior and senior year approaches, the pressure increases. You have to take the SAT's. Your parents, teachers and friends keep asking you what you are going to do for a career and what you want to major in. Suddenly you begin to get mail from various colleges around the country asking for you and your money.

After about two years of hectic planning and pressure, you choose a college and a prospective major. Once in college, you feel good that you finally made it here. But the fun has only begun. Each semester is filled with papers, exams and deadlines.

After two years of steady and stable stress, you have to make a final decision about what you want your major to be. Since you have been planning for this moment since your twelfth birthday, you should not have much trouble.

Now that you are a senior with a chosen major, it's about time to start enjoying life, right? Wrong. Now it's time to start planning for the GRE's, LSAT's, your resume and interviews. You juggle your time between classes, studying and planning the rest of your life. That leaves you a few hours to sleep and eat.

Once you've graduated with a degree, you start to feel good like you've accomplished something. But if you are like many, the cycle continues. You start graduate school and before you know it you are thinking and living in terms of the future.

You've finally landed a job, and you have a seemingly steady life. It must be time to start living your life. You are able to experience some care-free and happy times, but they are balanced with plenty of thoughts of the future.

The future is overrated. Since we were children, we have been socialized into looking to the future for security, stability and fulfillment. But the reality is that we are here each day to live our lives. Planning for the future is important, but it shouldn't take up the majority of our time. We should be more concerned with today and what we can do to make the most of it.

Otherwise, we could be missing out on life.

DON'T TELL ME WE GOT BURNED AGAIN...!!
PANAMA

I'm having chest pains

Both of my grandmothers are upwards of 80 years old. Age considered, they're both in fairly good health, although my maternal grandmother needs the help of a walker to get around the house.

Sometimes I worry about her. She spends a lot of time alone in the house, and if she ever were to fall or faint or get dizzy, she would certainly have trouble getting to the phone.

Cosmo Macero Jr.

I became really interested one day when I saw an ad on television for this medical alert system. The person wears a transmitter or walkie talkie-like device around his/her neck. If they fall, trip or feel extraordinarily sick, all they need to do is push a button on the device and call for help. The medical alert headquarters then goes into action, alerting EMTs, police and concerned relatives within minutes.

The product, no doubt, must be ridiculously expensive, though it's tough to put a price tag on peace of mind, especially when loved ones are concerned. I mentioned the ad to my parents, and they too expressed interest . . . especially in the cost.

The first commercial I saw was presented simply, and in an informative manner. Subsequent ads, however, have gotten a bit out of hand, and I now question the motives of this company.

You may be familiar with the most recent of the medical alert commercials. An elderly woman is sprawled on her back in the bathroom, a look of terror on her face, she clutches the transmitter around her neck and crys, "I've fallen, and I can't get up!"

In another instance, an older man grasps his rib cage in apparent agony. He calls into the little box, "I'm having chest pains!"

Sort of a shock value approach to getting viewers thinking about the old folks in their families, the ad is an attention-getter, as well as a source of comic relief for many. Not that the thought of a senior citizen in distress is the least bit funny, but this dramatic lesson in household tragedies is a bit much.

The real killer is a commercial I haven't seen in quite some time. This one shows an old woman falling head over heels down a flight of stairs. This is no little stumble here. It looks like she took a blindside hit from Ronnie Lippett. To make matters worse, we see a doctor checking the woman's heartbeat and pulse, and then he looks up and shakes his head. Wasn't the fall enough? Did we have to see her officially pronounced dead? Why don't they just show us the autopsy?

I'm very curious.

Who are these stunt senior citizens? Are they professionals? Is their a union they belong to? How's the pay? Benefits? They must be getting something out of it other than the glory and satisfaction of feigning an untimely death on late night television.

I think they're just actors dressed like the elderly . . . but they sure look authentic.

I don't think my grandmother would care for the medical alert system anyways. She's pretty spunky . . . maybe she should be in one of the commercials. "I'm having dizzy spells . . ."

Notes from the Basement

Do you want to meet a celebrity, star of sloppy stories and horrible headlines? (Just kidding.) Anyway Al Kaufperson(man) of the Arts page is providing this week's place for consuming mass quantities at cheap prices.

Peter Leon

Al recommends the Hadley Pub on Fridays for their all-you-can-eat $2 buffet from 4p.m. to 6:30 p.m.. (He is pretty sure anyway.) Since this is the only meal Al can afford with his Collegian pay, you can find him there and chat.

I hope the SGA senate does something stupid soon. They are actually almost kinda sorta accomplishing stuff. My whole sense of reality is at stake here, if they actually got through a whole agenda and passed motions that got student empowerment going again, it could cause gravity to reverse itself.

I went to see Into The Woods Tuesday night. If you missed it, you are bummin'. It was a great weaving of many a fairy tale together, explaining all those minor inconsistencies that have cropped up over the centuries.

The Women's Issues editors have gotten a lot of flack about printing the story about Ted Marvelias and the pro-life group he leads on the page.

I have to question the women complaining about this one. First, aren't there women who are pro-life? Doesn't the newspaper owe it to its readers to present all points of view, so people can make informed, rational decisions?

Second, Ted has been called a misogynist. If he is, isn't this also a subject this page has to address? Or is it something that the paper should ignore and just hope it goes away?

Just my questions on whether or not this page has a responsibility to address all women and all their issues.

Have you complained to your local representative this week?

The parody issue was met with few complaints this year, so far, anyway. First complaint is that is wasn't funny enough. Hey, if you need to totally insult someone to laugh, see a shrink. Second, why was Chancellor Duffey picked on again? Because everyone knows who he is, and he hopefully got a good chuckle himself. Funniest things were: The Vacu-phlegm ad and the disclaimer saying to send all complaints to John Dunlap.

Fans: It's time to turn off the tube and go to the game

There is a strange relationship between television and college athletics. It seems nowadays that a team can't be successful without the help of the big tube.

Look at all of the "big-time" basketball programs. North Carolina, Indiana, Syracuse, Georgetown, etc. These are the names you see splattered all over the networks and ESPN every week.

With this in mind, the University of Massachusetts tried to promote the image of its football program by striking a package deal with WGGB-TV, Channel 40 of Springfield. Channel 40 would cover all five UMass home games this season from Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium, and broadcast the games throughout Western Mass.

On the surface, it seems like a good idea. A little added revenue for the UMass athletic program from sponsorship, etc.

In essence, the results have been pretty disastrous.

The bottom line when promoting an athletic program is single-fold: get fans to your games. The old "put the meat in the seats" axiom.

True, UMass hasn't had a good tradition of generating a lot of fan interest. McGuirk has never been filled to its 16,000-seat capacity. And the fact that the administration takes it upon itself to do remarkable things like scheduling Homecoming during a long weekend — when nobody is here, will not help matters there.

But the new TV deal appears to be little more than a step backward.

Now don't get me wrong. I'm not saying that television is bad for athletics. If ABC or CBS were to walk into the offices of Boyden today and announce that it wanted to broadcast a UMass game, I don't think people could jump at the deal fast enough. Of course, that's being unrealistic.

Jim Clark

On a more simple note, take New England Sports Network. The cable sports station has a range that covers most of New England, which is considerably wider than anything Channel 40 can offer. Another thing NESN provides is a way to access people in the Boston area, the people who need to realize, in more ways than one, that there is life beyond Route 495 and Boston College.

The same would be true of a game on ESPN or some other network. That would be a showcase of UMass to people in parts of the country who otherwise wouldn't show any interest, or even know that UMass exists.

But Channel 40, as good as its intentions may be, is defeating the purpose. Whereas the UMass radio network broadcasts all games, home and away, Channel 40 is taking care of only home games. This is where the problem arises.

You're a UMass fan, sitting at home in Agawam, debating whether you want to go to the big game. The weather is kind of cold, and it looks like it may rain. In most cases, if you're a die-hard fan, you'd probably pack up the blankets and the umbrella and head for Amherst.

But suddenly you realize that the big game is on television. Ahh, an alternative, in the comfort of your own home. Naturally, the decision is made for you. You stay home, plopped on the couch with some beer and popcorn.

This is exactly what happened a couple of weeks ago, when UMass hosted Delaware. It was a make-or-break game for the Minutemen, but the weather was a little iffy. The result? Only 4,780 people showed up, easily the worst crowd to grace McGuirk in a long time. With cold weather just around the corner, and the season winding down on UMass, there isn't much hope for a sudden explosion of attendance.

Channel 40 has just a one-year deal with UMass, and if nobody shows up for the final games against Richmond (this Saturday) and New Hampshire, maybe the administration will realize the terrible mistake it made.

Last week was Civility Week. The week was designed to help promote civility on a campus that has been rocked by a multitude of racial, homophobic, sexist and anti-Semitic incidents of violence and harassment through a series of forums, lectures and events.

Was this week a success? Did anyone learn anything? Was a civility week necessary? Send your submissions to the Editorial desk by 4:00 p.m., Nov. 9 for next Friday's Point/Counterpoint page.

The pains of separation

He sits impatiently in the briskness of the airport, awaiting the soft landing of her airplane. The numbers on the screen overhead flash "delay" with an almost sinister glare. His stomach tumbles nervously as he tries to focus his mind on the sweet contours of her face. He twitches back and forth trying to predict the slice of time they are about to share.

Josh Galitsky

The plane finally lands, yet crawls its way slowly to the gate. His pacing grows intense as he awaits the moment of rediscovery. Waves of strangers pass down the ramp, each one causing an acidic pinch in the pit of his stomach. Finally, it is her and their eyes taste the sweetness of reality. They hold each other silently, drinking in the solidity and substance of their reunion.

Their thoughts and emotions readjust to being together. They are two again, no longer one. Somewhere in their minds they hear the faint ticking of a clock, but they ignore it. They choose to kiss instead and soak in the goodness of their present truth. They make the transition. They feel they are once again where they should be.

Their time is glorious. The world is shut out, uninvited to their celebration. They focus every piece of themselves on each other. They laugh and weep and share. They are strong. They are happy. They know harmony.

The clock grows louder but they refuse to listen. The ticking becomes a thief trying to steal the here and now. They hold one another closer, tighter, longer. Their embrace quells the volume. It soothes their tired spirits. It quiets the ugly face of slipping time.

The ticking grows louder. They can no longer ignore its intensity. Time slides too quickly as if with a force to try and topple them. They cannot be ungrounded as they stand locked arm in arm. They quietly accept the injustice of their situation.

They return to the coldness of the airport. Her plane is on time, ready to seize her from him without regret or hesitation. Their goodbye is too rushed. Its suddenness salts his wounds. They kiss goodbye and promise to hold on. Their struggle resumes again as she vanishes up the ramp.

The emptiness rushes over him, around him, and through him. She is gone. He feels the emptiness take hold of him, another tiny death. All the people he passes become sadistic strangers. The world closes around him. He can no longer protect or inspire. He is alone again.

The spaces around him become defined. The emptiness of the passenger's seat, the stillness of his room, all become invisible hell. The images of her in his head move around too much and the photos on his wall are too still. He hates the sculpting of his memories. He hates being forced to accept their separation when he knows it is all wrong. He hates that the pain never stops, it only strengthens and weakens.

Nobody can understand his masochism. Nobody can understand why he chooses to commit to this with his soul. He simply has hope in the future. He simply has faith in her. Deep inside of him, beyond the suffering, beyond the loneliness, beyond it all, he knows something. He knows he loves her. He knows she is the one.

Cosby visit challenges students

On Oct. 29, I was fortunate enough to represent the Graduate Employee Organization and attend the $100/plate dinner at which Bill Cosby was the guest speaker. The message he sent to the audience of faculty and administrators, was that it does not take any special intelligence to stop the budget cuts, but action, immediate action.

Cosby said the one thing that politicians fear is organization, suggesting that each of us call and write our state representatives, asking at least 20 of our friends and neighbors to do the same. If several individuals all call or write with the same short and to the point message, then the politicians will fear we are well organized and know they had better listen to our message.

Cosby praised the student rally over budget cuts in Boston, suggesting that the students were showing stronger leadership than the administration here at UMass, particularly Chancellor Duffey. He made light of Duffey on several occasions in his speech and suggested that he and other administrators need to take a much stronger leadership role if they expect others to do so.

It seemed strange that Cosby, who surely ranks among the most respected comedians of our nation, has offered the answer to our problems. But then is it? He mentioned that he could not understand how it was that with all the intellects here, who sit and ponder the most puzzling questions this universe has to offer, not one has realized that it is they themselves who have it within their power to make or break this university.

Is it not this same insightfulness that has made Cosby as well respected in his profession as he is today? Will Rogers, from what I understand, became one of our country's most famous comedians (political satirist) by telling the politicians of his time just how things were,as he saw them. Cosby, some may argue, had as great an effect on this country and its political and moral direction as did Will Rogers.

As Cosby said it so well, "It does not take any special intelligence to stop the budget cuts at UMass. It takes action."

Please have your voice heard in the Statehouse.

As students, we can take Cosby's challenge one step further by speaking to 20 acquaintances on campus and 20 family members and friends when we return home for Thanksgiving. Further, what better way to have your voice heard in Boston than to vote in the next state election. Register to vote . . .Just do it.

An obsession with difference

Is the Collegian guilty of printing racist material? It sees most everything in terms of race and inequality.

The Collegian has reported "racial incidents", which when all the facts became available, were suddenly no longer considered racist for the simple reason that these "incidents" were not between people of different races, but between people of the same race.

Here at UMass, there doesn't need to be any evidence, because any conflict between people of different races is automatically labelled racist. This is a point of view which recognizes no circumstance but skin color and race. This is ignorant and irrational. Such attitudes illustrate the singular obsession of so-called progressive minds with anything that makes us different.

There is no excuse for such irresponsible journalism especially when you understand the polarization and tension that is whipped up by such headlines. This sensationalism offers no useful solutions and in no way helps people resolve their differences. It merely makes people more aware of their differences.

If the Collegian wants to consider itself progressive and not completely hypocritical, it must make an effort to treat all people equally when reporting about both minorities and non-minorities. The Collegian and the rest of the so-called progressive people should dare examine themselves as closely as they examine us.

Try to build a stronger movement

As a UMass alumnus who has been active with the People for a Socially Responsible University for the past six months, I would like to respond to some of the ideas expressed in Beth Gately's article, "The PSRU: friend or foe?"(Oct. 27).

For starters, Gately notes that most students have "been silent, giving ever indication of ambivalence." Yet, I would argue that such traits do not occur in a vacuum. In fact, from the earliest age, we have all been conditioned to passivity and obedience. The renowned social critic Noam Chomsky names the culprit as "a remarkably effective ideological system." But how does something as intangible as social conditioning impact PSRU and UMass specifically?

Students are subtly encouraged to separate the financial cutbacks hitting the university and the five-fold increase in research monies from the Department of Defense since 1981. The ruling elites would have us perceive educational cuts as an uncontrollable tragedy akin to Hurricane Hugo.

This reinforces the notion that DOD money is needed, and besides, who dare question the authority of the Department of Defense?

As a microcosm of the society, students would see that education is deemed a far lower budget priority than military spending both in Massachusetts and in the nation as a whole. The outrageous overkill that the U.S. military now possesses — capable of killing every Soviet citizen 50 times — has been accomplished by the gutting of domestic spending both here and in the Soviet Union.

As the Cold War belatedly approaches, why are such unconscionable levels of military spending being maintained? And as the percentage of research money derived from the Pentagon has escalated at UMass from 4 percent in 1981 to 21 percent, is it mere coincidence that the University Without Walls, the Everywoman's Center and the remedial math program have been cut or eliminated? No, non-traditional students likely to demand change are hit.

The students in Gately's article who thought that PSRU needed "more organization" or who felt "I'm not sure protests are an effective means" (of banishing the DOD) are invited to help build a stronger movement. The alternative is to sit back while the University and the country cries out for direction. If you do not get involved now, when will you?

In other news

Joan and I had talked several times when she finally said, "Why don't you let me know when the President plans to go out? I could tell you if those are good days or bad days."

Well, I thought, what's the harm in that? And so once or twice a month I would talk with Joan (sometimes by appointment, sometimes not). I would have Ronnie's schedule in front of me, and what I wanted to know was very simple: were specific dates safe or dangerous? If, for example, Ronnie was scheduled to give a speech in Chicago on May 3, should he leave Washington that morning, or the previous afternoon?

People seem to be fascinated by the logistics of all this, but it was really quite simple . . . When Joan got back to me with her advice on specific dates, I would, if necessary, call Michael Deaver, who was in charge of Ronnie's schedule. Sometimes a small change was made. Beginning in 1985, I would do the same with Donald Regan, who began then as Ronnie's chief of staff.

While astrology was a factor in determining Ronnie's schedule, it was never the only one, and no political decision was ever made based on it.

I knew, of course, if this ever came out, it could prove embarrassing to Ronnie — although I never imagined just how embarrassing.

State deficit could grow as tax collection lags behind

BOSTON (AP) —The state's budget deficit could exceed even the pessimistic $500 million estimate of a state advisory board because tax collections are slipping so badly, Revenue Commissioner Stephen Kidder said yesterday.

Kidder said October tax collections fell $35 million below state's official estimates issued in August.

Kidder said while he was unable to provide an exact dollar figure, the $600.4 million collected in October was even less than the Revenue Advisory Board had projected. That is the panel that predicted a deficit of $500 million.

Jordan's magic fingers return to the Valley

By BILL ROSENBLATT
Collegian Staff

Guitarist Stanley Jordan will be performing solo at the Iron Horse in Northampton next Friday night (2 shows, 7 p.m. and 10 p.m.). If you are a guitar freak, that is probably all you need to know. Otherwise, read on and find out about this extraordinary musician.

Stanley Jordan is the most important electric guitarist since Jimi Hendrix. He has revolutionized guitar playing with his "touch" technique: he uses both hands on the fretboard and "taps" the strings instead of picking or strumming. Although rock guitarists like Eddie Van Halen and Adrian Belew use this technique for occasional ornamentation, Jordan has based his entire style around it.

He started out on piano as a child in California, and didn't switch to guitar until high school. He presumably developed his touch technique as a way of playing piano-like counterpoint on the guitar. As a student at Princeton, he played with the fusion band Timepiece, and gained a campus-wide following through his frequent, often impromptu solo concerts. He would dazzle audiences by improvising continuously for an hour or more, touching on every kind of music from jazz to pop to classical to ethnic on the way.

Valley Jazz

After graduating in 1981, he scuffled on New York City streets. He was offered various record deals, but turned them down because he wasn't offered total artistic control. His proverbial "Big Break" came three years later when Blue Note, one of the most important jazz record labels, was being resurrected after over a decade of dormancy. Amid a flurry of publicity, they signed Jordan as their first new artist. He became famous overnight. Magic Touch, his debut album for Blue Note, reached number two on the Billboard jazz charts; he appeared on the Tonight Show, on the cover of Guitar Player magazine and elsewhere; and he received a Grammy nomination.

Magic Touch was quite representative of his eclectic influences. The material spanned jazz standards and pop covers as well as his own compositions, including the adventurous "Return Expedition." His cover of Michael Jackson's "The Lady in My Life" became a minor hit, but it was not seen as a conciliation to the pop marketplace, because pop just happens to be one kind of music he likes.

However, subsequent albums went further and further towards sellout, and his latest, Flying Home, is an unabashedly commercial effort that sounds uncomfortably like George Benson (The album is doubly offensive to jazz purists because its title is stolen from an historically important Lionel Hampton/Illinois Jacquet collaboration.).

Nevertheless, Stanley Jordan is well worth seeing, especially as a solo act. First of all, those who accuse him of selling out of jazz should bear in mind that he is not really a "jazz" musician. He has been marketed as such, presumably because he is an instrumentalist who improvises and is partially influenced by jazz. In fact, he studied computer music in college, and he is currently working on ways to get his Macintosh to respond to his improvisations.

Secondly, his technique is simply astounding. If you close your eyes, you will swear that more than one musician is playing. If you are a guitarist, you will think that what he does defies the laws of physics, and you will feel like going home and setting fire to your guitar. He avoids sounding cold and technical by using big, rich, warm chords and by playing very expressively.

Barbers and beauticians to treat to your tresses

Hair. What is it about this stringy, sometimes straight, sometimes curly stuff atop our heads that grows and grows? Is it time for you to get a haircut?

Amherst has many places to get your special kind of cut, whether it be just a trim or a shocking buzz. The seemingly most popular hairdresser establishment deemed so by students is Hair East, which is located in the center of Amherst. At Hair East, a cut costs $13 to $15 depending on the hairdresser. Those wanting something a little more daring like a perm or highlighting, should expect prices from $35 and up.

"We do accept walk-ins here at Hair East," explained Assistant Manager Rachel Alves. "But it is always nice to have an appointment written in the book. And, the walk in service only applies to those seeking haircuts, not perms or colorings."

A small, two-person operation exists at the Amherst Hair Company, but don't let its smallness fool you. A shampoo, cut and blowdry will only cost you from $15 to $16.

"We've been really busy here," commented Michael Pendergast," "It's more convenient for the customer if they call ahead of time so they don't have to wait."

Styles By Deborah, located on 65 University Drive, has had its hands full of hair.

ABOUT TOWN

"This time of year, it's busy for us, due to the upcoming holidays," said Sue MacInnis, an employee at Styles By Deborah. "It's a good idea to call a couple of days in advance for an appointment, but we do take walk-ins if we're not too busy."

Here, a shampoo, cut and dry costs $18. A simple trim is $15, and if you want curly, a perm costs between $50 and $60.

Dellaria Salons is the best and most expensive in town. Here, the price of the cut depends on the length of hair, starting at $18. Perms start at $50 for the easy, simple type of hair, and increases depending on the length and style.

"It's been a little slower than usual," said Carmen Rivera. "We have six stylists on staff whom our customers usually ask for by name."

So, if you are due for a cut, try one of these establishments in the Amherst area. And remember, if for some reason you don't like your new cut, hair grows back, eventually.

■ student senate

According to Broadhurst's motion, the senate will "demand . . . the retraction of the offending phrase by the provost and an apology from the provost." By the term "offending phrase," Broadhurst said he is referring specifically to the word "ward."

"It will force the provost to make it clear that we are not his wards," he said. "It will make a statement that students will not stand for being disempowered by the administration."

Student Trustee Eric Nakajima said he supported the motion because he thinks it is important for the student senate to understand the process of empowerment.

"We, as citizens of legal age, have rights and obligations that extend beyond the legal term 'ward,' " Nakajima said.

In other business, the senate voted against allocating $1,405 to the Organization of Marxist Studies to send students to the March for Women's Lives in Washington, DC on Nov. 12.

Chris Lycette (Patterson), chairman of the SGA Finance Committee, said he voted against allocating the money because the request for funds did not follow normal SGA procedure.

"The request did not go through the finance committee. It went straight to the senate floor," Lycette said.

Chairperson of the SGA Public Policy Committee Lisa Nelson (Commuter), one of the senators who supported the request, said, "It says that the senate cares more about procedure than ideology and issues."

■ recycling

She said she does not know why Orchard Hill collects more paper than other areas. She guessed that students in Orchard Hill read more papers than students in other residential areas.

"What we did not figure when we were planning the program was how many papers students read each day," she said. "It tends to vary."

Baldwin said original plans called for the recycling of glass and high grade paper as well, but the program had to be scaled back because of budget cuts.

She added that next semester she hopes to have more students involved.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your inventive spirit will command the admiration and envy of those with greater financial assets. Give free rein to your creativity. The next few months hold rich promise for those involved in the arts; many will find wealthy and protective patrons. Learn to be more selective in romance. An overly possessive or dependent partner could make you feel like a prisoner. Set a good example for younger family members.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: Maryland Gov. William D. Schaefer, frontiersman Daniel Boone, movie actress Ann Rutherford, French Queen Marie Antoinette.

ARIES(March 21-April 19): The financial outlook is better than in recent past. Your intuition is on target. Be willing to take on additional responsibilities. Your paycheck will be fatter if you are indispensable.

TAURUS(April 20-May 20): Self-improvement activities enjoy favorable influences. Someone is working behind the scenes to advance your cause. Be patient. Progress will be seen in the near future. Romantic partner responds to a nurturing approach.

GEMINI(May 21-June 20): Work goes smoothly so long as you do not attempt to exert pressure on others. Pay special attention to correspondence. Encouraging financial news awaits you. Romance begins to heat up. Be discreet.

CANCER(June 21-July 22): Devote the morning to commonplace tasks, run-of-the-mill requests. Be careful not to overlook any due bills. Legal loopholes should be shunned where a property deal is concerned.

LEO(July 23-Aug. 22): Make an effort to get on better terms with your co-workers and business associates. Your base of operations may have to be expanded soon. Check into an unusual financial opportunity without delay.

VIRGO(Aug. 23-Sept. 22): Current changes will benefit you even if you do not realize it right away. Do you simply sit back and let things happen. Choose a specific course of action in business and romance.

LIBRA(Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Try not to overreach. Accomplish as much as possible through regular channels. Distant affairs can be profitable if you keep on top of the latest developments in your field. Attend seminars.

SCORPIO(Oct. 23-Nov. 21): A good time to concentrate on paperwork and financial figures. Accountant's advice could prove invaluable. Appearances can be deceiving in a personal relationship. Reach out to a special someone.

SAGITTARIUS(Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Guide your career from behind the scenes for a while. A promotion or pay raise could be in the works. Make a greater effort to obtain information that has been withheld in the past.

CAPRICORN(Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It may be necessary to check the account books in order to devise a more workable budget. Know who your real friends are. The object of your affections reciprocates! Avoid impulsive promises.

AQUARIUS(Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The emphasis now is on guarding your reputation. Avoid indulging in gossip or giving cause for any. Teamwork will help you boost profits at work. Give co-workers an incentive for cooperating.

PISCES(Feb. 19-March 20): Be cautious. Certain individuals may pose as friends in order to ferret out confidential information. You rebound quickly following a setback. Romantic partner is a source of inspiration.

Opportunities for Computer Science Graduates

Jump into an entry-level career that will take you places at EDS.

In an EDS developmental program, your career potential can reach new heights. You'll gain the rewarding on-the-job experience you need to move your career years ahead — experience you can only gain from a world leader in the management of information technology.

EDS is looking for achievers — people who make things happen. If you are interested in applying your talents in the information processing services industry, you won't find a better place to grow than EDS.

Our highly respected developmental programs are nationally recognized as models for the industry. They provide technical challenge, professional expertise and the business savvy you'll need to become one of the industry's best-prepared professionals.

Research Systems Engineering Development (RSED) Program

- A bachelor's degree in Computer Science with a minimum 3.5/4.0 overall GPA preferred
- Willingness to relocate to the Dallas, Texas, area
- Excellent written and oral communication skills

The RSED program instruction includes hands-on and classroom education in artificial intelligence, expert systems and advanced systems architecture. Each class uses our CASE tool, INCA, to analyze, design and build an information processing system. Students work at the EDS national headquarters in Plano, Texas. Class size is limited to 16, and students use Sun workstations and Macintosh computers for classroom instruction. Upon completion of the program, graduates are responsible for analyzing, designing, developing and building systems and tools to maintain and enhance our level of technology.

Take the first step toward achieving your highest career potential.

■ GLB Awareness Week

Awareness Week. Workshops are scheduled for Saturday and Sunday.

The workshops will give GLB students and their allies an opportunity to network, share stories from their campuses, learn and practice new skills, discover area resources and build a greater sense of community among the Five Colleges, according to Yeskel.

A Coffee House will wrap up the conference Sunday at 7 p.m. at the Blue Wall. Storyteller Robert King, singer-songwriters Aro Veno and Eric Wheeler, actors Tone Nunes and Paul Specht, and Poet Kol, all members of the local GLB community, will provide a variety of entertainment for the evening.

Monday night's presentation of Gay Life ... Into the 90's will explore GLB communities and lifestyles on a national level. Sue Hyde from the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force will emphasize the political situation and current issues of the GLB community while Neil Miller, author of In Search of Gay America will highlight the personal or people-oriented side of GLB people across the country.

Multicultural Perspectives Through Literature and Performance will offer an evening of entertainment. Essex Hemphill, a gay African American, will read his poetry; Jyl Lynn Felman, a Jewish lesbian writer, will read some of her short stories; and Muriel Miguel, a native American lesbian and director of the Spiderwoman Theatre, will perform three original monologues.

Awareness Week will end Wednesday with Gay Civil rights in Massachusetts, a presentation by Steven Tierney; co-chair of the Mass. Gay and Lesbian Political Caucus. He will discuss the long struggle for passage of the Gay Rights Bill, what it took to do it and where they will go once it is law.

All of these events are free and open to the public. A full schedule of events with time and place is listed in Wednesday's Collegian.

become certified by the U.S.H.A. as a Hang 1 pilot, which allows the pilot to fly solo.

Depending on the beginner's natural ability, becoming a Hang 1 pilot is fairly easy to do, he said.

"Gliding provides a lot of excitement, but also a deep sense of tranquility," Margolin said. "It's so peaceful up there . . . a lot of people hang glide because it's an escape. It's a thrill."

Margolin urged any student or faculty member in the Five College area interested in hang gliding to attend club meetings.

The club's bulletin, which lists information on meetings and activities, is located across form the Outing Club's board in the Student Union. For further information, contact Chad Margolin at 546-2022.

■ Leadership Coalition

Lennox said the proposed cuts could not only result in fee increases, but up to 150 faculty and staff layoffs.

Nelson said Keverian's $855 million-a-year tax package has been delayed in the House Ways and Means Committee and has yet to reach the state House of Representatives for debate.

She also said the prospective $100 million cuts could mean the elimination of the Board of Regents.

Lennox said despite these facts, the coalition is determined to persuade the legislature through the power of the voice of students at UMass.

"The Leadership Committee has the position of no cuts, no tuition increases," she said. "We have to convince people it's in their interest to spread the economic burden around."

The campaign will include calling legislators, and sending postcards that urge tax hikes as a means of generating state revenue, Lennox said.

She said the group is also considering a trip to Boston to hand deliver the postcards to the Statehouse.

Renee Heberle, spokesperson of the graduate employee organization, said she hopes the students will respond to this campaign.

"The Leadership Coalition is putting out a call to the campus community," Heberle said. "We need to take it to the people in order to be heard."

Although the details for next week's campaign are still being worked out, Lennox urged students to call their legislators to support a tax increase. She also called for faculty and teaching assistants to announce the campaign in their classes.

"Students need to call on their own legislators to support the proposed tax package," she said. "They need to know 'we'll support you if you support us.' "

Minutemen boot Fairfield, 1-0

Men's soccer winds up season on a positive note

By ADRIENNE MATT
Collegian Staff

Ta-da. They're done with the season and University of Massachusetts men's soccer team head coach Jeff Gettler couldn't be more pleased with the results (7-9-2).

"I'm glad we could finish on an up note," said Gettler. "I saw a good amount of intensity and committment."

The Minutemen beat Fairfield University yesterday in a 1-0 home game, ending their season. "Offensively we dominated play but the results didn't reflect our efforts which was frustrating for the players and the whole team," he said. "It was difficult to get a goal today.

"Overall, defensively, we did a real nice job," Gettler said. "Our defense has been a hallmark of our last seven games."

In the first five minutes of the game, the offense played tightly. As the game continued, the tight play wound down, became more losely constructed.

The number of shots on goal reflected the persistence of the UMass team as they fired diligently upon Fairfield, 37 to 12. Fouls committed were fairly even-handed with UMass having 17 and Fairfield having 18.

During one of many offensive attacks, sophomore Brett Anthony and senior Steve Cesnek initiated the play, feeding senior Doug Karet for his first and only goal of the season with under two minutes remaining in the half. Shortly afterward, Fairfield sophomore John Gallagher received a yellow card, only to later be expelled with a red card with nine minutes left in the game.

The game was sporadic and compelling to watch. The referees made some questionable calls which eventually prompted a "chat" between Fairfield head coach Dejan Cokic and the referee. The ref politely asked the coach to keep his mouth shut.

"We've had our share of bad luck," Gettler said of the season as a whole. "Unfortunately, we've had some poor decisions go against us."

Also receiving yellow cards were UMass' sophomore Pete McEvoy and Fairfield's goalie, senior Jim Kallio. Kallio finished the game with 12 saves, as freshman Steve Armenti ended the game with four saves.

Armenti started 14 of 18 games, seven of those being shutouts. He finished the season with 67 saves and a goals against average of .98.

"Again we had an outstanding defensive performance with [senior] Tom Skiba directing our efforts and [senior] Gael Sullivan consistently shutting down our opponent's offense," said Gettler. "Our backs were not giving up chances and they looked to get dangerous.

"Nothing came easy for us this year. We seemed to take the hard road. I'm particularly happy about the last seven games we've played," he said. "We came and fought. I'm happy with the turnaround we made. We're a real good team and I don't feel our record reflected our potential."

Random thoughts about Eason, etc.

Jim Clark

Tony Eason is gone.

Finally.

Regardless of what side of the issue you may be on, the fact remains that the move had to be made. Maybe Eason got treated unfairly by the Patriots, maybe not. But consider this.

If you were to translate Eason's job performance over the past two months to any other workplace in the world, and he would have been fired long ago. Simply put, management on any level can't afford to shell out wads o' bucks to someone who is just going to sit around collecting dust.

For a couple of examples, take Bob Stanley and Rich Gedman. Both were making seven figures a year, and for what? Gedman had one good year, and couldn't hit his weight anymore. (Actually, if he could do that, he'd be a superstar.) Stanley would have been a good pitcher at $100,000 per annum, but not a million.

With Eason making $1.1m to parade the sidelines in street clothes, it became a matter of economics. The Pats offered a pay cut, and he wouldn't take it. In this day and age, where athletes are under the thumbs of their agents, no one is going to take less money. So that option was out of the question.

But even if he did, there was the fan factor. As Boston Globe columnist Bob Ryan stated this morning, the fans of Foxboro hated Eason, loved to shower him with barbs and taunts. Eason would never have survived another down at Sullivan Stadium. The time had come for the boy from Illinois to walk.

Maybe Tony will do all right somewhere else. Personally, he never did anything for me. He seemed too soft-spoken, didn't express himself as a leader, and wasn't the gamer that you could count on with the game on the line.

I will never forgive Dick Steinberg, the director of player personnel, for passing on Dan Marino. Dandy Dan, he of Isotoner glove fame, was taken 14 whole spots behind Eason in the 1983 draft. At last glance, Marino was still one of the league's best.

That brings up another point. With Eason now gone, that makes three number one picks in the last six years who have been dumped in the last two months. First in was 1985 selection Trevor Matich, followed by 1986 pick Reggie Dupard last week. Hmm.

OK. As anyone who has ever owned a Rotisserie team would know, there is no exact science to any draft. But you have to wonder how things could go sour that quickly in Foxboro? Does the change of ownership, to razor king Victor Kiam, have anything to do with it?

Probably. Kiam is a businessman, there's no debating that. He has to win to make money. If that means putting people on the scrap pile, so be it.

I think it stems to Ray Berry. Yes, the man with the demeanor that looks like he eats valium like they are Good 'n' Plenty candy, just doesn't cut it. He probably ruined Eason by throwing him into the fire last December after the successful Doug Flutie drive toward the playoffs.

So it's a number of things. All I can say is, give up hope for the Patriots for a couple of years. Play out the string with ageless Steve Grogan, draft a top QB this year (do some homework this time, guys) and let's check back in a couple of years.

In related or unrelated developments:

Went to the NBA Hall of Fame game the other night. At least there were two NBA teams this time (unlike the Clippers a year ago), but there's nothing like a meaningless exhibition to prove just how poorly NBA teams can play at times.

College hockey is underway, which sometimes makes me reluctant to admit I go to this school.

Glad to see that the Gateway Regional boys' soccer team can play in the Western Mass. tourney. Because they have one girl on their team, the Gators were ordered to play in a mixed-gender tournament by the MIAA. But a judge overturned that decision this week. Maybe justice does prevail sometimes.

One of the greatest names I've heard in a while: Cinnamon Burnim, George Washington volleyball team.

Craig Janney, get well soon. Especially now that it appears Jimmy Carson is headed for Motown.

I can't help but laugh when I see that four players have already filed for free agency from the Red Sox. Maybe Bruce Hurst was right after all.

Michigan and Arizona at the Civic Center? Almost too good to be true. It couldn't possibly be the dog that Duke and Kentucky gave us last year.

I may be a Tarheel fan (sorry, coach Rudy), but I would give a week's pay to watch a game at Duke's Cameron Indoor Stadium. Or better yet, let's bring that atmosphere to the Cage.

If Hollywood ever decides to make a movie about Wayne Gretzky, there'd be no need for a script. The footage of his record-breaking goal in Edmonton was enough. Say what you want, he's the best to ever lace 'em up.

UM swept by Providence

Susan Richardson and the Minutewomen were swept by Providence College last night at Totman Gym.

By CHRIS MIRACLE
Collegian Correspondent

Inconsistent play plus poor defense against a strong Providence College team equaled another loss for the University of Massachusetts volleyball team (2-20) last night, as it fell in three straight games, 15-12, 15-7, 15-9 at Totman Gym.

The Friars, not playing 100 percent, still had enough to beat the Minutewomen, overcoming UMass leads in each game.

Down 4-2 in the third, the Friars rallied to take a 7-4 lead on two points by Jennifer Winslow and three on UMass errors. The Minutewomen would run off five unanswered points on their own, topped off by Susan Richardson's service ace to go up, 9-7.

Getting the serve back, the Friars fueled their next eight unanswered points with a Maria Giunta kill, taking advantage of another seven UM errors to win the match.

"There are a lot of things on the inside that I'm not happy about," UMass coach Carol Ford said. "We have to play as a unit."

Certainly playing together in the first game, the Minutewomen, led by Nancy Sullivan and Sharon Panoff, tied the Friars 9-9 with a service ace by Kelly Ramsey. Ramsey's fine serving allowed the Minutewomen to increase their lead to 11-9.

A questionable call by the referee erased a possible service ace by Sullivan which would have tied the game at 12-apiece. Tremendous digs by Julieta Santiago and the rest of the Minutewomen kept UMass close, but the Friars eventually prevailed.

"At one point our rotation was in the wrong place the same time PC's best server was up," Ford said. "Our hitters weren't connecting."

As has been the case in previous games, the Minutewomen would mount a 5-1 lead in the second game, but the serving of Friar Jane Norman put a kink in the Minutewomen's defense, allowing PC to get back on top, 7-5.

The best UMass could do was a 7-7 tie when the Friar offense heated up behind the kills of Winslow and Suzi Parker, putting the game and the match out of reach on eight unanswered points.

Gettin' funky with George Clinton

By PHIL STRAUB
Collegian Correspondent

George Clinton, aka Dr. Funkenstein, brings his squadron of funkateers to the Campus Center Auditorium this Saturday for a night of funkitivity. This in itself should be enough to get your ass out of the house and onto the dancefloor, but in case you've been asleep for the last 20 years, here's a refresher course.

The spotlight first shined bright for Clinton at the end of the doo-wop era, when bands still felt compelled to wear matching business suits. As the Parliaments, the Clinton crew tried to make it as a part of Motown's roster. Unsuccessful, they tried the independent route and had some success in 1967 with "I Wanna Testify."

But vocal groups were dying. Musicians, not singers, were taking all the paying gigs. By 1969, Detroit shook with the "wall-of-noise" techniques of the Stooges and MC5. That, combined with the national attention given to Hendrix's experiments in mind expansion, clinched it — the time was ripe for funkadelic music.

The harsh, guitar-heavy, acid-drenched sound of Funkadelic pushed its way around through to the late 70's, testing the limits of the music establishment. 1974 saw the re-emergence of Parliament, this time as the more commercial side of the Clinton posse. Side projects kept appearing. Fuzzy Haskins, Eddie Hazel, the Horny Horns, the Brides of Funkenstein — all were different names for the same "thang": the Parliafunkadelicment Thang.

By 1983, P-Funk appeared under the guise of Clinton's "solo" stuff, the latest release being The Cinderella Theory. The offshoots have continued — Jimmy G. and the Tackheads, Incorporated Thang Band, and, most recently, Our Gang Funky. Clinton has appeared as producer for the Red Hot Chili Peppers LP, Freaky Styley, as arranger for the Warren Zevon song, "Leave My Monkey Alone," and as creator of the theme song for the Tracy Ullmann Show. He's also the producer for the new Otis Day LP. There's even a cover of an old Funkadelic tune on it, "You and Your Folks."

There's a new Funkadelic LP coming out, By Way of the Drum. Rappers everywhere are sampling Clinton's work almost as much as they are James Brown's.

Okay, maybe you missed out the first time the mothership landed. Well, through the courtesy of the Black Mass Communications Project and UPC, you now have a second chance. Be there.

N'Dour: From Amnesty to Amherst

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

On Friday Nov. 3 at 8 p.m. in UMass Bowker Auditorium, the Union Program Council presents Youssou N'Dour and his travelling band, Le Super Etoile de Dakar (The Super Stars of Dakar). N'Dour is a celebrated figure, not only in his homeland and in most of North and West Africa, but he is currently enjoying overwhelming success in the United States and Europe. His new album, The Lion, released by Virgin, juxtaposes several African mediums of music, including the self-invented "mbalax," a bluesy, polyrhythmic cross of voice and pancultural sounds.

Like many in his homeland, N'Dour was born into, and raised with music. During his early years, he was confined to making due with the musical knowledge and experience of his family. However, after it was discovered that N'Dour's musical abilities were worth developing, he was sent to study music theory and composition at Dakar's Ecole des Arts. After 18 months, he decided that in order to fully develop his musical talents, he had to follow his instincts, and thus ended his study there, deeming it too "Eurocentric" of a musical education.

Playing every club and traditional setting in Senegal during the mid-to-late 1970's, N'Dour felt he needed to step out on his own, and take his ideas even further into the realm of unchartered musical depth. He travelled to Paris, where he was discovered by western impressarios, and recorded Immigres, which was inspired by the number of his fellow Africans that had emmigrated to the West.

From there came the development and refinement of mbalax. Coming from a country with different cultural input and emphasis on not only music but other mediums as well, N'Dour's blend of talking drums, makossa, soukous, zouk, and jit (newly developed African musical terminology), with western technology is one of several factors that combine to put N'Dour's style at the edge of a new musical frontier, casting new shapes, and sounds from his mbalax base. This results in his voice, one of the most precious instruments in existence, and the idea of mbalax merging together perfectly.

Youssou N'Dour has also payed his dues to the recording in-

Not really, but if you submit a list of your three favorite films of the 80's to The Collegian Arts' Movie of the Decade contest, you stand a chance of winning David Bowie's new CD collection, SOUND + VISION, courtesy of Rykodisc and Collegian Arts, who very well could have taken the CDs and filed them with their collections at home. Submit your list, with your name and phone number, to the Collegian Arts desk, 113 Campus Center. Don't worry, the editors don't bite. ALL ABOARD!

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Any true Deadhead knows that "New Potato Caboose" is a song from Jerry Garcia and the boys. But it's also the name of a Washington D.C. band that's chugging up the charts with their debut album Promising Traveler.

The band began essentially as an acoustic Grateful Dead cover band called Wood 'n' Steel. In 1984, they turned electric and changed their named to New Potato Caboose, paying homage to their roots.

Playing many 60s cover songs, with a few originals sprinkled in, the Caboose began amassing a large cult following. The playful, energetic party atmosphere they induced onstage attracted Rykodisc, who quickly signed them.

Inbetween playing to packed houses up and down the East Coast, the seven-man band went into the studio to cut Promising Traveler. The album contains one side of studio tracks and one side of live cuts. "We kind of made our name through our live shows," said guitarist and vocalist Don Laux. "So we thought [making the album this way] was the honest approach."

All of the songs are originals save for a funked-up version of Van Morrison's "Brown Eyed Girl." This is because the Caboose wants to be thought of as more than just another cover band. "We're trying to have our music judged on its own right," said Laux.

Produced by Elliot Mazer (Neil Young, Dream Syndicate), side one takes on the producer's overblown full sound. The idealistic songs often resemble the 70s art shlock of Styx or Kansas.

But on side two, (the live side), the band's raw talent and energy abounds. You can actually see the sweat pour out of the album grooves. Like the Dead, the music is rather simple and highly danceable. It's easy to hear why this old-fashioned, good time rock 'n' roll band has garnered such a following in the age of talentless MTV trash, such as New Kids on the Block.

Although the stripped-down sound of side two is what makes the album a true find, Laux contends that they are moving away from that 60s feel. "We are trying to refine our sound," he said.

The band, whose members write the songs collectively, are currently working on material for a new album they hope to have out within a year. They hope to become as proficient in the studio as they are onstage, and they are talking about possibly changing their name so as not to be trapped in the Dead mode.

Until the next album comes out, Laux said the band has one goal, "Get gigs and play 'em."

The Tingler!

By PAUL D'AGOSTINO
Collegian Staff

Comedian Jimmy Tingle will be bringing his brand of political humor to the Comedy Zone at Peking Garden restaurant this Saturday. This performance will be a rare treat for the Valley area. His act has taken him from performing in Boston night clubs to the Tonight Show.

Tingle is known for his intelligent and stinging brand of political satire. He makes a comics' observation about politics and the world which leaves the audience cheering. But his comments always have an underlying meaning to them. He often takes swipes at the Reagan and Bush administration.

His stage presence has not gone unnoticed. A bulky, sweaty body making jokes about the Iran-Contra affair does not go unnoticed. He often uses reviews of his own act as material. Critics have compared him to Barney Rubble.

Having stared his act in Boston in 1980 he has changed his style over the years. After having established himself in Boston he moved to New York where he worked on refining his comic style. Ever since then his career has taken leaps and bounds. He has taken his act to Ivy League schools,Catch a Rising Star, MTV and the Tonight Show.

In 1988 he and fellow political comedian Barry Crimmins took their acts to Nicaragua. They were greeted by an audience more willing to hear jokes directed at Central American affairs than American audiences. Together with New York comedians Randy Credeco, Joe DeCaprio and Bev Mickins they have created a group that call themselves Humorists Against War.

Saturday's performance will begin at 9:30.

Youssou N'Dour breaks in from the outside

dustry by spending years on the African tape market. He recorded pieces on a four-track portable studio, and released them to radio stations, friends, agents and anyone willing to listen. It is amazing how much time he put into distributing his tapes and circulating his music.

After recording Immigres he embarked on a project dedicated to Nelson Mandela. The title of the album, Nelson Mandela, was greeted with open arms, particularly with Black South Africans both in their homeland, and overseas. Attempting to capture a different feel, he tried to focus his vision and polish his vocals and pallate of colors into more rigorous formats.

However, it was when he got the phone call from musician Peter Gabriel that his musical dreams of spreading the voice of the mbalax worldwide became reality. In the fall of last year, N'Dour joined the likes of Tracy Champan, Bruce Springsteen, Sting and Peter Gabriel for the Amnesty Rights International Tour. Because it was a worldwide benefit concert, and all transportation, venue costs, and expences were donated, Gabriel paid N'Dour right out of his pocket. Giving him enough money to make his own albums, construct his own studio, and set up his own label right out of Dakar. In terms of publicity, the Amnesty tour was the best for N'Dour, awarding him a slot on daytime MTV, as well as the hearts of fans from Moscow to Mendoza, Argentina.

Still, despite the big push from Gabriel, the exoticism of N'Dour's music can be expected to work against him with the broad U.S. public, and especially with increasingly narrow-minded radio programmers who haven't the slightest idea what to do with his kind of music. It's categorized much like Les Voix Mysteres Des Bulgares — it's too different to ignore and give no airplay to, yet it's so different that it simply doesn't blend with the trash that is played. College radio stations play it more as a "token Black record," than for its content, which might be a bit too rich for some. N'Dour is still trying to break the image that he's a newcomer with an odd name who doesn't sing in English (he sings in Wolof, a tribal language of most of West Africa whose phonetics and word arrangements are almost poetic in sound, yet difficult to understand or learn).

While the odds of him achieving household name status in the U.S. are pretty slim (what African musician has?), the release of The Lion and the Amnesty tour have made him one of the most respectable performance artists. And with a voice like that, it won't be too long before he's selling out arenas and football stadiums, and singing to all ages and ethnic groups everywhere.

Ralliers stand with pride as LBG Week begins

By MATT SANBORN
Collegian Correspondent

"Okay, let's rock," Mark Steinberg said, kicking off Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Awareness Week's opening rally on the steps of the Student Union yesterday.

The rally, which lasted for over an hour, attracted a crowd of over 150 supporters, many of whom wore pink triangles and toted purple balloons as symbols of solidarity.

The crowd, holding placards reading "United Against Oppression" and "Come out, come out where ever you are," cheered loudly as LBGA presdent Max Mitchell said, "Let's make some noise!"

He said people must educate themselves about the questions they have concerning lesbian, bisexual and gay people.

"Things won't be cured in a week," Mitchell said. "We have to make this an ongoing week. We have to educate ourselves to educate others." "There's strength in numbers," Mitchell said, urging the supporters to take political action.

One of the ralliers, Carolyn (one of several people who requested that their last names not be printed) said, "The purpose of this rally is to let people know that there isn't just a few of us. They can't ignore a group of people this large."

Steven Bayer, a Sociology major who spoke at the rally said, "[The gay rights movement] hasn't made the impact that the civil rights or women's movement have made. We have to let people know that we exist."

Felice Yeskel, program coordinator for Lesbian, Bisexual and Gay Concerns, told the crowd that only Gov. Dukakis' signature stood in the way of passing the Gay Rights bill pending in the Massachusetts Statehouse.

The bill would legally protect the gay community against discrimination.

"For the moment, let us feel wonderful," Yeskel said, in keeping with the LBG Awareness Week's motto: "Stand with Pride."

Undergraduate Student Senator Adam Stein (Third World Caucus), who also spoke at the rally, said oppression of the lesbian, bisexual and gay community affects every minority group.

"Oppression is connected," Stein said.

Many speakers praised Mitchell for the work he has done for the LBGA and for the lesbian, bisexual and gay community.

"I'm pleased," Mitchell said after the rally. "The turnout was good. Some people are better than no people."

Ralliers said they were pleased with the supportive atmosphere at the event.

"I feel good. I can be myself," said Todd Jemison, a sophomore.

Beth, a first year student, said, "I'm so excited. I've been waiting a long time for this."

A few students, holding placards reading "Stop the Deadly AIDS virus," protested the rally.

In the past, AIDS has been mistakenly associated as being a "gay" disease.

"There were only three or four [protesters] in the crowd," said a rallier who wished not to be identfified, "and the [television crews] and the radio people spent half their time with them. It's disgusting."

Duffey attempts last-ditch effort to curb $6.4 million cut to UM

By DAN SARAZEN
Collegian Staff

In the waning days before a $6.4 million budget cut to the University of Massachusetts goes into effect, Chancellor Duffey's office is compiling a report — a report he hopes will somehow curb the cut and the damage to the University it will bring.

Duffey said his report, which will outline the impact the cut will have on the University, will be sent to the Board of Regents and will then be passed on to the Statehouse.

If the $6.4 million in cuts goes through, Duffey said he will raise students' fees by as much as $350.

"I'm prepared to ask for substantial increases in fees if these cuts are maintained," Duffey said.

"What the state has been doing to the University of Massachusetts and the future poses a threat to the well being of the Commonwealth," he said.

Trustee hopes today's phone drive will stop Keverian-sponsored cut

Fear of an additional statewide budget cuts being passed — including cuts to higher education — by a Statehouse committee has led the University of Massachusetts administration and The Leadership Coalition to reschedule a phone drive for today, Student Trustee Eric Nakajima said yesterday.

The phone drive, originally scheduled for Monday, would not have been as effective in persuading members of the House Ways and Means Committee, Nakajima said, adding that it is important to put pressure on the committee because it is responsible for handling House Speaker George Keverian's $100 million plan for additional statewide budget cuts.

The committee is scheduled to meet Monday to discuss the tax package, Nakajima said, adding that it will most likely be approved unless members are persuaded otherwise. The phone drive, scheduled to take place in the Newman Center, will focus on members of the committee this weekend, Nakajima said.

"When dealing with the center of power we see there is no definite plan," Nakajima said. "This means that a forceful message can be sent from the faculty, students and parents. We can have a definite influence."

Student interested in participating in the drive should contact the SGA office or the phone bank at the Newman Center to find out information about hours for the drive.

Fee increase would not affect UM financial aid recipients

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The director of financial aid said students who cannot afford to pay the proposed spring semester fee increase will have an opportunity to receive a full or partial refund of the fees.

Arthur Jackson said at the Faculty Senate meeting yesterday that after students receive their spring semester bills in December they can apply to have their financial situation reviewed. Financial aid administrators will grant waivers to students who have the greatest documented financial need, he said.

Chancellor Duffey said student fees will be raised next semester by at least $275 but not more than $350, depending on whether the proposed $6.4 million cut to the UMass budget prevails. Duffey is scheduled to meet with the Board of Trustees Thursday.

"I am going to recommend that provisions be made for student fee increases with some built in allowances for student scholarships," Duffey said. "An additional number of tuition waivers will be available for students who display the greatest financial need."

He said he will be working on recommendations to the Trustees this week and will take into consideration the state of debate in the legislature during the week and suggestions from established legislative friends. The requests will also allow the University to keep some control over its destiny.

Duffey said the Statehouse rally Oct. 18 changed the tone of debate on education cuts in the legislature. He said he has spoken with members of the House of Representatives leadership recently and there are many budget proposals being discussed.

"Most of them acknowledge that higher education and human services have been cut far beyond their appropriate share of the budget," he said.

Marc Kenen, a UMass doctoral student and member of the Leadership Coalition, said the University should stay united and take tell legislators that it will not accept any further cuts. He said a student fee increase of $350 is unacceptable.

"A vice chancellor recently said to me that 'We try as hard as we can to accommodate all the students, but we know some slip through the cracks,'" he said.

Kenen said that by making a plan to cut the budget the Statehouse gets the message that we can tolerate the cut.

Kenen spoke with State Rep. Kenneth Lemanski (D-Chicopee) who told him that the University's decision to refuse to cut its budget any further in September has helped its position in the legislature.

Dr. Margaret Alexander Walker to speak on Monday, Nov. 6, 1989 at 311 New Africa House, University of Massachusetts, 4;00 p.m.

Dr. Margaret Alexander Walker is one of the leading humanities scholars in Afro-American Studies, and a creative and critical voice of international acclaim. Her book, Richard Wright: Daemonic Genius, was judged by Publishers' Weekly to one of the fifteen most important books of 1988. She continues to be productive, with a book of essays from Feminist Press and her collected poetry from the University of Georgia Press scheduled for publication this spring. Her best-seller novel, Jubilee, and her poem, "For My People" and the book by that name, remain classic works in Afro-American literature. She is also Professor Emeritus of English at Jackson State University. Dr. Walker's visit is sponsored by The Five College Black Studies Executive Committee.

Dr. Henry David On Sunday Nov. 5, Dr. Henry David will present the findings of his twenty year study in Czechoslavakia, Born Unwanted: Developmental Effects of Denied Abortion. This study examined the long-term effects of 200 children born to women twice denied an abortion for the same pregnancy. This study influenced the Czech government to change its policy regarding abortion to legalization. This event will take place at 4 p.m. in the Browsing Room of the Neilson Library at Smith College. This event is co-sponsored by the Abortion Rights Fund of Western Mass, Smith College School for Social Work, and the National Association of Social Workers. Tickets available at the Albion Bookstores, Northampton and Amherst, or at the door. Suggested donation, $10, $5 students. All proceeds benefit the Abortion Rights Fund of Western Mass.

Godspell Auditions for the spring production of Godspell, sponsored by Helen Hills Chapel and the Chapel Players, will be held Nov. 5, 6, 7, and 8 from 7:00 p.m. to 10:00 p.m. at Mendenhall Theater. All those who are interested can pick up scripts and scores on reserve at the Mendenhall Theater office (8:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m.). Performance dates are March 9, 10, and 11. Call Claire Smith for more information, 585-4741.

LBG Concerns The LBG Concerns announce that there will a meeting for the Speaker's Bureau on Nov. 8 at 8 p.m. at Thatcher Main Lounge.

Minyan Service Saturday Nov. 4 10:00 a.m. Chabad House has the only traditional minyan service in the five-college area, and you are invited to participate in prayer and special reading of the Parsha of Noah and the Ark. This won't happen again until next year! There will be a Kiddush and meal following services.

Chabad House The Chabad House welcomes Jews of all affiliations and backgrounds and invites you to join and participate in any of our programs. In addition we provide private tutorials in almost any topic relating to Judaism from learning the Aleph-Bet to intricate passages in the Talmud and Kabbalah. If you are interested, please contact Rabbi Adelman at the Chabad House at 549-4094.

SOM receives $1.5 million 'catalyst for donors'

By BRYAN HOUSE
Collegian Staff

The University's School of Management recently announced that it has received the largest private gift in its 126-year history: the $1.5 million Flavin Fund for Entrepreneurial Studies, named in the memory of Mr. Joseph B. Flavin Jr.

The gift will endow a chair in entrepreneurial studies and will serve as a permanent memorial to Mr. Joseph B. Flavin, Sr., and Mr. Joseph B. Flavin, Jr., Class of 1953, said Thomas O'Brien, dean of the School of Management.

To endow a chair at the University, a department must receive at least a $1 million donation. The department holds the principal gift and invests the interest. This enables them to fund executive fellowships, which allow distinguished people to teach at the University, he said.

O'Brien said gifts like the Flavin family's act as a catalyst for other donors to give to the University. Any additional donations to the fund will be used to sponsor activities related to the new program and will be administered by the School of Management, he said. These donations will allow the School of Management to provide lectures and seminars for entrepreneurial studies, enabling students to learn important real life information about the business world that they do not always receive in classroom, he said.

"The commitment of the Flavin family is making it possible for this school to offer unique opportunities in our curriculum," O'Brien said. "It's especially gratifying that a family which has produced such a pioneer in American industry should remember Joe Flavin Jr.'s alma mater, the University of Massachusetts, in such a special way."

Flavin, a 1953 accounting graduate, was serving as the chairman of the Chancellor's Executive Commitee at UMass and as chief executive officer of the Singer Company, at the time of his death on Oct. 7.

O'Brien said Flavin has been heralded as the leader of Singer's successful turnaround in February 1986. The company, whose name for 135 years had been synonymous with the sewing machine, announced it would relinquish its sewing and furniture operations to its shareholders.

Singer then began its unimpeded pursuit of its principal product lines — high-tech electronic equipment such as flight simulators, navigation guidance systems for missiles and aircraft, and tactical control equipment for submarines and airborne applications, he said.

In addition to other civic and corporate activities, he was a director of Pfizer, Inc. and the New York Stock Exchange, a trustee of Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance company, and a member of the Business Roundtable, the Business Council, and the Emergency Committee for American Trade.

Flavin was a long-time supporter of the University and a charter member of the Chancellor's Council. He was also a participant in the School of Management's Dialog Program, dispensing on-site advice to MBA students launching and sustaining their careers.

Members of the family were hosted at a dinner on Oct. 23 when the University formally introduced the bequest.

■ Duffey looks to stop latest cut

Student Trustee Eric Nakajima said Duffey's report might help the University's situation.

"I think that with pressure from faculty, students, parents and alumni, a credible report outlining the increasing damage will help turn the legislators to our side," Nakajima said.

John Cole, president of the Faculty Union, supports Duffey's opposition to more cuts.

"The situation is intolerable," he said. "The University cannot function at this level."

Frank Annunziato, assistant professor at the Labor Relations and Research Center, said his department has been especially hard hit by the cuts.

"The administration has already cut us 29 percent for next year," Annunziato said. "[Budget cuts] already devastated our program. That's fact, not rhetoric."

Duffey said the rhetoric is not coming from UMass, but from the Statehouse.

"The Governor has been asking for a tax increase but has not been getting support from the House," Duffey said.

Nancy Richardson, deputy director of Gov. Dukakis' education office, said, "The Governor proposed a budget that would maintain higher education. The House rejected it and proposed a budget that was $500 million over budget."

State law requires a balanced budget.

Speaker: Lebanon woes have historical roots

By JULIE LIVINGSTONE
Collegian Staff

People can better understand the current situation in Lebanon after examining the troubled nation's history, a Boston University professor said last night in a lecture in the Campus Center.

Dr. Irene Gendzier, professor of political science and history at BU, told an audience of 80 that what people see as problems today have always existed.

"Within the last two months there have been steps toward peace. Some see hope in this. I am not an optimist. It is a luxury to be optimistic; it is simple for us because we are at a distance," she said.

Quoting 1982 Nobel Prize winner Gabriel Garcia Marquez, Gendzier said, "There is an 'outsized reality' to what is happening in Lebanon. What is the social cost of war? There are thousands of refugees flooding out of [Lebanon], and the question to ask is, 'What has happened to these people? What will happen when they return?'"

Professor Adnan Haydar, director of Near Eastern Studies at the University of Massachusetts, said this lack of identity is directly linked to events in 1943.

"Lebanon was under French rule, and in 1943 this ended," he said. "There were then feudal lords which ruled over the different groups. A central government was formed that attempted to bring those varied factions together. It was difficult and the balance of these factions was in danger of collapsing.

"The concept of a nation was elusive; each group was interested in itself, rather than the whole picture. There was a national pact between the Maronite Christians and the Sunni Muslims. This excluded other Christians and other Muslims," Haydar said.

Haydar explained how outside sources bear upon Lebanon.

"Jordan kicking out Palestinians and Syria entering into the south of Lebanon forced the Lebanese to move into Beirut and each set up their own little government," he said. "This created tremendous upheaval. It puts the balance of peoples [different groups] in further danger of collapsing."

Gendzier said that the reasons for turmoil in Lebanon are not simple, rather they are comprehensible. "There is the struggle for democracy, social justice, the conflicts between the Israeli and Palestinian, that between Iran and Iraq all go into understanding the problems," she said.

"There have to be broader perspectives. The [United States] is interested at points, but then interest is lost. It seems to be the choice of the United States. There is no sustained political dialogue," Gendzier said, adding that it is time to ask questions about peoples, not label them.

"Resolution of age-old inequities and bitterness must come first. They want to find their own natural conclusion, but there have to be positive attempts at aiding them," Gendzier said.

Ex-officer Agee tells of life in 'subversive' CIA

By MICHAEL WEBBER
Collegian Correspondent

"The Central Intelligence Agency is a subversive tool of the presidency that commits atrocious acts of evil throughout Latin America and the world," said ex-CIA officer Phillip Agee, speaking Wednesday night to 150 people in Smith College's Stoddard Auditorium.

Agee was recruited into the CIA at the age of 22, and began working as an operations officer in Latin America. He said he resigned in 1968 out of disgust and outrage at what he had seen.

"I realized that everything we did in one way or another was working to support murderous regimes and terrorism in Latin America," he said.

After resigning, Agee left the United States and wrote his first book Inside the Company, published in 1975. The work was a diary of the CIA activities he claimed to be aware of in Latin America.

As a result of this work, Agee was harassed legally, and attacked publicly through the media, he said.

"There were stories about me being a traitor, a defector, a terrorist at heart, a womanizer . . . the best part was George Will's calling me a 'soiled bit of flotsam from the 60s,'" he said.

The U.S. government attempted six times to get a federal indictment against Agee, and used its influence to have him deported or prohibited from entering several countries including Britain, Holland, France, West Germany, and Norway.

In his speech, Agee described the role of the CIA in Latin America and the experiences he had both before and after his resignation.

"We established our own political parties in countries. We had presidents, vice presidents, and other officials on our payroll. We paid journalists to publish our material as if it were their own," said Agee.

Agee acknowledged the need for an intelligence service to protect U.S. national security, but said the United States needs "one that keeps peace, not wages undeclared war on defenseless peasants in foreign countries."

Of the Nicaraguan Contras he said "The United States-created forces totally lack popular support."

Agee said villages are burned, pregnant women are impaled with bayonets, assassination plots are carried out, people are tortured and mutilated, and limitless other atrocities are committed all on the advice, insistence, and support of the CIA in Nicaragua.

He went on to list incidents of CIA interference with the affairs of other countries since the agency's establishment in 1947, including, most recently, involvement in the upcoming Nicaraguan elections.

"The United States is putting in money equivalent to four times the combined amount spent by the Democratic and Republican parties in the 1988 U.S. presidential elections," he said.

"The CIA works by overthrowing civilians elected governments and replacing is even mildly socialist, communist, or reformist," he said.

Agee said the reason behind these actions is that if the abused minorities in the United States saw a government based on human rights such as education, housing equality, and socialized medical care instead of elitist rule by the rich succeed, they might be inspired to fight for a similar government government in the United States.

"The mobilized masses of population in such revolutions cause the ruling elite in this country to quake," he said. "God save Nicaragua from the restoration of democracy by the United States."

Agee described a situation in Guatemala, where the majority of the land is owned by about 2 percent of the population. He said that the democratically elected, reformist government introduced a desperately needed land reform act that affected farmland controlled by a U.S. fruit company.

"The CIA declared the government to be 'communist infiltrated,' overthrew it, and replaced it with a military dictatorship that stills rule today," he said.

Agee stated that ignorance and apathy in the United States allow Bush and his henchmen to "wage a proxy war in Latin America."

"The CIA is an instrument of the president," he said. "The government of the United States has always served a privileged few."

In his concluding remarks Agee addressed the issue of CIA recruitment on and around college campuses, stating that this practice must be recognized, opposed, and ended.

Agee will be returning to Nicaragua shortly to observe the upcoming elections, he said.

Correction

The Collegian incorrectly reported that 370 tons of waste paper was produced campuswide last year, of which newspaper was a larger percentage. The campus produced 370 tons of newspaper waste, which makes up seven percent of the more than 2,000 tons of waste paper produced campuswide. Also, 60 percent of the newspaper waste, not all paper waste, could be recycled. The Collegian regrets the errors.

Rebels protest bombing, suspend cease-fire talks

SAN SALVADOR, El Salvador (AP) — Guerrillas yesterday withdrew from cease-fire talks with the rightist government to protest the bombing of a union hall that killed 10 people.

In a radio broadcast, the Farabundo Marti National Liberation Front guerillas said it will not take part in the next round of negotiations until President Alfredo Cristiani's government offers better guarantees for the survival of leftist organizations.

Earlier meetings in Mexico City and San Jose, Costa Rica, had deadlocked but the two sides in the decade-old civil war were scheduled to hold their third meeting this year starting on Nov. 20 in Caracas, Venezuela. The two sides have agreed to continue meeting monthly until a cease-fire is negotiated.

In the broadcast over private radio station YSU, the guerrillas said they had information about the bombing, part of an escalating cycle of violence.

The guerrilla statement was read by Eduardo Sancho, one of the organization's five senior leaders. It said if the group continued their dialogue, their participation could be used by Cristiani's administration "to cover up the responsibility of the government in the massacre."

The downtown hall belonging to the National Federation of Salvadoran Workers, popularly known as Fenastras, was partially destroyed by the blast.

Another bomb earlier Tuesday injured five people at the office of Madres, an organization of relatives of political prisoners.

Two Americans were injured in the blasts.

Leaders of both leftist organizations accused the military of mounting the attacks in retaliation for a guerrilla mortar attack Monday on the Defense Ministry compound in San Salvador that killed one civilian and wounded 15 others.

Ortega cancels truce after increased Contra attacks

MANAGUA, Nicaragua (AP) — President Daniel Ortega ended a 19-month truce with Contra guerrillas on Wednesday, blaming the United States for renewed rebel attacks and accusing President Bush of "promoting death, assassination, crime and terrorism in Nicaragua."

Ortega said the truce was being cancelled because of increased Contra attacks, including one last week he said killed 18 people and another Monday that killed four.

The White house denounced Ortega's decision to end the truce but brushed off talk about renewing military aid for the Contras. "We don't want to give him any excuse" to cancel elections scheduled for next February, said presidential press secretary Marlin Fitzwater.

Ortega read a communique in which he said, "Nicaragua reaffirms once again that, regardless of the position assumed by the mercenary forces, the electoral process culminating with the Feb. 25 elections will be guaranteed."

But, he said, replying heatedly to a reporter's question on U.S. aid to the Contras, "Now it will depend on the Yankee Congress and the Yankee president whether these elections take place or not on Feb. 25."

Fitzwater said in Washington no request for renewed military aid was contemplated.

The administration said Bush was consulting with leaders in Central America to bring diplomatic pressure on Ortega to reverse course.

Be conscious of violence

Last week a shooting occurred in Boston that shocked the state. A young suburban couple was robbed, and both were shot. The wife was killed. The husband is still in critical condition.

Sounds like just another shooting, right? Well, the most newsworthy element of the story is the situation in which the shooting occurred.

Erin Martin

The couple was about to have their first child, one they had planned for years. They were leaving childbirth classes when the robbery and abduction took place. They were forced to drive to a secluded area where the wife was murdered.

Miraculously, the baby was saved — delivered through Caesarian section two months premature. The baby is not in intensive care while his father is still in the hospital, unable to identify any suspects.

News stations in Boston are covering the investigation daily, and so are the papers.

Which leads me to my point. Last Thursday, a friend of mine read an article to me, printed in the Boston Globe.

It was about the NAACP and their claim that the Stuart shooting was only newsworthy because they were a White suburban couple.

This infuriated me. Granted, the number of murders in Boston being as high as it is, it would be impossible to give this much attention to each one. I'm not trying to imply either that violent crimes aren't newsworthy. I'm just saying that irony was the key element to give this story the high profile it deserved.

A couple leaves a childbirth class. They are about to have their first child. The mother is murdered. The baby is delivered prematurely through caesarian. The father is hospitalized. That is the story! That the Stuarts are White does not make the difference.

Violence doesn't take a back seat to color, race, sex or location. Any act of violence should be treated with the maximum penalty. Every day we hear about more people murdered, raped, or assaulted. The statistics are astounding. We hear the news reporters, and we read the headlines. We are all amazed, shocked and terrified. Until the next day . . . when we tend to forget.

What we also tend to forget or should I say ignore, is just how close violence is to all of us. If you live in Boston or another big city, stories of violence probably doesn't shock you like they do me.

I live in a small town where I could leave the doors unlocked and not worry. The population there is equal to that of Southwest. So when I came to UMass, my father, who is a police officer, warned me to never walk alone here. And to this day, I remember his words. Violence is closer to home than you think.

Which makes me realize that this University does not provide adequate protection for its students. I often wonder when I read the police reports in the Collegian what exactly constitutes an assault? How many rapes and attacks go unreported? And how many do we hear about?

It scares me to see a woman jogging alone at 11 p.m. Or what about a student walking back from studying at the library? How can we feel secure with just a few emergency phones or campus police patrolling in their cars?

I think the escort service was a necessity on this campus. The lack in security, however, is not the problem of the campus police, either.

When we write to our legislatures to complain about cuts we need to emphasize the risks we take every time we step foot on this campus alone. We may often think, "It'll never happen to me," but I'm sure the couple in Boston had similar thoughts.

Surviving the DC experience

One of the most important things a UMass student learns is not anything found in a classroom. It is not any chemistry equation or political theory. It is how to master the art of surviving the DC (dining common) experience.

Melissa Macauley

In the first few weeks of school, you actually bother going to breakfast on weekdays. You eat your meals when most people would eat them. You go to dinner at 5:30 p.m. or 6:00 p.m.

After a couple of weeks and lots of grueling, exasperating, stomach-churning experiences, you learn the ropes.

First of all, you don't bother with breakfast on weekdays. Only go to brunch on the weekends.

And if you had any brilliant ideas about just waking up at noon and going to brunch in your pajamas without showering or brushing you teeth, FORGET THEM. If you are not prepared to see everyone you ever knew, or wanted to know, you will run into them. That person you're trying to impress will see you at your Sunday-morning scummiest. It's not worth it.

Second, it is best to become used to eating your lunch and dinner as soon as the DCs open. For lunch, it isn't quite so imperative to be there as soon as the doors open. But for dinner, be there at 4:01 p.m. Be the first person there. Be the ONLY person there. You won't have to wait in line. You won't get a picked-over salad. You won't have to wander aimlessly with your tray searching desperately for a place to sit.

Granted, you might have to eat a little more to keep from being hungry later that night, but that's okay. Grab some extra bread.

Finally, you will learn that it is indeed possible for a person to live on bread, and salad, alone. Whatever mystery meal the DC folks have concocted does not have to ruin your day, or your appetite. Take advantage of the decent options they offer you.

If someone could only warn the newcomers each semester of the trials and tribulations they will face as members of the university's meal plan, some people could be spared a lot of antacid, and a lot of waiting around.

However, experience is the best teacher. Upperclassmen on my hall warned me when I arrived.

"Oh, come on. How bad can it be?" I laughed.

Then, today, my roommate informed me that a person in her English class is feeling a little under the weather. He is in the infirmary, with food poisoning, supposedly. Now, let's not jump to conclusions, here. Maybe he ate soup out of a bowl and pan that had been growing a rather nice bacteria in his room for a couple of weeks. But maybe. . .

I swear by the salad bar.

Women never ask to be raped

Women want to be raped by men, right? Why, it's our biggest fantasy! And by some bizarre stroke of luck, men have been blessed with a sort of gift, a talent for reading the female mind.

These men know that the way a woman dresses is a clear indication of her expectations and desires for the evening ahead. A long skirt or pants means "no rape tonight, honey." A mini skirt and high heels mean "please rape me now." After all, when women dress scandalously provocative ways, they're simply advertising for rape, aren't they?

So some people may think.

About three weeks ago in Fort Lauderdale, Fla., a 22 year-old woman brought her "accused" rapist to trial. He had abducted her at knife-point from a parking lot, and repeatedly raped her for over five hours. By the time she escaped, he had driven her 120 miles from the parking lot.

Not a pleasant experience — being kidnapped, having violent sex forced upon her . . . but for some reason the jury felt she deserved to be raped. What could lead them to this conclusion, you might ask? Well, the answer is simple. She was wearing a short lace skirt and no underwear.

As jury foreman, Roy Diamond, proclaimed, the woman "asked for it the way she was dressed, you could see everything she had. She was advertising for sex." Not only did this woman fail to dress as a "proper" woman should, she failed to testify in the expected manner.

She wasn't the hysterical young thing that the jury had hoped for. Juror Dean Medeiros commented that "she didn't appear shaken up. Basically, we didn't believe her story." Just proves how much a threat women are to the good old patriarchy, when we step out of our male-prescribed roles.

Because this woman was "dressed for a good time" (a.k.a. rape), her rapist was excused. This is no isolated case — rapists are acquitted all the time because of same or similar sexist rationales. Perhaps the woman raped had the audacity to walk around alone at night, or the misfortune to be married to the rapist, or go out to dinner with him.

Men incessantly drum into our heads that we not only deserve, but want it too. To put it simply, women have been created to be used and abused by men.

It is outrageous that Steven Lord, the "accused" rapist, was acquitted. Rape is the fastest growing violent crime in the United States, and the (male-controlled) court system is doing nothing to change this.

Often, I have heard people puzzled over why so infrequently women who have been raped tell anyone. FBI statistics state that only one in ten rapes are reported. Of every ten rapes that are reported, a mere three go to trial. And a scant three in 1,000 rapists serve prison terms, which average a measly four years.

Now Steven Lord has been added to the endless list of men who have raped and are still raping, with freedom and impunity. Men rape and get away with it every day, and this has to change.

Our world must become a safe place for women — at night and during the day, on the streets and in our homes, no matter what we are wearing. A woman in a short skirt is not asking to be raped. No woman ever asks to be raped.

We need to unite

The coordinating committee of the Graduate Employees Organization/District 65, VAW would like to thank those who turned out in such great numbers and with such enthusiasm for our membership meeting. The meeting strengthened our conviction that collective action is not only possible but critical at the graduate student level.

Omamo/Heberle

The need for collective action on the part of the entire campus community has never been more urgent. While we understand that the administration is firmly opposed to further budget cuts, we see them negotiating behind closed doors, which prevents effective participation from the community.

The Board of Regents had their first public discussion of the cuts on Oct. 10, 1989, three years into the ongoing "crisis"!

Chancellor Duffey has scheduled the occasional "information" session with select members of the community while Provost O'Brien publicly told the junior faculty at UMass to dust off their curri culum vitaes rather than encouraging them to participate in a struggle to protect their hard-won jobs.

Given this recent history, the administration must now prove their commitment to fighting with the campus community to save UMass. We believe that only through working with the larger community of organizations here on campus can the administration oppose the cuts effectively.

One initiative GEO has supported is that of tax reform — not temporary, "special taxes for special interests" kinds of reforms, but a restructuring of the tax system in this state.

Individuals at the administrative level have not confronted the anti-tax ideology of big business in this state. No one likes to pay taxes, but we pay, as individual income earners.

Forty-thousand corporations paid no taxes to Massachusetts last year. Individuals pay, whether it be out of fear of the consequences or because we believe in the greater good being served.

Why don't we demand the same of the business community? And what in the world makes Tsongas think, after fighting taxation with all their might, that these self-interested businesses are going to become "enlightened" as to the intrinsic value of public education to their continued well-being?

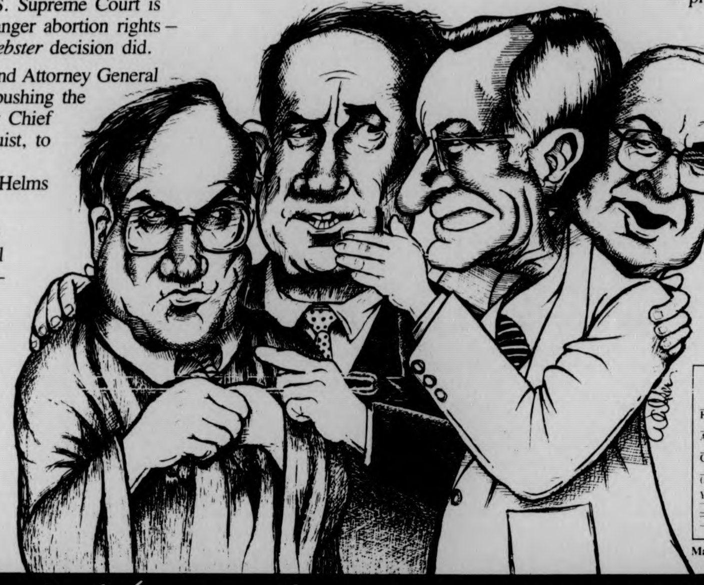
GEO/District 65, VAW has endorsed the Tax Equity Alliance of Massachusetts proposals for fair tax reform. We call upon the campus community to turn its attention towards those measures.

We also call on graduate employees to sign with us because as a union we can fight arbitrary fee hikes and other measures which directly affect us, and we can also fight unilateral decision-making processes while creating long-term, constructive solutions.

Everyone working in the social service and education sectors in Massachusetts is under attack.

Yes, we must fight to protect the University, but we must join with others rather than behaving like a special-interest which allows for successful divide and destroy tactics on the part of the anti-tax, anti-public sector community.

George Omamo and Renee Heberle are co-spokespersons of the GEO/District 65, VAW



Your Government Is Plotting to Take Away Women's Right to Abortion… Again.
Only You Can Stop Them!

*F*rom the White House to the Supreme Court, the threat to abortion rights has never been greater.

Once again, the U.S. Supreme Court is hearing cases that endanger abortion rights – even more than the Webster decision did.

Now George Bush and Attorney General Dick Thornburgh are pushing the Supreme Court, led by Chief Justice William Rehnquist, to overturn Roe v. Wade altogether – with Jesse Helms cheering them on.

If that happens, safe and legal abortions will be a thing of the past – and abortion will be government's decision, not a woman's.

Think they aren't serious? Think again.

For information or transportation to Washington, call:
617/929-8281
Ellen Thompson

Just days ago, Bush killed legislation restoring Medicaid funding of abortions for poor women who became pregnant through rape or incest.

If President Bush has his way, we'll wind up back where we were before Roe v. Wade:

Abortion legal in a few states, a crime in every other.

Don't count on the politicians, the courts, or anyone to stand up for your rights. Stand up for yourself:

You can help win the fight to protect abortion rights by joining or contributing to NOW.

Synthesizers get some Junkie justification

By JON DRUKMAN
Collegian Correspondent

Welcome aboard Junkie Flight 007, heading for the land of technology. It deeply grieves us that some people still can't see the beauty in synthesizers and drum machines. They're just instruments, after all. What did people say when the electric guitar was invented? It's just technology pushing the sonic palette forward. And besides, if there wasn't any progress like this, we wouldn't be able to tell you about this week's articles.

The name Henry Kaiser may be somewhat familiar to our readers. The last time he surfaced was with French, Frith, Kaiser, and Thompson. This time, he's sharing the bill with a Leningrad keyboardist named Sergi Kuriokhin. Over the course of four days, Kaiser and Kuriokhin worked in a U.S. studio with a highly sophisticated music machine known as the synclavier. The result is an unsettling blend of traditional and avant-garde compositional work. Bear in mind that neither musician spoke the other's language, so all they had to communicate with was music.

As might be expected, the album is a hit and miss affair. Some tracks sound brilliant, and some sound like two guys playing around in a studio. It's probably more interesting on paper than it is on record in some places, but there is a ten-minute piano composition, although of course the "piano" is just another sound shooting up way beyond the range of any human. The pace veers like a rollercoaster and the track is intoxicating. But on the down side, the opening track, "Seeing Red," is a random collage of goofy sound effects and sounds decidedly amateurish. Still, there's a lot of complexity here and this is definitely an album worth working with.

DISC JUNKIE

KMFDM are a German duo who first got noticed due to their collaborations with On-U wizard Adrian Sherwood. Sherwood is present on their latest album, entitled UAIOE, in a mixing capacity only, but his influence can still be heard. The opening track, "Murder," is a direct steal from the Sherwood riff first heard on Tackhead's "What's My Mission Now?"

Exactly what KMFDM are trying to say is unclear. They speak of "needing a revolution to rip the system," but never progress beyond vague phrase spouting. For some odd reason, they also have a fixation with stealing lyrics from Frank Zappa songs. This is all pretty incidental however, because the emphasis is the beat. UAIOE is largely an industrial dance record, although some tracks seem to be almost heavy metal, albeit with tough beats. It's also a very patchy album, with some outstanding tracks, and some really dull ones. The good stuff is definitely worth checking out however, so we would recommend KMFDM to those interested in the clang and crash of the industrial scene.

Jackson's Flea Market keeps it all in the family

By BETH STOLLER
Collegian Correspondent

As a senior at UMass, I thought I had combed the area and shopped at every place imaginable. I've been to downtown Amherst, Northampton, Holyoke, Springfield and the Hampshire Mall, but I've never ventured to the Mountain Farms Mall. This past Sunday, I visited the "dead mall" and I was pleasantly surprised. I arrived at the mall in the afternoon and the parking lot was packed. I couldn't understand what attracted customers on Sundays but not any other day of the week. When I walked inside, I found the answer: Jackson's Flea Market.

As I walked around the room, I saw hundreds of tables covered with items both of old and new. From antique furniture, to modern jewelry, it seemed as if everything you could possibly ask for could be found here. I decided to ask one of the dealers about this flea market, and she knew exactly who could answer all of my questions: Jim and Millie Jackson, the owners of Jackson's Flea Market.

On Oct. 21, 1979, Jim and Millie Jackson opened Jackson's Flea Market with 17 dealers. They believed that this weekly event would attract customers to the Mountain Farms Mall which was losing quite a lot of business to the newly erected Hampshire Mall. Ten years later, Jim and Millie have not only accomplished their goal, but with 300 dealer from all over New England, they have created quite a following. "I've always had a fascination for items that people have discarded that are old and vintage," said Jim. Many of the items sold come from auction houses, tag sales, basements, attics, cellars, and other area flea markets, thereby creating a vast array of goods that cannot be found elsewhere.

Students could easily spend a few enjoyable hours browsing through the thousands of items that are available. Prices range from as little as 50 cents, to hundreds of dollars. You can find furniture, clothes, gold, antique and costume jewelry, books, pictures, old magazines, baseball cards, postcards, the list goes on and on. As Jim put it, "Somebody else's junk is another man's treasure."

But there's something more here than just artifacts from a bygone era. There's a warm and kindred spirit that permeates the entire room. Jim and Millie's children, Theresa Woodard and Jim and Joanne Jackson operate some of the booths and their daughter, Sandra Drake, works at the concession stand.

Jim noted that many of the original dealers still work at Jackson's Flea Market and they have all become somewhat of a family. Last Sunday Mr. and Mrs. Starkey's children (all of whom are dealers) threw their parents a 60th anniversary party at the flea market. According to Jim, "The dealers look forward each Sunday to talk with everyone." For many, Jackson's Flea Market gives these people the chance to catch up on the weeks events with their "Sunday friends," while conversing with the hundreds of customers who wander in and out all day long.

"We enjoy it so much that I don't know what we would do if we didn't have it as a hobby," said Angela Begin, a dealer from Greenfield who has been with Jackson's Flea Market since its beginnings with her husband, Bernard. "Jackson's is very popular," said Angela. "No matter what you're looking for you're apt to find it at this flea market."

"Sunday to me is special, because it's Jackson's Flea Market day," said Jim Jackson. Jim is thrilled with the fact that people come from miles around to see what Jackson's Flea Market has to offer. He is particularly fond of the foreign students, and loves talking with them.

Jackson's Flea Market is the perfect way to spend your lazy Sunday's looking for those things you can never find. As Jim Jackson said, "If you can't find it at Jackson's Flea Market, then you probably don't need it."

Bowie's brilliant journey through time

By AL KAUFMAN
Collegian Staff

Sound & Vision
David Bowie
Rykodisc

In the 70s, when David Bowie was at his creative and eccentric peak, he was, more or less, a commercial failure. In the 80s, with the possible exception of Let's Dance and his new Tin Machine project, his creativity has floundered while his pocketbook has swelled. With Sound & Vision, the three CD, three cassette or six album boxed set, Bowie should make heaps of money in selling his most creative, and often forgotten works, for none of the material is post-Scary Mosters, his 1980 release.

Rykodisc, which recently purchased the rights to re-release all of Bowie's material on CD, have done a remarkable job of packaging and song selection.

The packaging, Rykodisc's forte, is nothing short of remarkable. The innovative, state-of-the-art graphics overlaid onto photographs flow together perfectly, making the set, which comes complete with a 72-page book, a fine treat for the eyes. Even if you hate David Bowie, you may want to buy this just to frame and hang on your wall. But if that's your intention, then you better buy two, because the music is as beautiful as the cover.

Rykodisc could have easily turned this anthology into Changes Three by just releasing the hit songs that weren't on the Thin White Duke's first two Changes albums. But instead, they reached back into the dusty archives and came out with some fascinating songs and outtakes that the Bowie fan of the 80s is probably not aware of, but should be.

David Bowie

The hits are on there. If anything, there are too many of them. "Changes," "Moonage Daydream," "Panic In Detroit," "Young Americans" and "Ashes to Ashes" are all released in their original forms. But many of the big hits take on new twists. "Space Oddity," which opens the set, is taken from a 1969 demo tape. It's quite toe-tingling to hear how Bowie's voice has changed from that high-pitched, raw talent of twenty years ago. "John, I'm Only Dancing" and "Rebel, Rebel" are both rare versions. The little variations breathe new life into these old classics.

The sole exception is "Helden," the German version of "Heroes." It's difficult to understand the the beauty of the lyrics when you can't comprehend the language he's singing in.

Other hits, such as "Ziggy Stardust," "White Light/White Heat" and "Sufferagette City," are taken directly from Bowie's two live albums, Ziggy Stardust: The Motion Picture and David Live. It's a pleasure to hear "The Belway Brothers" and "Be My Wife" from the often overlooked The Man Who Sold the World and Low albums, respectively. And it's orgasmic for any Bowie fan to hear previously unreleased gems like the cute "London Bye Ta-Ta" or the Young Americans outtake "After Today." Also, his emotion filled cover of Bruce Springsteen's "It's Hard to Be a Saint in the City" is absolutely gut-wrenching.

Rykodisc will continue releasing all of Bowie's albums on CD over the next two years, and promise that those CDs will also include rare tracks and vintage artwork and photographs. But until then, this should keep any Bowie fan feeling hunky dory.

Accessible art for everyone to see

By LINDA WOODS
Collegian Correspondent

Psuedo-art. We've all seen it. It's usually the result of a pretentious mind pretending to be subtle and esoteric. Unfortunately, if you are not one of the exclusive few who can actually understand it, then like me, you probably walk away feeling like you can't interpret art. Well, how can we as viewers hope to feel and understand an absence of true emotion? We can't. But alas, a salvation for people of emotion and not pretention: Linda Horvitz Post.

The R. Michaelson Gallery will be exhibiting Post's recent pastels and monotypes in their downtown Amherst location. An opening reception will be held tonight from 5 p.m. to 8 p.m. The show will run until Nov. 30.

What struck me about Post's work is her reaffirmation that art must be truly felt, and not just willed. Her work erupts from the spontaneity of deeply felt emotions. Working with an imagination that is not muddy and weighed down by forced concentration, is as free of accomplishment-mania as her subjects.

Movement is her guiding theme — the people in her works passionately embrace each other, they lie in carefree gestures, and they float effortlessly in air. Most notably in her dramatic aquatic images, Post shows the viewer that the inner-self is always in motion — loving, shining, confirming, and changing.

Post returns to the R. Michaelson Gallery with seemingly unlimited talent and a very impressive reputation. She has exhibited extensively in numerous galleries, including the Museum at the Rhode Island School of Design, the Newport Art Museum, the Boston Center for the Arts and the Mary Ryan Gallery in New York City. A Fall River native, Post presently resides in Northampton and does her work in a studio in Holyoke. She will be at the gallery on opening night to sign posters.

This exhibit is not to be missed. Linda Post is offering her work to us as a reminder that we are human and art is for everyone.

Rock with a Jewish twist

Is a song a means to evoke religious and ethnic fervor? This question may be pondered to the sounds of Kolos, a six-member outfit from New York.

In their own unique way, Kolos adds yet a new dimension to rock and roll — the Jewish tradition. Stemming from diverse influences, the array of talent fuses jazz, pop and reggae into an innovative musical experience.

For instance, Jewish and African melody motivates the song "Eretz Cholov U'dvosh," and "Hava Negilah," a traditional Hasidic tune, explores Latin and Eastern European dirges.

Kolos' songs, vocalized in Hebrew and English, have captivated many a New York socialite. Exhilarated crowds have rendered approval at many New York City concert halls, such as the Brooklyn Academy of Music.

Now on tour, Kolos will appear only once in the Pioneer Valley, which makes them a must for all to see. Their Saturday, Nov. 4 show at Smith College is sponsored by the Five-College B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundation. Doors open at Sage Hall at 8 p.m.

Volleyball to play at Harvard

As the season winds down for the University of Massachusetts volleyball team it becomes possible to put the year in a clearer perspective.

True, the team is 2-20. But they are also a young team, and will lose only two players when the season ends. They have shown something that does not appear in the final statistics, character.

UMass will not be going to the Atlantic 10 tournament at the end of the season, regardless of the results of this upcoming weekend when it will be going to the Harvard Tournament.

UMass will play Yale (16-7), Harvard (9-8) and Brown (6-13) in the Tournament and will be looking to end the season on a more positive note.

"I know they're tired of losing." said coach Carol Ford. "It's kind of frustrating."

—DAN SARAZEN

there has been a turn of events since then.

Catanzaro is healthy. But two weeks ago, Phelan started to develop stress fractures in her legs. She has not played in two weeks and Hixon does not know if she will play at all this weekend.

"She was given the OK to start running," Hixon said. "I wouldn't anticipate that Kathy would get the starting nod anyways at this point. She's been out for almost two weeks."

The big assignment has been handed to junior defender Lisa Berardinelli. "Lisa is going to have to do over and above what she's done in the past," Hixon said. "She is going to have to play as well against Jane as she did against Lisa Brone from Boston University."

The Minutewomen shut the Terriers out in that game which brings up another interesting factor that should play in the Minutewomen's favor. Freshman goaltender Phillipa Scott has quietly progressed throughout the season. She ended up leading the Atlantic 10 in goaltending with a .40 goals against average.

"She has been very consistent throughout the entire season," Hixon said. "I've been very pleased with her and she gives the rest of our team confidence. She's got to be the settling factor."

Catanzaro is not the Owls' only factor though. Sophomore Lori Larneka has scored six goals and 11 assists while junior Robbin Shreve has eight goals and an assist. Offense certainly is not Temple's weakness.

"We have to keep the other team from scoring," Madison said. "If they double team Jane, we have a couple of other threats that can score goals. So that's not our concern. We're getting the goals scored but we're not keeping them out."

Temple goalie Jill Marple, who has a 2.1 goals against average, will be responsible for keeping the ball out of the net.

The players that the Owls defense must contain are seniors Kathy DeAngelis and Mara Frattasio. DeAngelis has led the Minutewomen in scoring for the third season in a row with 14 goals and three assists. Frattasio has netted 11 goals and one assist.

After Temple's tie with Lehigh earlier this week, a team that is not in the NCAA Top 20, the Owls will really need this game to impress the NCAA.

Penn State vs. Rutgers: Newman was happy to get the No. 1 seed but is not underestimating anyone, including Rutgers. "In the tournament, that (being seeded No. 1) doesn't mean anything," Newman said. Anything can happen in a tournament."

And if Rutgers gets a bunch of hollering fans out at its home stadium where the tournament is being played, the possibility of a big upset takes on better odds, maybe.

"We're happy to be at home," Petracco said. "But in a tournament like this, home field does not always mean as much."

Rutgers has a couple of threats in seniors Kelly Ryan (11 goals and 11 assists) and Barb Coates (nine goals, one assist).

Penn State has the second leading scorer in the A-10 with junior Kristen Winters who had six goals and one assist in the conference as well as 18 goals and six assists overall. The Nittany Lions are loaded up front with Chelle Frates (13 goals, three assists), Susanne Bisignaro (nine goals, four assists), and Elenore Stone (nine goals, two assists).

Penn State also has the luxury of having two quality goaltenders. Michele Brennan was the starter when the year began and gave up just 10 goals in 11 games. But Connie Ehresman filled in for Brennan during the middle of the season when Brennan went down with a hamstring pull and ended up finishing second to Scott in goaltending in the conference, giving up just five goals in five games. She was in net when Penn State won, 4-2, against Rutgers.

The finals which UMass won 1-0 on a goal with 30 seconds left by Mara Frattasio last year, will be played on Sunday at 1 p.m.

Rugby to play Amherst

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts club rugby team will play Amherst College, tomorrow at 11:30 a.m. at Amherst College.

UMass, 3-3 is coming off a 11-0 loss to Yale last weekend and has been eliminated from the New England tournament. But UMass captain Kevin Turner is looking at the last two games of the season with optimism.

"Now that we can't make the tournament, we are working to give our young players more experience," Turner said.

Of the 65 players on the team, 20 are first year players who had never played rugby before this season.

Two younger players that have been playing well as of late are Dave Lally and Dan Hallaran, both of who moved up from the 'C' team to the 'A' team in less than a season.

"In the course of the season, those two guys have made the most improvement," Turner said.

The players who must play well against Amherst (1-4), who has jumped from Division III to Division I in rugby this year, though are the backs such as Turner, Tony Pirro, Jim Counahan and Bob Carney.

"We have to play together as a unit," Turner said. "The key to rugby is support. We need our backs to play well."

Another key player for UMass will be Rich Kendall who plays the prop position.

"The past couple of games, we've had great intensity but this past weekend against Yale, we were just flat," Turner said.

The Minutewomen finish up their season next weekend at home against Springfield College at the lower Boyden Fields at 12:30 p.m. on Saturday.

"There's a time and a place where we can take Brown and that time is now,"

In their last encounter with the Bruins (an 8-7 Minuteman loss on Oct. 22) UMass was torched by the counter attack game. This time around Yarworth is hoping Alex Yelensky and G.T. Ladd come up with big days to stop Brown's attack.

"They're both good athletes, but I need more consistency from them, said Yarworth.

"But I'm optimistic. The kids are focused, with hopes of winning this whole thing."

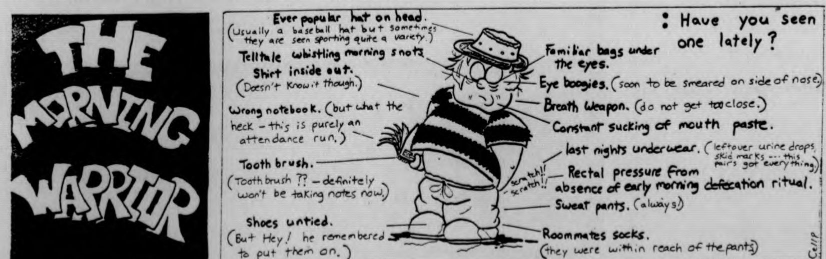
By CELLI



THE MORNING WARRIOR
Have you seen one lately?
Ever popular hat on head. (Usually a baseball hat but sometimes they are seen sporting quite a variety.)
Telltale whistling morning snots
Shirt inside out. (Doesn't Know it though.)
Wrong notebook. (but what the heck - this is purely an attendance run.)
Tooth brush. (Tooth brush ?? - definitely won't be taking notes now.)
Shoes untied. (But Hey! he remembered to put them on.)
Familiar bags under the eyes.
Eye boogies. (soon to be smeared on side of nose.)
Breath Weapon. (do not get too close.)
Constant sucking of mouth paste.
last nights underwear. (leftover urine drops, skid marks --- this pair's got everything.)
scratch!! scratch!!
Rectal pressure from absence of early morning defecation ritual.
Sweat pants. (always!)
Roommates socks. (they were within reach of the pants)

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE! Plan financial moves with greater care. A long-range strategy is critical to business success. January could bring a move up the corporate ladder if you improve your technical skills. Past emotional upsets will be erased by the good things that happen next spring. A summer romance could turn out to be the real thing. An early autumn wedding may ensue. Your health is strengthened when you stick to a diet and follow a regular exercise regimen. Ask loved one's cooperation.

CELEBRITIES BORN ON THIS DATE: American poet William Cullen Bryant, boxer Larry Holmes, Massachusetts Gov. Michael S. Dukakis, actor Charles Bronson.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You may feel a bit of resentment about certain expenses. In some ways you are right, but grumbling will not help. Enlist other's help in reducing costs. Tackle personal chores in late afternoon.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Your home may be overflowing with possessions, including gifts. Reduce clutter. Someone who acts resentful may be envious. Try to overlook petty comments. You have your own agenda and priorities. Pains of the soul will soon go away. Don't forget others care for your well being.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): You may not have realized before how attractive a younger person is. A romance could be quietly starting up. Complete routine tasks before you begin a new project. Meet all financial deadlines.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Look forward to a great work day; your co-workers are enthusiastic and helpful. Repay any special favors. Attractive newcomer will make an indelible first impression. You could be lucky in love!

LEO (July 23- Aug. 22): An excellent day to promote pet projects. If you are in an executive position, make certain your directions are followed. Your co-workers are willing to carry their share of the load.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): As you move ahead, you may have to drop certain acquaintances. An ambitious mate or business partner spurs you on. A close friend asks a personal favor. Grant it if you can.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): You may decide that the single life is not all you thought it would be. Join a church or sports-oriented group if eager to meet new faces. Put your best foot forward.

SCORPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Make certain that your home is free of hazards. A relative or guest's mistake could be costly. Check insurance coverage. Romance flourishes in an atmosphere of trust and consideration. Be generous.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): Be careful not to give the impression that you play favorites at work. Convincing others to do your bidding requires finesse. Confront someone who has been gossiping about you. Lay down the law.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): It may be difficult for others to understand how much you care for them. Stay silent, and let your actions do the talking. Remember to make a special gesture for a friend and/or loved one in need. This is an important week for romance, don't let stubbornness get in your way.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): Unconventional adventures could destroy your prestige and peace of mind, even if you believe them to be unknown to others. Curb an urge to act on impulse.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): Others seem fair-minded and ready to accept reasonable explanations. Let a loved one know how you feel. Romance is featured tonight. Wear something elegant, even if you usually prefer jeans.

Swimmers ready to splash into season

By TAMIR LIPTON
Collegian Correspondent

As the other University of Massachusetts sporting teams gear up for the NCAA tournaments, the women's swimming team is preparing for its first meet of the season, this Saturday against Smith College (1 p.m.).

"The first meet of the season is always important. Smith is not one of our toughest competitors, but they did beat us a couple of years ago," said UMass coach Robert Newcomb. When you have this many young people, the first meet is always important, it sets up the framework for the rest of the year. This first meet is like an experiment."

Newcomb spoke about his aspirations for the upcoming meet, "I would think we should win this meet. If we don't, I would say we swam terribly." While Newcomb predicts a successful season, he is the first to acknowledge that the team is young, "I have 10 freshmen who have not competed for us before."

Despite being young, UMass does have Michele Leary returning. Leary holds five school records, and is, "probably the finest athlete that has come out of this program. She will swim just about anything that we need. She leads by example," said Newcomb.

On Saturday, Newcomb and the rest of the UMass swim team will see who is going to be a key contributor for the remainder of the season. "We have been pleased with the results of our time trials, but time will tell what kind of a team we have," Newcomb said.

State) is the third seed.

Penn State (16-2-1 overall and 4-0-1 in the Atlantic 10) has been labeled the pre-tournament favorite with the Atlantic 10 giving the Nittany Lions the No. 1 seed. With that seeding, Penn State gets to play the No. 4 seed Rutgers, 13-8, on the Scarlet Knights home field at 11 a.m. on Saturday.

"Its a nice position to be in," Penn State coach Charlene Morette Newman said. "I think it's a reward for the season we had in the conference."

The Nittany Lions opponent, Rutgers, which is not even ranked in the NCAA's Top 20 absolutely has to win the whole tournament to receive an NCAA invitation. The Scarlet Knights at 1-4 in the Atlantic 10 this season need a complete turnaround.

"We have to believe we can win," Rutgers coach Ann Petracco said. "We have to play like we did when we lost to Penn State, 4-2."

And with that here is a look at both semifinal matchups.

UMass vs. Temple: The key in this game for UMass is stopping Temple's All-American forward Jane Catanzaro. Just a junior, Catanzaro can be considered one of, if not the most dangerous forward in the nation. Her 36 goals and eight assists in the regular season established a new school single season scoring record. Catanzaro led the Atlantic 10 in scoring with 10 goals and three assists. She can be stopped though.

Back on Oct. 7, UMass freshman Kathy Phelan shadowed Catanzaro all over the field and in the end, Catanzaro was left scratching her head as the Minutewomen went on to win 2-0 at Totman Field. But "Tom Fasano and Paul Tornatore have been working hard. We might give them the opportunity to toss the pill around," Reid said.

No matter how you slice it, the team UMass puts on the field will be relatively inexperienced. Reid parallels his Minutemen with tomorrow's opponent, Richmond.

"They are an experienced veteran unit right now compared to us," Reid said. The Spiders are thin in the ranks as well, but have improved steadily as the season has passed.

While UMass is inexperienced in some spots, the Spiders are just plain young. There are 14 first-year players (eight redshirt, six true freshmen) listed on the depth chart for tomorrow's game.

The youthfulness shows in the standings, where UR is just 1-7 and 0-6 in the conference, but recent performances against New Hampshire (21-7 loss) and Connecticut (13-3 loss last week at Richmond) prove that this team isn't as bad as its outer appearance shows.

"They have a feeling that they are getting better," Reid said. "Where we are at right now, everybody is a world-beater."

Leading the way is quarterback Kyle Horner, who has thrown for over 1,000 yards this year. Tailback Eric Hopkins is one of the YanCon's leading rushers with 630 yards and four touchdowns.

The two teams already have five common opponents, with Richmond going 0-5 and UMass being 1-3-1. UMass beat Rhode Island (31-6) and tied James Madison (28-all), while Richmond has lost to both (45-14 vs. URI, 31-0 vs. JMU). Both have lost to Maine, Boston University and Connecticut.

And when talking about these two teams, the first subject to pop up is usually the 1987 marathon in Richmond, in which the Spiders pulled out a four-overtime thriller, 52-51.

Chances are a game like that won't happen tomorrow, but who knows? Stranger things have happened before.

Richmond's first-year coach, Jim Marshall, hasn't had the best of times in his rookie season, and he doesn't believe things are going to get any easier here tomorrow.

"UMass is a football team that has a lot of good athletes," Marshall said. "Barring some bad breaks, this team could be one of the stronger teams in the league."

But right now, the Minutemen are simply trying to pull together as best as they can. At a time when it grows harder to put 11 guys on the field, Reid would like to take that one step further tomorrow.

"What we'd really like is for the students to come down and watch us," Reid said. "We'd really like them in there yelling their heads off."

Even though UMass is technically out of any kind of championship race, Reid sees this as a key game in establishing the Minutemen for years to come.

"The guys are working hard. We've been going through a lot of adversity, just like our school," Reid said. "We need the 12th person."

But right now, he'd settle for 11 healthy ones.

Banged up Reds to head to NCAA tourney

UMass could use a few days to heal wounds but UVa looms

The University of Massachusetts will head to Virginia battered and bruised this weekend.

The University of Massachusetts will play the familiar role of the road warrior when they meet the University of Virginia Sunday (1:30 p.m.) in a first-round NCAA playoff game, but their locker room before the game might resemble a hospital ward with the rash of injuries.

The Reds have proven that the road isn't too foreign to them, accumulating a 7-1-2 record as opposed to their 4-2-2 Boyden mark.

"This will be the first time that we've had to play on the road in the first round," UMass coach Jim Rudy pointed out. That's because the Reds didn't draw a bye, like they did last year, but actually Rudy sees that as an advantage.

"Last year the layoff [13 days] was too much and we came out a little flat against Wisconsin," Rudy said. Assistant coach Lisa Gozley agreed, adding, "it's so hard to keep practicing like it's a real game."

This year's different, however. A two-week layoff would be quite beneficial since the Reds have been swamped with a slew of key injuries lately.

"We are physically hurting," Rudy said. "We are as injured as any other team I've had. We're really beat up."

The roll call for the wounded looks like this:

- Kim Montgomery — The sweeper since the fourth game, Montgomery has been labeled as a "major question mark" by coach Rudy after sustaining a knee injury against Brown last week. This is only adding to an ankle injury that she's been suffering through all year.
- Michele Woodside — After playing the last two weeks in the midfield like she was possessed, Woodside has been sidelined all week with what's been diagnosed as an inflammed plantar flacia. "It's been suggested that she's got a ligament problem, but whatever it is, she's got a damn sore foot," Rudy said.
- Lisa Mickelson — The freshman's role has been limited in the last few weeks after her right hip finally forced her to the bench. After plenty of rest and recovery, boom — what happens?! Her left hip starts to give out!

Some of the other injuries are Kim Eynard (bone chips in her foot), April Kater (ankle), and Sue Gaudette (groin).

Regardless, Rudy feels that the injury bug shouldn't affect what happens on the field. "Whether they're injured or not injured," Rudy said. "They're going to show up and play."

In their 2-0 loss, UMass wasn't hurting; they just weren't physically ready to play the Cavaliers. It was the Reds' first game and compounded with the blistering heat, UMass couldn't keep up with UVa, who scored twice on second-half counterattacks.

"I think we could have and should have won that game," Rudy said. "But I'm not sure whether we could have held them off with the way we faded in the last 20 minutes."

Rudy feels his team shouldn't have to do anything differently tactically, and feels that his match fitness might be a strength this time rather than a weakness.

"I think it's really important to play a good first half and stay in the game, because we usually come on in the second half."

But all the injuries have to figure in somewhere if UMass is to advance into the quarterfinal round against Colorado College.

Rudy feels that when gametime rolls around, his players will know what will happen to those injuries.

"You get on the field, the adrenalin's flowing, the fans are screaming, the ref's ready to blow the whistle, and some of those little injuries fall by the wayside."

Water polo to head to N.E.s

By JOHN STEVEN MARPLE

Prepping for next week's Eastern Championships, the University of Massachusetts water polo team will take part in the New England Championships this weekend at Harvard.

The games are set up such that the six teams are divided up into two brackets. Brown, Yale and Boston College are in bracket A with UMass, Harvard and MIT in bracket B.

The first place winner of bracket A will play the second place school from bracket B and the winner of bracket B will take on the second place school from bracket A. The winners will play for the championship.

Tomorrow, UMass will play MIT in the morning at 10:30 and Harvard at 7:30 p.m. UMass has already defeated the Crimson twice this year, while they have yet to topple Brown after three attempts this year.

"We've played them under tough conditions," said UMass coach Russ Yarworth.

UMass to knock heads with Richmond

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts football coach Jim Reid isn't ready to panic yet, but if you're interested in football and have any eligibility left, he may have something for you.

Suffice to say the Minutemen (3-4-1, 1-4 in the Yankee Conference) will be taking the field against the University of Richmond with a few bumps and bruises. If you haven't been to a game in a while, you definitely won't be able to tell the players without a scorecard tomorrow at Warren McGuirk Alumni Stadium (1 p.m.).

Since the season opener against James Madison at the Stadium, 10 of the 22 players who started that game have dropped out of the lineup, most of them because of injuries. When you speak of baptism under fire, there have been a lot of different players filling the shoes lately.

The injuries have been piling up slowly but surely, but last week's Bang-up Bowl against Northeastern saw center Al Pogarian (broken ankle), fullback David Mitchell (ankle sprain) and linebacker Chris Tenkin (shoulder) join the cast of the wounded.

Making their first starts of the season tomorrow will be center Mark Wojciechowski, fullback Duncan MacRae and true freshman linebacker Bobby Burke. Other players will get tested at unfamiliar positions, all in an effort to pull together enough healthy people to play.

"Mark Wojciechowski had a nice week of practice," Reid said. "After the first series last week he calmed down and did a nice job. Duncan MacRae and Jim Pastorick had done credible jobs in the past, and Bobby Burke filled in nicely. The freshmen are no longer freshmen."

Tackle Rich Cavanaugh also drew praise from Reid for his work this week. Cavanaugh could work into a rotation with starting left tackle Jay Gabbe and Wojchiehowski to keep things fresh.

"It's a decision where we ask whether making two lineup changes will be better than only one," Reid said.

Other thin spots still include tailback, where Jerome Bledsoe will apparently sit out another game with a thigh pull. Steve Olson stepped in last week, while flanker Ron Blauvelt moved over as Olson's backup and impressed some folks.

"The big surprise was how effectively Ron Blauvelt [45 yards on four carries] ran," Reid said. "Steve Olson did a nice job on the tough yardage, but we can't always depend on him on a 12-play drive."

Olson, who has asthma, can play only two or three plays at a time before having to take a break. Blauvelt will be key in these tight spots to keep the flow going.

"It's a nightmare trying to call plays," Reid said. "But Ronnie's learned more of the offense this past week."

It's become pretty obvious how vital the running game has been to the Minutemen this year. UMass has been able to pass the ball, but the wins come when the ground game is at its best.

And for the ground game to click, it's handy to have a healthy Gary Wilkos at the helm. Even without Bledsoe and the option game, Wilkos is a threat to pull the draw on you on any given play, something that only helps to keep the opposing defense guessing.

But right now Wilkos remains a question mark. He is listed to start the game at quarterback, although his tender right wing has taken a pounding each of the last three weeks, and it may be getting to the point where he, too, will have to sit out.

The backups there are proven, with Paul Tornatore and Tom Fasano each having seen some action this year.

Minutewomen to defend A-10 Championship

NCAA berth on the line at Rutgers University

By GEORGE AUSTIN
Collegian Staff

It's funny; the prize everyone looks to capture in the Atlantic 10 tournment this weekend is an invitation to another tourney — the NCAA tournament.

The winner of the A-10 Championships receives an automatic berth to the NCAA's postseason show, which will start next weekend in four regions around the country. No doubt it's the show that the University of Massachusetts, Temple, Rutgers, and Penn State — the only teams in the tourney — have their eye on.

While UMass (the defending Atlantic 10 champion) is the No. 8 team in the nation and Penn State is No. 4, and both have solid shots to make the 12-team field even if they are upset this weekend, Temple must have at least a win in this tourney, and Rutgers has to take the title for either to win a spot in the national tournament.

Penn State, however, is the only team that appears to have an absolute lock on an NCAA berth. UMass coach Pam Hixon thinks that a loss in the semifinals to Temple (Saturday at 1 p.m. at Rutgers University's Rutgers Stadium Complex in Piscataway, N.J.), could possibly drop UMass five spots in the NCAA's poll and spell the end of the Minutewomen's season.

"We're not going in there with the idea that we've got anything sewed up," Hixon, the 1988 Atlantic 10 coach of the year, said. "There's no way we can enter a tournament casually because this is a preparation for what comes next . . . It's a tough call. I think we're in a pack of teams in New England that with one stroke of bad luck, you can be put to the bottom of the region and that is a killer because if you go to the bottom of the region in New England, you go to 10 or below in the nation and there is no breathing room because we're all so close. So I feel strongly that this Temple game is very important."

The Minutewomen, 13-4-2, are the No. 3 team in New England right now behind Providence who is No. 6 in the nation and Northeastern (No. 7). If the Minutewomen lose though, there is still hope. But for Temple, 12-7-2 and ranked No. 13 in the NCAA's poll this week, a loss to UMass would bring the end.

"It's hard to say," first-year Temple coach Michele Madison said of her team's shot at a playoff spot coming into this tournament. "We're right at the spot where they (the NCAA selection committee members) can do anything. We just have to do it on the field."

UMass comes into the tournament seeded second by virtue of its 4-1 conference record, the Minutewomen's only loss a 1-0 setback at Penn State. Temple, which was 3-1-1 in the conference (that record includes a 3-3 tie with Penn

Students urged to call reps. from Newman

Representative Stan Rosenberg (D-Amherst), speaking at a rally on the Student Union steps last Friday, urged University of Massachusetts students to take advantage of the Newman Center's week-long phone drive by contacting other members of the state legislature.

The center is hosting a week-long phone drive, organized by the Leadership Coalition, in an attempt to demonstrate to state legislators a more impressive show of concern about the posssibility of further cuts in public higher education, said Lisa Nelson, undergraduate senate chairperson for the committee on public policy.

The Leadership Coalition is also holding a postcard drive out of Student Union 406E, in which students can send postcards to state legislators urging tax hikes, she said.

Student Trustee Eric Nakajima said the Leadership Coalition plans to bring students to the Statehouse on Wednesday, when the House Ways and Means Committeee is in session, to hand-deliver the postcards.

Rosenberg stressed the importance of continued student contact with state legislators.

"Students need to continue the effort they started with the rally in Boston," he said. "They need to call their legislators to urge them not to support any further cuts or increases in fees and tuition."

Rosenberg said the impending $6.4 million cuts to the University are part of a "savings package" that the Statehouse is currently debating.

Legislators are hoping the cuts, along with increased taxes, will balance the state's budget, which is running a $500 million deficit.

"Public education is such a non-fixed portion of the budget that it becomes vulnerable when [state-funded programs] are cut," Rosenberg said.

Entitlement Programs, such as benefits and pensions, are fixed portions of the budget.

Pan-African Students Association member Rudy Krigger, who also spoke at the rally, said the budget cuts are leading the campus into a more racially tense situation.

Krigger said tuition increases will cause more minority students to be excluded from the University. In addition, he said, minority recruiting efforts will be hampered by a lack of funding.

Women's soccer wins in playoffs

By RICK SETO
Collegian Staff

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — The University of Massachusetts women's soccer team entered into the first round of the playoffs with something to prove, and after the way they played yesterday, the Reds left here with their hearts on their sleeves.

Nearly two months ago, the University of Virginia spoiled the UMass opener with a 2-0 win at Boyden Field, but it was the Reds who had the last laugh this time, defeating the Cavaliers, 2-1, in the opening round of the NCAA tournament.

With the win, the Reds (12-3-4) advance to a quarterfinal matchup with Colorado College Saturday in Colorado Springs, Co.

Michele Woodside capped off a UMass-dominated first half with a goal in the final minute, and Kim Eynard provided the eventual game-winner in the second half.

Senior goalkeeper Mary Curtis played an inspired game. She turned aside only three shots, but Curtis was a rock, holding Virginia (16-5) in check, including a furious rally late in the game as Virginia tried desperately to tie it up.

Workshop addresses societal homophobia

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

A mother and son smiled at each other as several people discussed how they had come out to their parents — by giving them books on homosexuality and asking them to read parts they had highlighted.

Nancy Segal and her son Michael Sebastian, both from Ashby, understood the stories because Michael also gave his mother highlighted reading this summer when he came out to her.

The mother and son attended the Parents and Friends of Lesbians and Gays workshop on Saturday, which was part of Gay, Lesbian, Bisexual Awareness Week.

P-FLAG is an international organization with approximately 200 groups across the country, said Jean Genasci, who coordinates the Pioneer Valley P-FLAG with her husband.

Segal said even as a young child, she knew her son was different. Although Michael came out during college, she said it was not until after he graduated that he told his mother.

Segal said she began to realize her son was gay when he was in college. She said she wanted him to tell her but knew she had to wait for him to come to her.

"I knew there was one piece of him that I didn't face up to," she said. "I wish I could have been there for him."

She said this was the first time she had ever been to P-FLAG or anything like it.

"There is a lot of empathy and understanding here," she said. "Today I saw people who kind of feel the way I do."

Sebastian said, "I'm really glad she's willing to go and see what other people go though."

The workshop began with each of the 25 people writing down fears about attending the workshop and questions about lesbian, bisexual, and gay issues.

FBI to recruit at UM

By KERRY HERLIHY
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts administration, having ruled last year that banning CIA recruitment would be an abridgement of students' academic freedom, has given the FBI the green light to recruit on campus.

Representatives from the FBI are scheduled to hold an information session tommorrow and recruit Wednesday.

In the spring of 1987, students protested the CIA's presence on campus. The late Abbie Hoffman and Amy Carter were arrested at UMass for protesting. After a much publicized trial, both were acquitted.

"There are lots of companies in the United States that people have problems with but they should not be denied the right to recruit where they want," said Ann Quinlan, dean of the University's Academic Support Services.

"I tend to agree with the pro-choice/free speech argument," Quinlan said. "Personally I may not agree with some organizations that come here, but I'm not going to make that choice for an undergraduate body."

In April 1987, a Faculty Senate Ad Hoc Committee on Picketing and Recruitment, composed of faculty and students, was set up by the administration in response to the protests. The committee concluded that CIA recruiters should be banned from campus.

However, the Executive Board of Trustees rejected the committee's proposal.

Acting on the board's decision, Chancellor Joseph Duffey instituted a Recruiting Review Committee to review organizations that are scheduled to recruit on campus.

The only prerequisite for a meeting with the committee is a petition signed by at least 1,000 people.

According to Quinlan, there has been no official written petitions, nor any indication that there will be any opposi-

Skelton wants young voters to be heard

By WILLIAM J. GEORGIADES
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — Claiming he wants to be a voice for young people, mayoral candidate Rob Skelton said at a rally last Friday on the Town Hall steps that he wants to raise the political consciousness of young people.

Skelton, a UMass senior, announced his candidacy for tomorrow's election Tuesday, the deadline for write-in candidates.

"The young people in this town are not transients, I don't care if you've lived here for five or 55 years, if you live here then you have a right to affect the local political process," Skelton said to some 50 ralliers.

"This city is not just about 50-year-old men. Young people have a choice," he said to the ralliers, who waved banners proclaiming "Northampton Mayor: A Job for Rob."

"A government for the people and by the people means you have to assert yourself," Skelton said. In response, the crowd chanted "Register and take control, so we can fill this town with soul."

"Half the people I told about this rally didn't even know where Town Hall is," Skelton said. "We have to raise political consciousness among younger people if we're to have any say in the future."

Skelton stressed the rights "of trees and dogs." He was alluding to an incident last spring when David Musante, Northampton's incumbent mayor, killed a tree on Masonic Ave. amid fervent protests from local residents, Skelton said.

"[The tree killing] issue encapsulates the local dissatisfaction with the politicians of this town," Skelton said.

Speaking at a campaign rally, Northampton mayoral candidate Rob Skelton seeks the young, radical vote.

He also said Northampton State Hospital should be converted to affordable housing.

"We have the Northampton State Hospital that is empty, and has thousands of square feet and they're not being used for diddly squat," Skelton said.

He said he is trying to attract the votes of people who, like himself, are politically and economically disenfranchised.

"I want the true disgruntled vote, the protest vote," Skelton said.

He also said he is saddened that the Red Lion Diner canceled its 24-hour service and he offered to make pancakes at 3 a.m. for anyone who dropped by his home.

Response to the speech, which was liberally peppered with accordian music, varied.

Several onlookers refused comment. Others, however, were more enthusiastic.

Andy Niccotera, a local businessman said, "I think we need a new mayor and Skelton supplies that need."

Cynthia Jenson, a local resident and mother of two said, "He's not going to win but I'm glad he's running and I think he should sing more at Bonducci's."

"I think people are very bored in Northampton and this is just one more sign that people are cracking," said one person who did not wish to be identified.

Bob Berger, a local resident said, "Rob Skelton is a brave man."

Group examines diversity

By LISA SHAPIRO
Collegian Staff

Ten people searched their own backgrounds Saturday to look for clues about the importance of diversity at a Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual, Awareness Week workshop.

The workshop, "Issues of Diversity in the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Community," was part of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual Awareness week.

The program began with a profile exercise, in which the participants copied a chart which listed the categories gender, sexual orientation, race, religious heritage, class, age, and ability. They marked whether they felt they were on the dominant or subordinate end of the categories.

The leader of the workshop, Grace Ross, coordinator of the Women's Alliance in the Framingham/Marlboro area, said this was a good way to start the discussion by getting a handle on some complex issues.

"This is a tool for thinking about the multiplicity of things that are going on now. Ten years ago you could have left off class, age, and ability. The list gets longer," Ross said.

The group broke down into groups according to religion a and race.

Ross said there are always hidden differences even within a group of seemingly similar people.

"These differences are not obvious and clear cut," she said. "We have to stop looking at diversity as a skin issue, but as a cultural one. Within Whites, there will be cultural differences."

"People would rather be with like people. Why does it make you feel unsafe to be with different kinds of people?" Ross asked.

Ian Youngblood, a Hampshire College student said that looking at diversity is an empowering feat.

"We need to recognize diversity in our own community. The more people you can

Fac. Sen. condemns racism

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The Faculty Senate voted overwhelmingly Thursday to condemn violent racial acts at the University of Massachusetts, thereby supporting students of color.

Maria Tymoczko, the rules committee chair, said the Faculty Senate should not ignore the two alleged racial beatings by White men on UMass students of color last month.

"The faculty and the Faculty Senate should send a clear message that racial violence is not an acceptable standard at the University," she said. "It's important to speak out in favor of a racial climate where people, regardless of their race, can conduct their affairs and relate to each other."

According to a rules committee report, racially motivated incidents at UMass during the past several years caused a climate of fear and isolation to many students of color.

The report states: "A message which shows unequivocal rejection of racial violence can help alleviate some of the affected students' feelings of isolation and can help set standards of acceptable behavior at the University."

The rules committee recommended the faculty:

- Generate inclass discussions about the causes and effects of violence directed against individuals solely because they are members of a targeted group.
- Cooperate with Residential Academic Programs aimed at fostering a sense of community within the residence halls.
- Call upon the Faculty Senate's Student Affairs and University Life Council to disseminate information on how police should handle a racial incident and explore ways to ensure the physical safety of all members of the UMass community.

EXTRA MAN ON THE FIELD? — The Boyden Fields get mowed Friday afternoon.

BOG gives WMUA more space

By PAUL MORRIS
Collegian Staff

The Board of Governors voted Thursday to permit WMUA radio to expand into the room now occupied by Spectrum magazine.

Before voting, the governors debated for more than an hour over whether Spectrum would be allowed to keep artwork in a closet in their current headquarters, room 103 after Feb. 12 if extenuating circumstances prevent a closet from being built in their new office in the Student Union.

UMass radio station WMUA, located in Campus Center 102, may expand into the space it has sought for six years, room 103, after Nov. 20.

The room will be used for storage and office work, according to Scott Lever, a WMUA chairperson. Spectrum, an arts magazine that is published about once a year, will move into the recently vacated room 406E in the Student Union building. Room 406E is the temporary headquarters for budget crisis issues.

Gov. Angela Paquin said Spectrum should not be penalized if they are making an honest effort to get the closet built.

"Since WMUA wants the space badly and wants Spectrum out of there, they should act as a watchdog," she said. "The closet could be built in three days and if they (WMUA's staff) find it's taking too long they should go to building operations.'

Gov. Susan Gordon said the board should not make any hasty decisions.

"WMUA has waited for space for a long time," she said. "Let's listen to all concerns, allowing safety valves and providing things for both groups. If Spectrum doesn't make a conscious effort then they will lose the space."

Lever, who has pursued the space for 18 months, said during the past year he has become skeptical about the progress of the expansion.

"A lot of governors feel I'm ungrateful, but my experience is that if you don't tie things up tightly something happens," Lever said. "I'm glad I'm graduating in May."

David Lyng, managing editor of Spectrum, said he is happy to be moving out of the Campus Center basement and into the Student Union building where he can mingle with people from other organizations.

State gun law questioned

Officials say Bartley-Fox effectiveness deflated

BOSTON (AP) — While Boston has seen a recent increase in shootings, authorities are questioning the success of a 1974 law that imposed a mandatory jail sentence for carrying an illegal weapon.

Heralded when it was passed as an answer to a rash of shooting deaths, the Bartley-Fox law now is drawing criticism for being ineffective, and spawning recriminations among police, prosecutors and judges who blame each other for weak enforcement.

The Bartley-Fox law imposes a mandatory one-year jail sentence on people convicted of carrying a firearm without a permit.

"Our ultimate aim was to make streets safer," said former House Speaker David M. Bartley, one of the bill's chief sponsors. "We felt if you walked down the street with a concealed weapon and did not have a license to do so, you ought to go to jail."

The measure enjoyed some initial success in lowering the number of the city's killings involving guns, a figure that never has returned to the pre-Bartley-Fox level, according to Boston police statistics.

In 1974, firearms were used in 70 of 134 killings in the city. In 1988, guns were used in 53 of 95 Boston murders. As of Sept. 30, 1989 guns were used in 40 of the city's 73 killings.

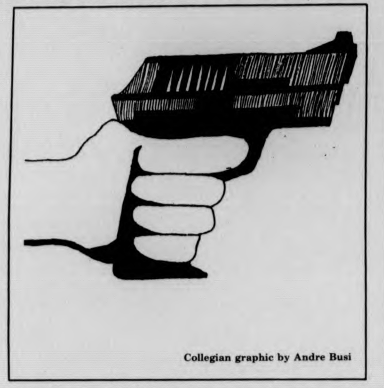
But, after a spate of shootings killed several Black city residents and a White pregnant woman, critics are charging the strength of the law, and the power of its deterrent, has abated.

In the past 15 years, defense lawyers, prosecutors and police have been able to arrange plea bargains to get lighter sentences, and the law also does not apply to juveniles in most cases, which weakened its deterrence, officials said.

Such loopholes in Bartley-Fox "have made it a laughing stock," said state police Maj. William E. Duke.

In addition, judges and law enforcement officials, faced with an overworked justice system and crowded jails, helped to undermine the law, critics said.

"My policy is to recommend the maximum for anyone who pleads guilty to carrying a gun. But all we do is recommend; judges impose the sentence," said Suffolk County District Attorney Newman Flanagan.



Collegian graphic by Andre Busi

Mary Lou Szulborski, the executive director of the Governor's Anticrime Council, said court space and judge time are scarce resources, and law enforcement officials face a constant pressure to settle.

To investigate the status of the law and stem the finger-pointing, the state is planning a six-month survey of individuals arrested for firearms violations, Szulborski said.

Others, such as Glenn L. Pierce, a sociologist who has studied the law at Northeastern University, suggest the law was never meant to be a panacea for the state's crime problem.

"We shouldn't rely on Bartley-Fox to lock the barn door after the horse is out," he said.

Crime boss to appeal convictions

BOSTON (AP) — Attorneys for Gennaro Angiulo and his associates get their day in court Tuesday to appeal their clients' 1986 convictions on accusations that they participated in organized crime.

Angiulo's attorney, Anthony Cardinals, contends a federal jury was affected by media reports of his alleged underworld activities during the long trial in 1985 and 1986.

"Jerry should not have been tried in Massachusetts despite the fact that jurors said they could decide the case strictly on the facts, despite their knowledge of his background," Cardinale told the Boston Sunday Herald.

Angiulo, 70, who lived in Nahant, is serving a 45 year prison term at the Leavenworth, Kan., federal penitentiary.

He was convicted on a dozen charges of racketeering, loansharking, illegal gambling and obstruction of justice. The trial took eight months to complete.

The jury of eight women and four men deliberated for more than 29 hours over seven days before convicting Angiulo, his brothers, Donato, 66, and Francesco, 68, and Samuel Granito, 82, on charges of being part of Boston's criminal underworld.

Another Angiulo brother, Michele, 62, was convicted of operating an illegal numbers business, but was acquitted on racketeering charges.

Ilario Zannino was convicted separately in 1987 on charges of gambling and loansharking.

Their attorneys will argue the appeals before the U.S. Court of Appeals, 1st Circuit.

The prosecution contended in the trial that Angiulo headed the Boston branch of La Cosa Nostra under the dominion of New England underworld boss Raymond L.S. Patriarca of Providence.

During the later days of the trial, Judge David S. Nelson dismissed one juror who said he believed he was being followed. He dismissed a second juror after he reported that a neighbor offered her a bribe. The neighbor was convicted later on a charge of jury tampering.

Four other jurors said they had heard about the alleged bribe offer from news accounts, but continued on the jury after the judge ruled that they were impartial.

The prosecution did not comment on the contentions of the defense attorneys. However, the Justice Department filed a brief with the court saying jurors were chosen after telling the court they could be impartial and reach a verdict based solely on the evidence in court.

Much of the testimony in both trials involved FBI recordings of conversations in Angiulo's bugged Boston headquarters or at a poker game.

Sedition trial goes to jury

SPRINGFIELD (AP) — After 10 months of testimony and arguments, the trial of three accused revolutionaries on sedition charges is expected to go to the jury in U.S. District Court this week.

Judge William G. Young has scheduled his instructions to the jury on Monday. He plans to sequester the panel during their deliberations.

On trial are Raymond Luc Levasseur, 43, who is acting as his own attorney; his wife, Patricia Helen Gros Levasseur, 40, and Richard C. Williams, 41, accused of racketeering, racketeering conspiracy and sedition conspiracy.

They are charged with being part of the Sam Melville-Jonathan Jackson unit, involved in numerous bank robberies, bombings and burglaries in New England and New York from 1976 and 1984.

One bombing in the lobby of the Suffolk County Courthouse in Boston injured 22 people, including Edmund Narine, 51, of Brockton, whose left leg had to be amputated.

The jury had the weekend off before digging into their task. The trial began in January and nearly 200 witnesses have been brought before jurors since then. There are more than 1,700 exhibits.

Testimony has included technical data by experts on explosives and about an elaborate code that prosecutors allege the defendants used in notebooks about their activities.

Most of last week was taken up by closing arguments by prosecutors, Levasseur and the defense lawyers.

Defense attorneys questioned the reliability of some evidence. They also sought to show there were other groups at the time the defendants allegedly were active.

Levasseur and Williams are currently under 45-year prison terms on convictions in the robberies and bombings.

Some of the fears had to do with family alienation and guilt.

"We are all born into a homophobic society. I make the assumption that we are all homophobic until we deal with it," Genasci said.

She presented a hompophobia socialization chart that identified certain aspects of culture, institutions, and the individual which all perpetuate homophobia.

She said silence and invisibility leading to misunderstanding and ignorance can result in discrimination against homosexuals.

"By engaging in education, dialogue and taking action, we can help to break out of this circle," Genasci said.

Genasci has a son who came out to her seven years ago at age 23.

"We were most unprepared for the knowledge," she said. "We immediately went on the 'guilt trip.' It's almost impossible to do otherwise because of socialization.".

Genasci said she and her husband realized they were uninformed and immediately borrowed books from the library and delved into the lives of their son's partner and friends.

"Our greatest joy is being able to be helpful to the sexual minority communities to change attitudes," Genasci said.

tion to the FBI.

"I would be somewhat surprised if there were many problems," Quinlan said. "A lot of people have their minds on the budget issues and so much of the activism is directed at that."

Robert H. Gardner, a regional recruiter from the FBI, said he does not think his information session on the FBI will create any controversy, despite the demonstrations against CIA recruitment.

"We are not in the same category. We don't draw the same tensions," Gardner said.

However, Undergraduate Student Senator Owen Broadhurst (Field) said the FBI does not give people the full story about their organization.

"There is institutionalized sexism and racism which is not being mentioned at these information sessions," Broadhurst said. "I find these misperceptions very wrong and objectionable." Broadhurst said it is "hard for the FBI to invoke the same response" as the CIA, but added that the FBI's presence on campus should be questioned.

"I believe the FBI is a dangerous organization and that alone should disqualify them from recruiting on campus," he said.

Graduate student John Langford said, "I wish UMass would take a neutral point of view [in FBI recruiting]. If seniors are hired by the FBI then the University is participating in policies of the FBI, regardless whether they agree with them."

But Clark Edwards, a Placement Services coordinator at the Career Center, said the University has an open policy that provides access to organizations which have shown interest in coming to the University.

"We attempt to provide information that organizations request based upon our open policy," Edwards said.

William Weitzer, assistant to the Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs, said people have the right to protest organizations that recruit on campus if they have looked at the issue closely.

"If people want to protest, they have every right not to support the FBI," Weitzer said. "But people object to the CIA for very different reasons than they object to the FBI. People need to examine these reasons in a responsible manner."

Why your first computer should be a word processor.

Perhaps you've heard of the widely respected Smith Corona Theory of Economic Perspicacity. Put simply, it states: Don't waste your money on something you don't need.
What you don't need, in this case, is an expensive, bulky computer which might take you months just to figure out.
What you do need is something that's far better suited to the letters, reports, spreadsheets and less than computer-sized budgets that most people face—the compact, portable Smith Corona PWP 2000 Personal Word Processor.
If you can use a typewriter, you can use the PWP 2000. With its built-in disk drive and 100,000 character DataDisk capacity, it can make short work of the longest projects.
The PWP 2000 even boasts a list of features that would make a computer's display turn green with envy—a Spell-Right® 50,000 word Electronic Dictionary, AutoSpell®, WordEraser®, Address Merge®, our optional CoronaCalc™ Spreadsheet program, plus lots more.
All of which will make buying your first computer the last thing you need to think about.

EDITORIAL/OPINION

Crossing lines for cash

It is now 93 days into the NYNEX strike, and the company and its two subsidiaries, New England and New York Telephone are now negotiating with mediators and unions to settle the next three-year contract.

It has been a long and bitter struggle for both sides. Besides the stalemate in the talks, the unions are fighting for their members to keep their unemployment payments. The payments that the strikers received before Oct. 1st they are allowed to keep, but the Department of Employment Training has appealed the payments after Oct. 1st.

Gayle Long

This was ruled upon, and the workers have to return all monies received after that date. So, besides attempting to get their people back to work, they have to try and keep them out of the poorhouse.

On the other side of the fence, the company must continue to service its customers. Customer service is a must in the phone company. The company has mobilized its management, people that are mostly accustomed to attending meetings and writing reports. These men and women are now operators, repairmen, installers, and coin collectors. They had to learn these jobs quickly to keep the company going.

Yet, simply mobilizing the small number of management people was not enough. The company also called back retired management personnel. These people are by no means aching for money, and their pension takes care of them in their golden years.

However, some claimed that they needed the money. I have a feeling that it was not the money per say, but the amount of money offered to them. The money itself could probably draw anyone out of retirement, blocking the real issue of crossing a picket line.

Last week, I noticed an advertisement announcing that New England Telephone was hiring operators. They offered good wages and a flexible, part-time schedule. Quick, easy money and a schedule that the person sets themself. I am sure it looks very appetizing, especially to college students who love both.

Money is a precious commodity here at school, and a flexible schedule job is hard to come by. But the real issue here is not how badly a person needs money as it is why a person would cross a picket line. Line-crossers are called SCABS, and no matter what the excuse, a scab is a scab. They show a lack of dignity to themselves, are used by a company, and ignore the fact that they are taking the money that is the livelihood of another.

The scabs are involved in a fight that does not concern them, and by working for the company during a strike, they are undermining the rights of the organized worker.

Organized labor is a right and a necessity. Without unions, workers would again be treated with disrespect, worked harshly without fair pay, and oppression by big business would again run rampant. I am not saying that labor unions are sent from God and are infallible, but I believe that they are needed to protect the physical and mental well-being of the worker. The scab tactics, working for a closed shop company during a strike, shows total lack of respect for labor.

Scabs get involved in a fight they have no need to be in, and by taking the work and money of organized labor, they show they would rather be taking someone else's money than making their own.

Ignorant of Argentina's history

Your reporter's ignorance of Argentine history is appalling ("Focus," Nov. 1). To paint Eva Peron as a modern-day Robin Hood who stole from the rich to give to the poor is to perpetuate a dangerous and insidious image of the woman who looted her country to promote a most aggressive variety of fascism.

During the six years that Jaun Peron ruled Argentina, he and Evita plundered the country's resources for their personal gain. The pair drained Argentina's gold reserves, shut down the national free press, and imprisoned, tortured and exiled any who dared oppose them.

Furthermore, the Perons actively encouraged anti-Semitism. "Be a patriot and beat a Jew," was a slogan of the more radical extreme of the descamisado movement.

Finally, the rampant xenophobia that was a tenet of Peronism has lead directly to many of the political and economic woes that Argentinians face today.

It's dismaying to see the Collegian accept the Andrew Lloyd-Weber myth of Peronism without bothering to check the historical record. Dismaying, but given the recent incidents involving the paper, not at all surprising.

Two worlds becoming one

This Wednesday, Nov. 8 at 6 p.m. the equivalent of East meeting West will occur here in downtown Amherst.

Reagan and Gorby will be in Washington and Russia — so it won't be a political event.

Alise Harfield

This Wednesday at a local restaurant complete with full bar, two worlds will collide head-on in a pre-planned event.

Since aliens usually don't tell us when they'll fall on the Earth, it won't be a meeting of the supernatural.

In two short days, the eve before a major exam of mine, seven strangers will sit down to a dinner and try to talk over a nightly poultry special.

In short, my parents are meeting the parents of the person I've been dating for almost a year.

And it was NOT my idea.

If I had it my way (which I never do), I'd postpone this calamity of "protocol" 'til the freezing of hell. Unfortunately for me there's the global warming effect, ay?

So why am I worried? I guess a lot of people who've been dating for more than a night go through this. I've polled some friends and am saving the results for the end of the column — it's my prerogative.

Nice to know something still is.

Don't get me wrong. I'm not embarrassed about my family in the least! It's just that fossiliferous feeling (translated: "my parents must be fossils for doing this") that starts around age 13 when your friends get trapped in the living room with one or worse, both of your 'rents and hear all about your other life:

- "She ate baby food well into her fourth year!"
- "Oh, she loved meeting relatives in her underwear!"
- "She's at lisping therapy. Did you think she went to the movies today?"

My friend and I get along fairly well, so the logical conclusion a sane person would draw to calm herself down would be: the stock from which we came can't be that different.

In fact, everyone going to this meeting has drawn that obvious conclusion already. They're all excited at the prospect of meeting new people and, of course, eating new foodstuffs.

I'm just wondering how they can be so nonchalant. Don't they realize, as I and my small circle of polled friends do (the results are on their way, stop worrying) that such a meeting of people with the only thing in common being the birth of myself and my friend some two decades ago is not enough to talk about for two plus hours? Even if the poultry is decent?

Is it just me? I have documented proof from the following folks that it isn't.

Question: You and X have been dating now for X months, huh? Do you think a meeting of your parents will happen, oh, sometime soon? Answers:

- "Ha ha ha ha ha. Oh, that's a good one. ha ha ha!"
- "They don't even know about us."
- "Mine hate long rides. And strangers."

And my favorite, from my best friend since 6th grade who I can always count on to make me feel better,

- "What are you, nuts?"

At least I know I'm not alone. Not yet, anyway.

Does anyone have a flu they'd like to share?

Don't just dial . . . someone may not have the answers

The ongoing NYNEX operators' strike has finally hit me. It's made me more aware of how ignorant I am of our local government, and has made me ask some questions about our federal system.

This morning I wanted to call the Registry of Motor Vehicles. But a few days ago I had waited for over a minute (calculate the wasted time in dollars per second) for a NYNEX operator to assist me — so today I decided to show some initiative by using my neglected phone book to look up the RMV.

The problem was where to look.

The yellow pages? No, it wouldn't be there.

How about looking under Registry of Motor Vehicles? Shucks, not there either.

All too quickly, I gave in and dialed 411.

After two rings, an operator answered.

"Northampton. Registry of Motor Vehicles, please," I asked.

Then, to satisfy my curiosity, I continued slightly embarrassed, "What's that listed under, anyway?"

"Massachusetts, Commonwealth of."

Food for thought. What is the RMV? Is it a free floating entity? No, it's a governmental agency? What other agencies happen to be listed under Massachusetts, Commonwealth of — Environmental Law Enforcement, Mental Health Department, Social Service Department, Military Department. What do these agencies do on the local level? What are they supposed to be doing?

I don't know, do you?

On the national scene, it's easier to see what's happening. Last week, Time magazine's cover story was headlined "Is Government Dead?" But, after reading the story, it's painfully evident that the U.S. government is very much alive — for a select few in our society — while it may as well be dead as far as the majority of the population is concerned.

Nathan Krystall

Time's story highlighted how the government is eager to serve special interest groups, like big business, while ignoring people's basic needs, such as education and affordable housing.

An interesting statistic was quoted — one of those Stealth bombers, which isn't so stealthy, costs $530 million. Another statistic — UMass' annual operating budget, for which we are fighting tooth and nail, is $160 million.

Why is the Bush administration so reluctant to concertedly cut defense spending, anyway? Are they afraid that our country's economic infrastructure, otherwise known as the military-industrial complex, will fall apart?

Why can't Bush keep up with Gorbachev's arms reductions proposals? Why has Bush decided to hold his first summit with Gorbachev on a warship? Are we at war? Or does some Bush advisor, remembering Yalta, want to present us with that image?

Does it ever occur to self-interested politicians that young people in the United States, the Soviet Union and everywhere else, if allowed real freedom of choice, would choose to develop their understanding of the world they live in, and not concentrate its destruction?

There can be no doubt that the governments of Europe, the Soviet Union and the United States will unite for their economic survival. But what will that mean for the already inequitable relationship between South and North: between those nations in Africa, Asia and South America that are struggling to become self-sufficient again, and those that "developed" through exploiting what they like to refer to as the Third World?

A series of questions flood my mind. Questions we should ask every day. Questions for which we must seek and demand answers to. It's too easy to just dial, while assuming that there's somebody on the other end of the line who's working for us.

Thanks, NYNEX operators, for helping me to ask some questions.

ARTS & LIVING

N'Dour's songs amaze all

By SAAD HOPKINS
Collegian Staff

Youssou N'Dour
Fine Arts Center
Friday, Nov. 3

I've always been impressed by people who are paid to stand in front of drunk people and sing. Most musicians I know with outstanding voices consider it very impersonal to sing in front of a huge audience. But that's not the case with Youssou N'Dour. He is more than delighted to share his wonderful gift with you, and he doesn't care if you're drunk. His voice is one of the most impressive I've ever heard. Wolof, I've discovered, is one of the most beautiful languages known to the human ear, and glows when sung.

REVIEW

N'Dour's backup band, Les Supers Etoiles de Dakar, are tight, fast, and are capable of playing anything put in front of them. When you put these two together, you have a mix that is more powerful than anything of it's type.

The song that caught my undivided attention was "Shakin' The Tree," which on album doesn't generate enough enthusiasm to make it worth the hype. I think they put it out as a single because Peter Gabriel sings back-up on it, and N'Dour could make music news faster if Gabriel's name was plastered on the song. Though on stage without the Gabe, the song is a traditional roots piece, very ethnic Senegalese, instead of commercialized for FM airplay. The beats are more complex and the sound is big.

"Macoy" and "Old Tuscon" were others on the play list that were intense and fed into the kind of superior musical vision that is expected of musicians like these. He sounds so much better live than he does on vinyl, that it's going to be difficult to listen to the LP without referring to the sound he harbors on stage.

I could go on and on about what I heard and saw Friday night, but that would bore you, and I would start to repeat myself. However it can be said that Youssou N'Dour is something to be experienced. There is so much within the music that it's hard to pinpoint why it has the impact it does. Who cares? The point is that the the pan-cultural rhythms of the "mbalax" works.

Tower is two movie houses in one

By DIANE HICKS
Collegian Correspondent

"We are trying not to be just another theater in a box," explained Michael Dobbs. Dobbs has managed the Tower Theaters since their opening last May. Located at the Village Commons in South Hadley, the theaters fit in perfectly with the modern development, a face lift that has brought the center to look a lot like Williamstown. Across from Mount Holyoke College, where route 116 meets route 47, the Village Commons stand housing, clothing boutiques, quaint cafe's and now the Tower Theaters. The theaters seem necessary to make this tiny community complete, and the Tower Theaters are unique enough to fit the mold.

Standing atop the complex, you may ascend the spiraling stairway, or take the elevator to the Tower Theaters, which could easily be considered comfortably plush in today's world of shopping mall cinemas.

Dobbs said, "We're trying to so things that no one else is doing." "The concept," he added "is to attract a broad audience." This is the reasoning behind their showing a traditional movie alongside a more artistic one. For instance, they often show foreign films, but always have the choice of a movie you could find at the mall. In addition to foreign films, they dabble in classics, and host film festivals. Coming soon in December is an American International Pictures Festival with films from the 50s, such as Dragstrip Girl and Invasion of the Saucermen. This will be followed in February with a retrospective animation festival. Dobbs would like to expose both types of movie viewers to the alternative.

Dobbs manages the Tower Theaters in conjunction with John Morrison and Richard Pini, who own the Pleasant Street Theater in Northampton. Dobbs said that the two theaters differ with regard to "product blend," meaning that the Tower Theaters show the kind of movies that could be found at Pleasant Street, however the Tower Theaters essentially offer more to a broad audience.

Another way Dobbs has employed his ideas for diversification is by bringing musicals and recorded theater, such as the work Oklahoma, and many others, every Wednesday afternoon at 1:30 p.m. It offers a different option on rainy afternoons.

Students should also welcome the return of the Rocky Horror Picture Show. Tower offers the only viewing of this high energy film in the Valley. The showing of Rocky Horror started Halloween weekend, and will continue every Friday and Saturday night.

The Tower Theaters fit in perfectly in modernized South Hadley. The ideas are fresh, offering something for everyone. UMass students should remember that the often overlooked town is only a bus ride away and has something new and different to offer.

Gabrielle gets jail on One Life to Live

By BETH STOLLER
Collegian Correspondent

ONE LIFE TO LIVE — Tired of the same old scene in Llanview, PA, Clint asked Viki to move the family to Arizona. Tina came back to testify in Gabrielle's trial, but screwed things up when she couldn't tell the court why Gabrielle was blackmailing her. Max still doesn't know who he really loves, poor prison inmate Gabrielle, or schizophrenic Megan. Boy, that Max sure can pick 'em. But here's what we've all been waiting for. The verdict is in. Gabrielle Medina is ... (drum roll please) guilty! Sentenced to ten years in the big house making licence plates. Does that mean good-bye for Gabrielle (i.e. is her contract expired?), or will she get out on good behavior? Better yet, she'll probably escape.

SOAP BUBBLES

DAYS OF OUR LIVES — A lot of people got hurt this week. When Rebecca hurt her leg, Shane helped her out. Emilio was knifed by one of the Stingrays and Jennifer helped him out. Steve got his eye poked out in a fight over the key and refused Marina's help. Now that Steve is eyeless again, he has to wear his patch. Yes, that's right kids, Patch is back! Eve set April and Mike up for a night of romance on the boat. As she watched the two consummate from the shore, she got attacked. Nick came to her rescue but was beaten up and is currently unconscious. Nick kept his sickness from April. Cal and Kim confessed their deep "like" for each other. Faith was dancing with Scott when Colin came in on them. Colin confessed to Faith that he and Scott used to be friends until Scott slept with his wife. It's a shame these petty quibbles ruin friendships.

GENERAL HOSPITAL — Frisco and Felicia pawed each other all week while Colton wallowed in his misery. Colton decked Decker after he found the arcade photos. Lucy and Alan waited for the autopsy results hoping the doctor wouldn't find the heart pendant with Lucy's name on it lodged in Victor's throat. After Victor's funeral, Anna kept having flashbacks about her wonderful life with Duke. Emil told Olivia about the diamonds. Decker taunted Jimmy with the cameo. Just as Anna thinks she has confronted her memories and is ready to go on with her life, she sees Duke at the airport.

Amateur Pirates is pleasant

By LINDA SPIERS
Collegian Correspondent

Any serious-minded soul in search of art would probably not enjoy the Valley Light Opera's performance of The Pirates of Penzance, but as such purists are rather irritating, I've decided to ignore them and write this review for those in search of a terrific evening of entertainment.

THEATER

That's what you'll get — a great show, rather than a piece of "thee-a-tur." This amateur production gets professional marks for costumes, sets, choreography, orchestra and sheer effort. It's also funny in a slapstick kind of way, and if none of the singers will go on to shake the foundations of the Met, the voices were pleasant enough.

Being English, I became rather nervous when I realized the Valley Light Opera had decided to go for English accents and historical accuracy. On the whole, they managed very well, but the accent did have one unfortunate side effect, in that it seemed to encourage the cast and director to play the piece on purely cardboard character lines, and while Gilbert & Sullivan are comic writers, a little more characterization would not have gone amiss.

I particularly enjoyed Thom Griffin as the Pirate King, his swaggering and comic timing were excellent. The audience also got a big kick out of Pere Pittard as Major-General Stanley, which I'm afraid I didn't fully share, as he reminded me strongly of Walt Disney cartoons. Melissa Munn as Mable and Todd Raver as Frederic were unfortunately rather stilted and less sympathetic than they could have been, but I suggest that this was the director's error rather than theirs. They both also could have been a little louder.

The show was wonderfully colorful and vigorous, as an enormous cast moved surely around a tiny stage. Visually we were presented with striking splashes of color, and the Major-General's daughters in their pastel dresses worked to particularly good effort. Unfortunately the too-heavy makeup worn by almost everyone on the stage, particularly the pirates who looked like mannequins, tended to distract from the overall splendor.

On the whole, the show was gallant effort and well worth its ticket money. You can see Pirates again next weekend at Amherst High School.

Creek rises at Katina's

Max Creek
Katina's
Thursday, Nov. 2

If you've ever seen Max Creek before, don't read this review, because you already know what it's going to say.

Max Creek played Katina's last Thursday, and the results were the usual exhaustive dance party. The tie-dyed masses, many of whom were noticeably chemically altered (some more noticeable than others), bopped and sweated on the overcrowded dance floor and surrounding areas.

The Creek were their usual competent selves. Sprinkling in their originals among favorites from the Grateful Dead, Little Feat, Creedence Clearwater Revival and other dinosaur bands, they kept the throng moving all evening. Their version of the Joe Cocker classic, "Feelin' Alright," simply cooked. And the crowd was thrown into rapture as they moved into "Down On the Corner," the CCR mega-hit. In all fairness, with the type of people who go to Creek shows, the band could've played "Mary Had a Little Lamb" and the crowd would have loved it. Nobody stopped dancing when the band stopped for their frequent between-song conferences. People were in a frenzy on the long, wandering guitar solos.

But the Creek did put on a great show. "Brand New Mercury," "Up on Cripple Creek" and "Good Lovin" were all great bar room rockers that had all running, leaping and twisting in ecstasy. And their cover of the Dead's "Birdsong" was just as good as the original.

Steam poured off of people's dripping bodies as they left Katina's. Many mentioned how sore they would be the next day from too much dancing. Eat your heart out, Jane Fonda.

Leahy's field goal caps off Jets comeback, 27-26

FOXBORO (AP) – New England quarterback Marc Wilson made an amazing comeback. But he couldn't beat Ken O'Brien's.

O'Brien completed four consecutive passes covering 72 yards in the last 63 seconds to set up Pat Leahy's 23-yard field goal on the final play as the New York Jets broke a five-game losing streak yesterday with a 27-26 victory over the Patriots.

The Jets (2-7) had scored just one offensive touchdown in their previous five games. New England (3-6) suffered its second one-point loss of the year in which Greg Davis missed an extra point.

O'Brien also threw two touchdown passes after going five games without one.

"When Kenny's got time, he can get the job done," New York coach Joe Walton said. O'Brien was sacked just twice after being sacked nine times a week earlier.

Until yesterday, Wilson had gone almost two years without throwing a regular-season pass of any kind.

But he replaced an injured Steve Grogan three minutes into the third period and led a fourth-quarter rally that turned a 24-12 deficit into a 26-24 lead on touchdown passes of 65 yards to Cedric Jones and 11 to Hart Lee Dykes with 1:03 remaining.

"I felt pretty good out there," Wilson said. "It's kind of like riding a bike. Once you get out there, it all comes back to you."

Wilson completed 12 of 18 passes for 177 yards in his first action at quarterback since Dec. 27, 1987 with the Los Angeles Raiders. O'Brien completed 22 of 29 for a season-high 386 yards and no interceptions.

YOUR DAILY HOROSCOPE
By JEANNE DIXON

HAPPY BIRTHDAY! IN THE NEXT YEAR OF YOUR LIFE: Your patience and reputation will be challenged early in the new year. Use diplomacy to win obstinate people over to your side. Tending to paperwork promptly will save you legal fees. In February, size a golden opportunity to land a lucrative contract. Forging new business alliances will lead to greater wealth. Re-evaluate your image. Positive thinking will help you cement a meaningful relationship in early fall. Offer assistance to newcomers.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You could find yourself tied to your desk today. Teamwork helps boost profits. Suggest compromises. Reconciliations are possible. Make the first move: let bygones be bygones.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): Do some serious thinking about your finances. Find ways to cut back on spending. Running up creadit card bills is a big mistake. A close relative shares terrific news. Be enthusiastic.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): No matter how goal-oriented you are, delays could arise. Working on your own proves highly productive as well as therapeutic. Creative ideas will abound late in the day; jot them down.

CANCER (Juen 21-July 22): Your mate or partner may feel too restricted. Offer logical arguments, not emotional pleas. Others are looking to your for leadership. Romance provides a delightful challenge.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22): Show special consideration for co-workers who return favors quickly. A rumor may be only half right. A hobby or avocation could lead to a second income. A platonic relationship testifies. You are surprised.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22): A legacy or windfall cold be part of the picture. Heed the advice of an accountant or lawyer. You are beginning to develop a more rewarding approach to your work. Contact influential friends.

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 22): Obtain all available information before making an important business decision. Ask tough questions; others will respect your thoroughness. Love ones gain strength from your optimistic manner.

SCROPIO (Oct. 23-Nov. 21): Paying attention to a younger person's suggestions could save you time and money. Resume contact with someone you once meant a great deal to you. Past mistakes can be quietly corrected.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21): A face-to-face encounter is the best way to resolve a ticklish problem. Expand your roster of friends. Avoid office politics. Discuss a raise or promotion only with an authority figure.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19): You could be asked to play matchmaker today. Doing so can be fun or embarrassing, depending on your attitude. Guard your reputation by admitting a mistake. Savor a romantic triumph.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18): The calmer you appear, the more influence you will have. Implement business plans only after doing the ground at home. Clear up any misunderstandings. Get several estimates if making home repairs.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20): You may have glossed over relationship problems for too long. Discuss the situation candidly. Money comes from new sources. Certain fees will be waived. Refuse to take on other people's projects.

Safety pit opens at Gymnastics Center

By JIM CLARK
Collegian Staff

In the competitive world of college athletics, coaches will do whatever they can to get the slightest edge for their teams. Advancements in technology allow for better training and, in the long run, better teams.

With this in mind, the University of Massachusetts gymnastics program has built itself a safety pit, one that will not only enhance the performances of the men's and women's teams, but also cut down on potential injuries.

"No other facility enhancement that you can have, can make this big a difference in any sport," said UMass men's gymnastics coach Roy Johnson. "In a sport like basketball, you build a court, and that's really it. There's not much else you can do."

But Johnson saw the building of a safety pit at the Boyden Gymnastics Center as something that would be a tremendous benefit to the already-strong men's and women's teams.

"When I was at the University of Nebraska for the national championships in 1980, I saw the state-of-the-art pit they have there," Johnson said. "Every coach said, 'we've got to have one.'"

Some coaches would have left it at that, but Johnson wanted badly to bring something like that to UMass.

The road officially started in 1984, when some initial changes to the Gymnastics Center got the idea rolling to build the pit.

"From then right through now, we started to raise funds," Johnson said, noting that his team had sold sweatshirts and held raffles at football games, all in hopes of raising the $35,000 necessary for the project.

When it became evident last year that the whole thing could soon be realized, the original design concept was created by Johnson and women's coach Alfie Mitchell. With the help of a team of architects, the plans were drawn up and construction began in August.

Over the last three months, under the supervision of contractor Norm Vexler, five carpenters built the deck and the pit, and the two teams did the finishing work.

"Carl Russ, one of our seniors, built the entire metal railing," Johnson said. "It's nice to have someone on the team with that kind of skill."

Friday afternoon, the dedication was made with current team members John Eggers and Michelle Antonelli cutting the ribbon to officially open the pit.

Members of the men's and women's teams then performed various somersaults, vaults and dismounts off the apparatus to demonstrate the pit.

Built eight feet above the existing floor is a 120-foot long deck, which extends another 44 feet to form an L-shape. At the angle in the deck is the 14-by-19 pit itself, which is 8 feet in depth and has an overall area of 2,500 cubic feet.

It is filled to the top with cubes of blue foam, which whole would cover 25,000 board feet. The cubes are broken up into over 7,000 six-foot cubes and another 2,000-plus pieces of 6-by-12 inch by 6-foot blocks.

At the bottom of the pit is a solid piece of foam, which prevents any possibility of an athlete sinking all the way to the bottom and hitting a hard floor.

The foam forms a cushion which, when landed on, absorbs any shock and makes it virtually impossible for an athlete to be injured. The toughest part, in fact, is trying to crawl out of an 8-foot pool of foam rubber without drowning.

As the foam becomes used more and more, it will get rounded off, reducing the amount of air space between pieces and thus, reducing the overall cushion.

"We'll have to replace some of them maybe every couple of years," Johnson said. "We probably wouldn't have to replace the whole thing."

On one side of the pit is a long runway, where gymnasts can practice somersaults and tumbles and land safely in a blanket of foam. The vaulting horse and balance beam are located on the side of the runway, allowing to safely practice dismounts.

On the other side of the pit is the high bar, where gymnasts can attempt dangerous dismounts without fear of landing on their heads. The still rings hang overhead.

According to the United States Gymnastics Federation's safety manual, this is the best of the various methods used to decrease the risk of injury during practice of routines. In the past, thick foam mats or nets filled with loosely-packed foam pieces were used to cushion a fall.

But the problem with those, according to the manual, was that they were located above ground, at a point higher than the take-off point. Whereas, it says, "the gymnast needs all the air time possible to perform a skill, and this means the fall as well as the rise," it became necessary to develop a "pit" in the true sense of the word.

The pit can be used to practice every gymnastics event except the pommel horse (men's), which usually requires a basic feet-first landing from low to the ground. No complex flips or twists are performed when dismounting from the horse.

Even where less-dangerous things are being done, the pit helps to minimize the amount of stress on the legs. Where simple flips and tumbles are usually performed on thin mats, the legs can take a pounding during a practice session. The pit will allow the athlete to avert the stress of the legs and practice repititions longer and more effectively.

The knowledge of a soft cushion also takes the fear of injury out of the gymnast's mind and allows for greater concentration on proper mechanics.

On the other side of the high bar is an 8-by-16 foot, 3-inch deep resipit, similarly to one used by high jumpers and pole vaulters in track and field.

"With that you can practice first landing in the foam, and then turn around and get the feel of landing on a harder surface before going out on the actual floor," Johnson said.

One caution is that gymnasts will get too careless when practicing in the foam, and won't be able to make the necessary changes when shifting to the regular apparatus.

"There will be adjustments that we have to make," Johnson said. "Hopefully coaches will keep an eye on that when they practice their skills on the floor."

The UMass teams have only been using the new pit for about two weeks, according to Johnson, but feels that in the long run it will be a big boost.

"This is probably the best men's and women's collegiate facility in New England now," Johnson said. "There are still some bugs to be worked out, though."

That became evident as Dave DiNucci practiced on the high bar. As he was preparing to do a dismount, the plywood base of the high bar, which had yet to be secured to the deck by bolts, slid and caused the bar to collapse.

DiNucci took an awkward tumble, and those who had gathered for the ceremonies and were witnessing the demonstration felt their hearts jumps into their throats.

On a regular floor, it's anyone's guess what could have happened. But with the pit, DiNucci landed safely in the foam.

Jumping up, DiNucci exclaimed, "Now that is the perfect demo of a safety pit."

One potential injury prevented already. The safety pit had indeed done its job.

3 smart ways to help pay for college.

Here's how the Army Reserve Alternate Training Program can help you pay for college.

THE MONTGOMERY GI BILL

If qualified, the Montgomery GI Bill can provide you with up to $5,040 for current college expenses.

STUDENT LOAN REPAYMENT

If you obtain a qualifying student loan, you can get it paid off at the rate of 15% per year or $500, whichever is greater—up to a maximum of $10,000. Selecting certain specialty training can increase the maximum to $20,000.

PART-TIME INCOME

And here's how you can make even more part-time money while in college. Take Basic Training one summer. The next summer, complete skill training at an Army school. You'll earn over $1,250 for Basic and even more for skill training. Then you'll train with your Army Reserve unit near college, usually one weekend a month plus two weeks a year. You'll earn over $85 a weekend to start.

This could be the smartest way to get the money you need for college.

Think about it. Then think about us. Then call us today:

■ Gabrielli field goal lifts Minutemen

"He pushed me a little bit," Caparotti said, "but he was faster than me, too."

On the ensuing kickoff, Ron Blauvelt grabbed it at the 9-yard line and headed up the right side. Hitting a wall of players around the 20, Blauvelt bounced off, reversed his field and rambled all the way to the UMass 45.

A 13-yard strike from quarterback Gary Wilkos to split end Chip Mitchell brought it into Richmond territory at the 39. Two plays later, Wilkos (100 yards rushing and a touchdown) blew through a wide-open hole for a 20-yard QB draw to the 15.

Three runs set up a fourth-and-one from the 6, and there was little doubt what UMass coach Jim Reid would do. In came Gabrielli to split the goal posts for the winner.

Richmond failed to get a first down on its final possession, sealing UMass' second straight win to even its record at 4-4-1 overall and 2-4 in the conference.

Surely UMass would have preferred to have had a little bit easier a time with the Spiders, Yankee Conference doormats. But at this point in the season, playing with a patchwork team, it's hard for the Minutemen to complain about any kind of 'W.'

"Just from the UMass point of view, I thought it was a real sloppy game," Reid said. "The defense played great. We put them in the worst possible position on the field, which is nice because we've been suspect on that side of the ball."

Indeed the defense rose to the challenge. Horner (20 of 40, 245 yards and two touchdowns) had a fine day hooking up with Hargrove and others, but he was picked off twice and sacked four times.

The Minutemen also limited the Spiders to just 81 yards on the ground, 71 of which came from tailback Eric Hopkins. This is particularly encouraging given the problems that UMass has had at times this year stopping the run.

"Joe Cullen really tied up the inside game," Reid said. "And Matt Tulley and Mario Perry played well."

Cullen, from his nose guard spot, had seven tackles including a pair for losses that were immediately followed by Mark Gastineau-like wild dances in the backfield. Tulley had a pair of sacks and a tackle for a loss while Perry had one of each. In all UMass had eight tackles for losses.

Linebacker George Karelas, one of the YC's leading tacklers, continued to dominate with 16 take-downs, while freshman Bobby Burke, getting his first career start, chipped in 11.

The defenses were dominant in the early going, leading to a scoreless first quarter. Courter missed his first chance on the opening drive, a 46-yarder that didn't even reach the end line.

UMass finally broke the ice in the second, set up by — what else, but the defense. Horner dropped back and looked for flanker Curtis Jefferson, but safety Pat Doran stepped in front of the tipped toss and returned it to the Spider 22.

Four plays later, Wilkos booted around the right side and scored from 10 yards out to put the Minutemen up, 7-0.

Richmond tied it just before the half behind the arm of Horner, who worked a good two-minute drill that ended on a 15-yard TD pass to Hargrove with 18 ticks left in the half.

"We weren't in the prevent defense," Reid said. "We weren't in it all day."

Courter's second miss (37 yards) midway through the third quarter set the Minutemen off and running on an 80-yard drive. Wilkos (11-of-18, 105 yards) had key hook-ups with Blauvelt (22 yards) and Mitchell (36), the last of which made it first-and-goal from the 1. Two plays later, tailback Steve Olson (74 yards on 15 carries) dove over the top to make it 14-7.

which virtually put the game out of reach at 3-0, with junior Lisa Berardinelli chasing Temple's Jane Catanzaro all over the field.

Catanzaro, the All-American forward who had 32 goals coming into the game, was contained by the Minutewomen for the second time this season.

UMass had shut out Catanzaro earlier in the year at Totman Field. Saturday, UMass sweeper Kerri Fagan and Berardinelli frustrated Catanzaro to the point where she was given a green-card warning by the officials in the closing minutes of the first half.

"Lisa and Kerri really had to do it all to stop Jane from making anything happen," Hioxon said. "Lisa played tough, mentally strong and didn't give Jane much at all."

Catanzaro was limited to one assist, which she picked up with 8:43 left in the game when she hit junior Stacey Barndt inches in front of the net during a melee in which Scott made two saves. However, it was too little, too late.

Hixon had taken a gamble by leaving Temple's left wing open, so defender Carol Smith could come back to help out. The gamble paid off, with Smith clogging up the middle while Berardinelli and Fagan denied Catanzaro the ball.

"[Berardinelli] made [Catanzaro] constantly deflect the ball, which is what we wanted. And Kerri was there to pick up the garbage," Hixon said.

■ volleyball slumps at Harvard tourney

"Julieta played great, and so did Nancy Sullivan," Ford said.

Sullivan continued her role as leader on the team, knocking in key hits against Harvard, making it an actual contest.

Yesterday, UMass came into the playoff round seeded last in the seven-team field. The Minutewomen faced Boston College, and played well despite losing, 3-1.

"We played well in the first game, and then in the second we played really well," Ford said. "In the third game, we made too many errors. We deserved to lose. We blew it."

Ford said of the errors, "It's the story of our season."

Despite the season and despite their record, the Minutewomen are "still having fun," said Ford. Although at times in the Brown game there were obvious long faces, which are probably the result of what has been a very long season.

UMass has two games remaining on its schedule, and then the team will continue to work out throughout the winter and spring.

"We need a good recruiting season. We need a lot of bodies," Ford said.
